Our bill amends title V of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 to authorize an important Federal resource—the Community Relations Service—to assist local communities in coping with large influxes of Central Americans applying for asylum.

As many of my colleagues are aware, south Florida is bracing for yet another wave of aliens applying for asylum. In the last 6 months, these communities have absorbed an estimated 20,000 aliens primarily from Central America.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service has projected an influx of 100,000 aliens from Nicaragua alone over the next several months.

On January 31 of this year, a Federal judge ruled that applicants for asylum will be permitted to travel beyond their point of entry until February 20. This decision effectively creates a 3-week invitation for Central Americans fleeing their country to settle in their community of preference.

That unfairly impacts the few communities which are already struggling to absorb large number of refugees.

Florida knows about this problem firsthand. Most recently, Florida is experiencing increases in admissions of Cuban political prisoners at the rate of 3,000 per year.

Haitians continue to arrive in substantial numbers and make up a majority of detainees in the Krome detention center in Miami.

In addition, Florida still feels the effects of the Cuban-Haitian influx of the late 1970's and early 1980's. An estimated 15 percent of the 140,000 Cubans and Haitians who arrived during that time are still on public assistance and may never become completely self-sufficient.

These latest arrivals further strain every social and public service in our Florida communities. Since applicants for asylum are not technically "refugees" nor are they "immigrants" under existing law, they cannot be counted for the purposes of reimbursing local governments for the costs incurred by providing necessary services.

The failure of the Federal Government to enforce a rational immigration policy has cost communities in Florida, Texas, California and elsewhere millions of dollars and thousands of man-hours in emergency care, shelter, transportation, medical care, education, police services, court costs and a host of other services.

The responsible way for the Federal Government to deal with what is essentially a Federal problem is to assist local governments in meeting these needs and to reimburse them for associated costs.

The Community Relations Service of the Justice Department, following the effective work of the Cuban-Haitian task force, has provided such invaluable assistance through its mission of assisting local communities in absorbing alien influxes.

After the initial emergency of the Cuban boatlift and concurrent Haitian influx, CRS was detailed in 1983 to assume responsibility for the Cuban/Haitian Reception Processing Program. CRS has been a key player in the resettlement of these entrants.

Today's arrivals of Nicaraguans and other Central Americans in Florida, along with the increases in the number of Cuban political prisoners admitted and a renewed flow of Haitians seeking to settle in the Haitian community in Miami, replicate those crisis days in the early 1980's.

This bill is the first step in recognizing the Federal Government's responsibility for the associated costs. It expands the population served by the Community Relations Service under current law to include Central Americans applying for asylum.

CRS has the experience required and is best prepared to work with the new arrivals and the communities they enter. All CRS currently lacks is the statutory authority to provide immediate relief.

The expansion of CRS authority should not result in reduction of services to the existing clientele. Rather, the administration is given the flexibility to determine whether providing relief to affected communities should be funded through a reprogramming of resources or through a request for additional funds from Congress.

Senator BENTSEN and I agree that the expansion of the CRS mission to include Central Americans is a pragmatic and fair approach in dealing with this crisis.

Immigration control is a Federal responsibility. Clearly, any costs to local communities resulting from refugee arrivals stimulated by foreign policy decisions or a failure to control U.S. borders should be borne by the Federal Government.

Our support of this bill will send an unmistakable signal to local governments that the Federal Government is prepared to act responsibly and fairly in dealing with the special problems arising from influxes of refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. GORE. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added as a cosponsor of this measure.

Mr. GRAHAM. We would be honored to have the Senator from Tennessee join in this important national initiative.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. Madam President, I enjoyed my colleague's statement and I want him to know, as I want the Presiding Officer to know, that this is a matter that is of concern not only in Florida and in Texas, but any Americans who can recognize the unfair impact which is being felt in these two States should understand why this legislation is wise.

The influx my colleague has described is very real.

S.J. Res. 51. Joint resolution to designate the month of April 1989 as "National Cancer Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a Senate joint resolution which designates the month of April 1989 as National Cancer Awareness Month. The purpose of this resolution is to provide a low-cost way to educate the public about the importance of preventative cancer examinations as a way to fight this deadly disease. Fifty-two of my colleagues have already signed on as original cosponsors of this necessary resolution.

As you know, cancer is one of the most serious medical challenges of our day. Cancer causes one of every five deaths in the United States and strikes in three out of four American families. It kills more children ages 3 to 14 than any other disease and occurs more frequently as people advance in age. In 1988 alone, an estimated 494,000 Americans died of cancer. Approximately 75 million Americans now living will eventually have cancer.

By increasing public awareness of preventative measures, we see a change in these numbers.

Thanks to developments in research, we continue to learn how to reduce the fatality rate of cancer. Individual cancer examinations make early detection and treatment possible. One hundred seventy-four thousand American lives can be saved this year. Three million Americans alive today have already won their war against cancer.

There has been great interest in this area in California. One man who has shown great initiative is William Croker, a gentleman from Hawaiian Gardens, who, tragically, lost both parents and a sister to cancer. Mr. Croker uses his ability to walk long distances to draw attention to this serious disease. "Walking Willie," as we know him, has walked thousands of miles promoting the importance of continued cancer research and personal preventative cancer measures. This February, Willie began a walk across the United States to nationally promote cancer checkups. He is due to arrive in Washington, DC, in late April, the month our resolution designates as Cancer Awareness Month.

Mr. President, it is our responsibility to provide the public with information about ways to prevent cancer. Constituents have already begun to organize to alert one another to the importance of cancer awareness.

A National Cancer Awareness Month is an appropriate and cost-effective way to continue these efforts and decrease the fatality rate of cancer.●

Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. GORE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. WARNER, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. BOREN, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S.J. Res. 52. Joint resolution to express gratitude for law enforcement personnel; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GRATITUDE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT PERSONNEL

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution to express gratitude to America's law enforcement personnel. Every year in America, we set aside May 1 as a day to celebrate justice under law, to advance equality, and to encourage respect to law and its essential place in the life of every American citizen. By all means, let us salute the work of our judges and attorneys and law students. We must bear in mind, though, that law does not begin or end in the courtroom or the law schools. Law's presence is perhaps even more immediate and profound on the policeman's beat, in the precinct station, and in the jailhouse. And so this year on May first, the day we call "Law Day U.S.A.," we should give special emphasis to law enforcement personnel in order to honor these public servants for their courage and dedication.

I am sponsoring this resolution to expand the focus of law day to give special recognition of our Nation's constables, sheriff's deputies, troopers, patrolmen, officers, and detectives—and men and women who protect our streets, patrol our roadways, and staff our correction facilities. Truly these men and women stand as a firstline defense of our laws and of our civil order. They are devoted to their jobs, underpaid for their efforts and tireless in their work. And they are often in danger. Every year, 10 percent are injured on the job. In 1988, 158 were killed in America. Twenty percent of officer fatalities last year were due solely to traffic-related accidents while in the line of duty. Even on a seemingly routine beat, our officers jeopardize their own safety in order to guarantee the safety of others.

Of course, we all honor the brave dead. But let me be clear: First and foremost, this resolution is a salute to the living. America owes these men and women an incalculable debt—a debt not of dollars, but of gratitude and deep respect. It is an honor to sponsor this resolution, and to encourage my colleagues' support for this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The being on objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 52

Whereas the first day of May of each year has been designated as "Law Day U.S.A." and set aside as a special day to advance equality and justice under law, to encourage citizen support for law enforcement and law observance, and to foster respect for law and an understanding of the essential place of law in the life of every citizen of the United States;

Whereas each day police officers and other law enforcement personnel perform their duties unflinchingly and without hesitation;

Whereas each year tens of thousands of law enforcement personnel are injured or assaulted in the course of duty and many are killed;

Whereas law enforcement personnel are devoted to their jobs, are underpaid for their efforts, and are tireless in their work; and

Whereas law enforcement personnel perform their duties without adequate recognition: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in celebration of "Law Day, U.S.A.", May 1, 1989, the grateful people of this Nation give special emphasis to all law enforcement personnel of the United States, and acknowledge the unflinching and devoted service law enforcement personnel perform as such personnel help preserve domestic tranquillity and guarantee the legal rights of all individuals of this Nation.●

Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. ROBB):

S.J. Res. 53. Joint Resolution to designate May 25, 1989, as "National Tap Dance Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL TAP DANCE DAY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution designating May 25, 1989, as "National Tap Dance Day." This resolution is being introduced in the other body by my distinguished friend, the Congressman from Michigan, Mr. CONYERS.

May 25 marks the birth date of the legendary Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, whose tap dancing was the highlight of many broadway musicals and motion pictures of a prior era. "Bojangles" wide appeal and popularity masked, however, a serious artist, a leading exponent of what is now widely recognized as a uniquely American form of dance. In recent years, tap has been in danger of becoming a forgotten performing art in our society. It is important to preserve this part of our special American culture. We who support this resolution hope that the art of tap will be returned to its rightful place in our Nation's cultural consciousness.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting the establishment of this special day both saluting Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, and celebrating this very special art form. I hope that we will see increased interest, study, and performance of this lively and original American art form.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this resolution be printed in the RECORD immediately following my statement. Thank you, Mr. President.●

There being no objection, the bill and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 53

Whereas the multifaceted art form of tap dancing is a manifestation of the cultural heritage of our Nation, reflecting the fusion of African and European cultures into an exemplification of the American spirit, that should be, through documentation, and archival and performance support, transmitted to succeeding generations;

Whereas tap dancing has had a historic and continuing influence on other genres of American art, including music, vaudeville, Broadway musical theater, and film, as well as other dance forms;

Whereas tap dancing is perceived by the world as a uniquely American art form;

Whereas tap dancing is a joyful and powerful aesthetic force providing a source of enjoyment and an outlet for creativity and self-expression for Americans on both the professional and amateur level;

Whereas it is in the best interest of the people of our Nation to preserve, promote, and celebrate this uniquely American art form;

Whereas Bill "Bojangles" Robinson made an outsanding contribution to the art of tap dancing on both stage and film through the unification of diverse stylistic and racial elements; and

Whereas May 25, the anniversary of the birth of of Bill "Bonjangles" Robinson, is an appropriate day on which to refocus the attention of the Nation on American tap dancing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 25, 1989, is designated "National Tap Dance Day". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor, along with Senator D'AMATO, a resolution establishing May 25, 1989, as "National Tap Dance Day."

Mr. President, May 25, is the birthday of a great Virginian, and a great tap dancer, Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, who was born in Richmond in 1878. He grew up in the market area of that city, and at an early age ran away to Washington, DC, where he was exposed to traveling minstrel shows. Captivated by the entertainers, Robinson used the basics of the minstrel tradition to develop his own unique style of tap dancing.

His abilities carried him to the top of the entertainment world, and by the mid-1920's he was hailed as "the king of tap dancers."

Bill "Bojangles" Robinson was a philanthropist as well as a great entertainer. He donated the first traffic light in the black area of his hometown, and in 1973, the city of Richmond dedicated a statue of him at that very corner.

Mr. President, Bill "Bonjangles" Robinson made an outstanding contribution to the art of tap dancing and to the life of his city, State, and Nation. It is therefore appropriate to celebrate the art of tap dancing on his birthday, and I urge my colleagues to join Senator D'AMATO and me in supporting this resolution.●

Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. DODD):

S.J. Res. 54. Joint resolution to designate the months of April 1989, and 1990, as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am introducing today, together with my colleague from the great State of Connecticut, Senator DODD, a joint resolution to declare the months of April 1989 and 1990 as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month." I am hopeful that a great number of my distinguished colleagues will join us in this important effort.

Mr. President, despite the fact that agencies and organizations serving our children have made notable contributions over the past few years in improving the lives of our youth—by revamping rules and regulations, pinpointing issues, disseminating information and increasing public awareness—child abuse is still on the increase.

Recent data makes it abundantly clear that our Nation's poor children are the high-risk victims for abuse, neglect, and other poverty related problems. The families of these children are caught in a web of strife, stress, and strain in their attempt to merely survive from day to day. Their struggle is compounded by lack of resources, both spiritual and physical, to reduce the burden imposed by their state of poverty.

Mr. President, America's child abuse problem does not stop there. It appears in every State in the Union and cuts across all socioeconomic groups. From the impoverished ghettos of our urban centers to the stately manors across the Nation, millions of America's children are not getting a fair chance to grow into productive adults. Many children in the United States are growing up in wholesome, nurturing environments. However, millions more are not blessed with that good fortune. Every child in the world needs and deserves food, shelter, and love in order to survive and prosper.

The evidence of child abuse and neglect is both alarming and overwhelming. The best available statistics estimate that three of every four cases of child abuse go unreported and the number of reported incidences continues to rise. The data collected by the Child Help U.S.A. organization and others show that over 1.5 million cases of child abuse are reported, so as many as 6 million of our Nation's children are being tragically abused. Today, I regret to report that the incidence rate is not declining. Abuse cases have significantly risen since 1980. Physical abuse has increased by 58 percent and sexual abuse has tripled since 1980. All experts agree that the numbers will escalate further since victims will likely victimize their own children and others.

Mr. President, despite the best efforts of the social service providers, like Child Help U.S.A., Parents Anonymous, and other members of the National Child Abuse Coalition, the entire Nation is threatened by the continued growth in child abuse and neglect. The only national crisis counseling hotline staffed totally by medical and clinical professionals received over 173,719 calls in 1988 compared with only 8,600 calls when it was established in 1982. The Child Help U.S.A. phone system was at capacity in 1986. Since then, it has had to expand to accommodate an increasing number of calls.

As I have stated previously, Members of Congress have an opportunity to assist the many individuals, organizations, and agencies that are striving to rid our Nation of the epidemic of child abuse and to assist the victims as well. We can help focus public attention on the goals and objectives of these agencies and improve the general welfare of our children.

The declaration of April 1989 and April 1990 as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month," is a significant way in which we in Congress can emphasize the importance of increasing public awareness and education for the benefit of our troubled families and suffering children. There is help available in communities throughout the Nation, but we need to get the message out to the abused as well as the abusers. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to join Senator DODD and myself in this effort to have April 1989 and April 1990 designated as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.●

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 54

Whereas the incidence and prevalence of child abuse and neglect have reached alarming proportions in the United States;

Whereas an estimated six million children become victims of child abuse in this Nation each year;

Whereas an estimated four to five thousand of these children die as a result of such abuse each year;

Whereas the Nation faces a continuing need to support innovative programs to prevent child abuse and assist parents and family members in which child abuse occurs;

Whereas Congress has expressed its commitment to seeking and applying solutions to this problem by enacting the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1974;

Whereas many dedicated individuals and private organizations, including Child Help U.S.A., Parents Anonymous, the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse, the American Humane Association, and other members of the National Child Abuse Coalition, are working to counter the ravages of abuse and neglect and to help child abusers break this destructive pattern of behavior;

Whereas the average cost for a public welfare agency to serve a family through a child abuse program is twenty times greater than self-help programs administered by private organizations;

Whereas organizations such as Parents Anonymous, and other members of the National Child Abuse Coalition, are expediting efforts to prevent child abuse in the next generation through special programs for abused children; and

Whereas it is appropriate to focus the attention of the Nation upon the problem of child abuse: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the months of April 1989 and 1990, are designated as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on all Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. PELL, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. HATCH):

S.J. Res. 55. Joint Resolution to designate the week of October 1, 1989, through October 7, 1989, as "Mental Illness Awareness Week"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today, along with 24 of my colleagues, to introduce a joint resolution designating the week of October 1, 1989, through October 7, 1989, as "Mental Illness Awareness Week."

Since 1984, this designation has been used as an educational tool. The myths and misconceptions, the fears and the stigma surrounding mental illness are staggering.

According to the American Psychiatric Association, 15 to 25 percent of the elderly suffer from significant symptoms of mental illness and approximately 12 million children under the age of 18 suffer from mental disorders such as depression, hyperactivity and autism. In a recent National Institute of Mental Health research article published in the November 1988, General Psychiatry, 15.4 percent of the population over the age of 18 years fulfilled criteria for at least one alcohol, drug abuse or other mental disorder during the month preceding the interview.

About 15 percent of all Americans will suffer a major depressive episode. About 40 percent of the homeless on our streets are victims of schizophrenia.

There is an important interplay between mental and physical illnesses. It is clear, for example, that many elderly persons with psychiatric illnesses have other medical illnesses, and treatment of both needs to be coordinated and monitored closely. Physical illnesses may induce, mask or modify psychiatric symptoms and vice versa. Mental illness can be as serious a disease as many physical illnesses, and research into the workings of the brain are imperative.

The impacts to society are massive.

The direct treatment costs and indirect costs from lost productivity associated with mental illness are in the billions of dollars. Our total Federal expenditure on mental illness research, on the other hand, is less than $339,000,000.

On a per patient basis, total dollars spent for research on schizophrenia and depression combined equal only 15 percent of moneys allocated to multiple sclerosis and 2 percent of the amount spent on muscular dystrophy. That is not to say that we should be doing less in those areas. We can and must do better in all areas of research.

Appropriate treatment of mental illness has been demonstrated to be cost effective. And while great strides have been made in our scientific knowledge and our ability to treat the disease, we must recommit ourselves to addressing the basic, human needs of those among us who are suffering.

We have a tendency, as a society, to blame the conditions of mental illness on that person, as if the illness were a matter of free choice. We have a tendency to harbor unconscious negative feelings toward those who are victims of mental illness. Discrimination against the mentally ill crosses all segments of society.

Through proper research, we can find the causes and appropriate treatment for mental illness. We can help those families and their loved ones who suffer. But to do so, we must go beyond the stigma of mental illness and understand that it is real, it afflicts millions of Americans, and it is a painful disease.

The main purpose of this resolution is to make people aware of the seriousness of mental illness and the importance of educating them about the realities. I agree with a headline from last year's awareness campaign: Mental illness is curable. But public apathy must be cured first.

I ask my colleagues to join in this effort by cosponsoring this resolution. Thank you, Mr. President.●

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 55

Whereas mental illness is a problem of grave concern and consequence in American society, widely but unnecessarily feared and misunderstood;

Whereas thirty-one to forty-one million Americans annually suffer from clearly diagnosable mental disorders involving significant disability with respect to employment, attendance at school, or independent living;

Whereas more than ten million Americans are disabled for long periods of time by schizophrenia, manic depressive disorder, and major depression;

Whereas between 30 and 50 percent of the homeless suffer serious, chronic forms of mental illness;

Whereas alcohol, drug, and mental disorders affect almost 19 percent of American adults in any six-month period;

Whereas mental illness in at least twelve million children interferes with vital developmental and maturational processes;

Whereas mental disorder-related deaths are estimated to be thirty-three thousand, with suicide accounting for at least twenty-nine thousand, although the real number is thought to be at least three times higher;

Whereas our growing population of the elderly is particularly vulnerable to mental illness;

Whereas estimates indicate that one in ten AIDS patients will develop dementia or other psychiatric problems as the first sign of the disease and as many as two-thirds of AIDS patients will show neuropsychiatric symptoms before they die;

Whereas mental disorders result in staggering costs to society, estimated to be in excess of $249,000,000,000 in direct treatment and support and indirect costs to society, including lost productivity;

Whereas mental illness is increasingly a treatable disability with excellent propects for amelioration and recovery when properly recognized;

Whereas families of mentally ill persons and those persons themselves have begun to join self-help groups seeking to combat the unfair stigma of the diseases, to support greater national investment in research and to advocate an adequate continuum of care from hospital to community;

Whereas in recent years there have been unprecedented major research developments bringing new methods and technology to the sophisticated and objective study of the functioning of the brain and its linkages to both normal and abnormal behavior;

Whereas research in recent decades has led to a wide array of new and more effective modalities of treatment (both somatic and psychosocial) for some of the most incapacitating forms of mental illness (including schizophrenia, major affective disorders, phobias, and phobic disorders);

Whereas appropriate treatment of mental illness has been demonstrated to be cost effective in terms of restored productivity, reduced utilization of other health services, and lessened social dependence; and

Whereas recent and unparalleled growth in scientific knowledge about mental illness has generated the current emergence of a new threshold of opportunity for future research advances and fruitful application to specific clinical problems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the seven-day period beginning October 1, 1989, and ending October 7, 1989, is designated as "Mental Illness Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 33

At the request of Mr. HUMPHREY, the names of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], and the Senator from California (Mr. WILSON) were added as cosponsors of S. 33, a bill to provide that each item of any appropriation measure that is agreed to by both Houses of the Congress in the same form shall be enrolled as a separate bill or joint resolution for presentation of the President.

S. 54

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, the name of the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 54, a bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 with respect to the waiver of rights under such Act without supervision, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 32

At the request of Mr. PACKWOOD, the names of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 32, a joint resolution to designate February 2, 1989, as "National Women and Girls in Sports Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 34

At the request of Mr. BENTSEN, the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 34, a joint resolution designating the week of April 14, 1989, through April 22, 1989, as "National Minority Cancer Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 40

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 40, a joint resolution to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1989 as "National Arbor Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 42

At the request of Mr. PACKWOOD, the names of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 42, a joint resolution to designate March 16, 1989, as "Freedom of Information Day."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 10

At the request of Mr. SIMON, the names of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 10, a concurrent resolution to express the sense of the Congress with respect to continuing reductions in the Medicare program.

At the request of Mr. SIMON, the name of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] was withdrawn as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 10, supra.

SENATE RESOLUTION 16

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 16, a resolution to express the sense of the Senate regarding future funding of the municipal sewage treatment program under the Clean Water Act.

SENATE RESOLUTION 24

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 24, a resolution to express the sense of the Senate regarding future funding of Amtrak.

SENATE RESOLUTION 40

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 40, a resolution to prohibit the receipt of honoraria by Members, officers, or employees of the Senate on or after the first day that there takes effect any increase in the salaries of Members, officers, or employees of the Senate as recommended by the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial salaries and included in the budget transmitted by the President to the Congress.

At the request of Mr. MITCHELL, the names of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], the Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 40, supra.

At the request of Mr. KASTEN, his name was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 40, supra.

SENATE RESOLUTION 50, AN ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. LEAHY, from the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 50

Resolved, That, in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraphs 1 and 8 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $1,876,650, of which amount (1) not to exceed $4,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $4,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $1,914,132, of which amount (1) not to exceed $4,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $4,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of Stationery, United States Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations."

SENATE RESOLUTION 53—AUTHORIZING THE PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF A SENATE REPORT

Mr. PRYOR (for himself and Mr. HEINZ) submitted the following resolutoin; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 53

Resolved, That there shall be printed for the use of the Special Committee on Aging the maximum number of copies of volumes 1 and 2 of its annual report to the Senate, entitled "Developments in Aging: 1988," which may be printed at a cost not to exceed $1,200.

NOTICES OF HEARING

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the Senate and the public that two hearings have been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development in the Committee on Energy and Natural Resoruces.

The purpose of the hearings is to receive testimony on the Department of Energy's nuclear reactor research and development programs and on commercial efforts to develop advanced nuclear reactor technologies.

The hearings will take place on March 7, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. and March 9, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

Those wishing to submit written testimony for the printed hearing record should send it to the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact Mary Louise Wagner at (202) 224-7569.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the Senate and the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development in the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on Friday, February 24, 1989, at 10 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on the Department of Energy's fiscal year 1990 budget request for Basic Energy Research Programs and the superconducting super collider.

Those wishing to submit written testimony for the printed hearing record should send it to the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact Ben Cooper at (202) 224-7569.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold an oversight hearing in Sioux City, IA, on credit for agriculture and rural communities including implementation of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987. The hearing will take place on February 13, 1989, at 2 p.m. in the Sioux City Convention Center.

Senator TOM HARKIN will preside. For further information please contact Mark Halverson of the subcommittee staff at 224-5207.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate Tuesday, February 7, 1989, at 10 a.m. to continue oversight hearings on the problems of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Human Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, February 7, 1989, at 10 a.m. to conduct a hearing on "AIDS Education, Care and Drug Development Oversight, I."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to meet on February 7, 1989, beginning at 9:45 a.m., in 1324 Longworth House Office Building, on the fiscal year 1990 budget for Indian programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 7, 1989, at 10 a.m. to hold hearings pursuant to Senate Resolution 381, Section 21, agreed February 26, 1988.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 7, 1989, 2:30 p.m. to conduct a closed hearing to consider the Department of Energy's facilities for defense materials production.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ALAN AND DIANNE KAY, 1989 VOLUNTEER FUND RAISING AWARD RECIPIENTS

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing and honoring Alan and Dianne Kay, residents of McLean, VA, who are the recipients of the 1989 Volunteer Fundraising Award given by the National Society of Fundraising Executives—Washington Chapter. The society is a professional organization of more than 9,000 individuals who serve as fund raising executives for, or consultants to, institutions engaged in fundraising management.

I would like to share with my colleagues the noteworthy efforts that these two individuals have made toward raising money for cancer research.

Alan and Dianne Kay have distinguished themselves as Virginians whose fundraising efforts have made a difference. Most notably, for the past 7 years they have cochaired the American Cancer Society Annual Ball in Washington. Having raised over $6 million, Alan and Dianne have made it the largest single fundraising event for cancer in the world. The moneys raised have been used to support cancer research, education, and patient service programs.

The Kays also founded the Stanley G. Kay Memorial Award in the name of Alan's brother who died of cancer. This award pays special recognition to those individuals dedicated to aiding cancer research. Recipients of this award have included Dr. Vincent T. Devita, Jr., former Director of the National Cancer Institute at National Institute of Health; Dr. Armand Hammer, Ann Landers, Congressman Paul Rogers, and health care champion, Congressman HENRY A. WAXMAN from California.

Alan has been involved in other efforts to raise money for cancer research. This year Alan was chosen to serve on the American Cancer Society's national board of directors. He has also been chairman of the steering committee for the Holy Cross Hospital Hospice Center and is currently spearheading fundraising efforts for Georgetown University Medical Center-Lombardi Cancer Center.

Mr. President, I want to congratulate Alan and Dianne and I am certain that my colleagues will join me in recognizing their outstanding work and fundraising efforts for many worthwhile causes.●

THE ROYAL FLUSH

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, Joan McShane has given a new meaning to the term "royal flush." Joan, a fourth, fifth, and sixth grade teacher in Davenport, IA, is not a gambler, but she knows what is at stake is worth a fortune. What is at stake are the minds of the young people in her care. Her tools for molding those minds—an everyday bathroom commode and a royal flush.

Interest and involvement in education and learning today is being challenged by modern televisions, VCR's, and high-technology video games. By utilizing a permanent fixture people use every day, Joan was able to motivate her students by providing a research project that caught their attention and touched their curiosity. Last fall I was lucky enough to be able to visit Joan's classroom and witness this fascinating project. It impressed me so much that I felt my colleagues should know about the ingenuity and accomplishments of Joan McShane.

Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks, I would like to insert into the RECORD Joan McShane's article entitled, "The Royal Flush," printed in the September 1987 edition of Science and Children magazine. The article Joan wrote gives the details of her project and discusses the changes witnessed in her students. This project, thought initially to be silly and in some instances embarrassing, changed from the students' standpoint to be exciting and challenging.

This article shows us that Joan McShane is the kind of teacher we need in our schools today. We need more educators who will enhance students' creativity and enrich the minds of our future proteges.

Mr. President, to honor Joan McShane's work, I ask that a copy of the article entitled "The Royal Flush" be inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The article follows:

THE ROYAL FLUSH

(By Joan Braunagel McShane)

A full-sized toilet on a portable wooden stand faced my sixth-grade classroom for more than six weeks last year. Not since "All in the Family" audiences were treated to the sound on airways nationwide of Archie Bunker's commode flushing has an ordinary toilet been the subject of such unusual curiosity and comment. In this room, my at first skeptical but eventually enthusiastic students finished a research project, "The Royal Flush," on the subject of toilet tissue, an unprepossessing substance that they have made relevant and meaningful. Science/technology/society's goals in the john? Read on.

THE UBIQUITOUS THRONE

What project calling for motivation and original research, I asked myself, could be of universal interest to a multicultural, mixed level sixth-grade class? What had everyone in the class experienced but not yet necessarily understood? What problem with serious science implications could be approached through materials readily available in this midwest urban community? What did we all use?

Toilets and paper.

The six-week toilet-tissue test, the "royal flush," then began—softly—to take shape.

Our goals were to discover which toilet tissue would be best from two standpoints, ecological and practical. Specifically, the class wanted to find which tissue would break up fastest after it was flushed and thereby would be least likely to clog the household toilet's pipes (and, by implication, the nation's waterways). I wanted the students to learn how to gather data, compile them, and from that information make inferences that would lead to valid conclusions. Then, I wanted them to experience how to use this knowledge in good decision making—in this particular instance, which toilet tissue to purchase.

RUBE GOLDBERG, EAT YOUR HEART OUT

Now that we knew what we were going to do, the project moved quickly. After several attempts, a former student's father and I developed a closed cycle toilet, a royal gold and white commode installed, class center, on a portable 80-cm wooden stand. (See box, page 31, for construction details.) Its tank held 13 L of water, which flushed with better than average force through a drawer with a bottom of fine screen. The screen caught all the paper, while the water emptied into a large (56-L) school wastebasket.

ROLLING ALONG

After we put the toilet in place, the class began gathering toilet tissue. The students wrote letters and made personal visits to supermarket managers, staff, parents, and neighbors. Before the project was complete, 50 people in the community made contributions, and the classroom began to look like a toilet tissue factory. From the 149 rolls of tissue that the students collected, they tested 43 different tissues of differing brands and colors.

Students identified each incoming roll carefully; then, two students' particular responsibility was to stack the increasing number of rolls in alphabetical order according to brand names.

TOILET TESTS

While testing, the students arranged themselves throughout the room, singly or in pairs, at 13 work stations; however, each student maintained individual data for his or her task. This procedure allowed the children both to become particularly expert at given tasks and still come up with individual results.

During the weeks of testing, attendance was extraordinarily good because no one wanted anybody else "messing around in the data," as one student eloquently put it. As each group completed its task, it passed the experimental tissue on to the next group. (See Figure 1.)

Students at Station One unrolled 272 cm of tissue from each roll, the amount the children agreed was an average amount per sitting. (The students used numerous 272-cm strips for their own needs over a two-day period.) After Station One cut more 272-cm lengths for experimental purposes, Group Two divided the strips into quarters. The four pieces did not always break neatly at the perforations; as the students learned, tissue rectangles vary in area.

Group Three marked the tissue's brand on an index card and placed the card and tissue in a plastice bag, while Group Four measured each brand's and color's dry size (amount of space occupied) by stacking the folded tissue in a 1,000-ml beaker, packing it firmly, and recording the volume obtained. The tissue's next stop was a single student, our "ply person," who checked the number of layers of paper in each given sheet of tissue.

A student who worked as a cost and color recorder ran Station Six; he passed the tissue to another class member who tested for odor, softness, flaking, and powdering. This tester mentioned that several nights she awakened with the odor of the tissue still in her nostrils.

Finally, two students performed the last dry measurement, carefully weighing the tissue in a 500-ml beaker. After recording the results, they handed the tissue to the flusher.

WET WISDOM

Our research showed that, when it comes to toilet tissue, people are either crumplers or folders. The class elected to have its flusher crumple the tissue into the toilet bowl. After the flush had emptied all the water from the bowl, the flusher turned on the pump and set a timer for three minutes.

This time period allowed the tank to fill. It also gave each tissue the same amount of time to drip before the next group removed the residue from the fine screen filter in the drawer below the tank.

Those students charged with post-flushing operations took the drawer from the wooden stand and examined the flushed paper. They recorded how much the tissue had broken up, how the color appeared, and any unusual characteristics. The next group of students carefully removed the tissue from the drawer and replaced it in the 500-ml beaker to record its weight. Station Thirteen measured the tissue for its wet size in the same 1,000-ml beaker first used to measure it dry. The pump switch was turned off, and the toilet was ready to receive the next 272 cm of tissue—already processed through the preflush stations.

NEW AND UNIMPROVED

The students tested several of the tissues two or more times to check and recheck their results; their accuracy and reliability in testing, data gathering, and recording was gratifying. As the trials progressed over the six weeks, I observed the class begin to predict possible results from testing particular tissue. Although the students predictions became increasingly sophisticated, they were sometimes wrong. And one tissue defied almost all expectations.

The baby lotion it contained clogged the toilet and the pump and left an oily residue. The toilet maintenance crew complained in disgust that it took two days to clean up the mess.

CRAPPER AND BEYOND

While several groups continued testing the tissue, another studied the history of the toilet. They were surprised and delighted to learn of Sir Thomas Crapper's contribution to the modern toilet. (Sir Thomas invented the valve-less water preventer, which led to modern flush toilets, in England in 1882).

Several students wrote for and received information from manufacturers about the production of toilet tissue. One student called the toll-free number listed on a toilet tissue package and whispered to me that she had used the "toilet paper hotline." A survey team questioned the community about toilet paper preferences. At first, several of the children were reluctant to ask people about toilet tissue, but before the survey team completed its work, the same students had come to enjoy the questioning and had improved their interviewing techniques. The class was dismayed to learn that 42 percent of the people questioned indicated that texture largely determined why they purchased particular brands.

Very few buyers considered practical or ecological issues.

A TISSUE OF TRUTHS

After compiling all the data, the class spent days discussing the findings. When the students discovered that there are many differences in how toilet tissue breaks up, they learned why some paper contributes to water pollution and waste more than others. Some tissues broke up well and retained little water; others flushed through in whole pieces and retained water like sponges. The students also discovered that cost didn't necessarily ensure quality (price tags varied from 17 cents to 49 cents a roll). And color slowed the paper's dissolution.

In spite of consumers' focus on texture, students learned that, functionally, soft tissue does not always indicate good tissue. Students were sometimes annoyed, sometimes bemused, sometimes merely interested to discover that their individual impressions of a given brand of tissue did not always correlate with final statistics. They eventally came to see that research is made up of many components, and, until all the facts are in, no conclusion can be more than tentative.

A PLETHORA OF PAPERS

We tested advertised brands as well as grocery-store generics. Students expressed surprise when some of the generics tested as well as or better than some of the popular name brands. Although they mostly studied household tissue, they also considered that used at one of the city's hospitals and an industrial brand favored by a local dentist.

Of course, they tested the school's brand, which took two flushes to leave the toilet bowl. Needless to say, the children were delighted to advise the school custodian about the results of that particular experiment.

As testing progressed, the students' attitudes about the project changed. What had begun for some as a rather silly (and for others, embarrassing) assignment had become a serious research project. Proud of their work and pleased with the attention and respect paid from the community, my sixth grade became a field-testing facility for toilet tissue.

Often, when a new tissue came on the market, someone brought it into the class for a test. "Here we go again." they moaned, but their actions indicated pride, not dismay. In the middle of the big testing project, it was not unusual for students to come in more than an hour before school started and stay an hour after it ended.

They couldn't understand why I couldn't be at school at 7:00 A.M. to meet my classes starting at 8:25. The students needed to get "an early start."

TISSUE TRIVIA

We gained many surprising fringe benefits of knowledge from the paper project. For instance,

The right way to hang the roll of tissue—in order to take advantage of its design—is to allow the paper to fall from the top.

The odor of the tissue comes from the cardboard core.

Some rolls have more paper than others.

Toilet tissue is made from both hard and soft woods.

The number of perforations per square varies with the brand (these data were obtained by actual count). Two-ply tissue is more resistant to dissolution than one-ply (these data were gathered by the ply person).

Some packaging makes tissue more accessible than others (data from the tissue catalogers).

AND THE WINNER IS . . .

At the conclusion of their flushing, measuring, surveying, recording, compiling, and discussing, student researchers wrote a seven-page report. But everyone's burning question—Which tissue flushes best?—remains unanswered. The nature of the solution lay in the needs of the audience—believe it or not, we do not all ask the same thing of toilet tissue!

For ecological and practical purposes, the class's observations and statistics showed one tissue to be superior; however, if soft texture were the primary virtue, another was the winner. So the students included a memo suggesting that people must decide what characteristics of toilet tissue were important to them before using the research information to choose a particular brand.

"The Royal Flush" generated a great deal of community interest. An engineer from the area who had in the past worked for one of the nation's largest and oldest paper companies spoke to the class. A local newspaper covered the study and published an article about it. Neighbors, parents, and educators came to see the students at work; school superintendents stopped by to flush. Colleagues from neighboring schools brought their students on field trips to see and use the classroom throne.

And several of the primary teachers in my building also expressed interest in the toilet, not only for scientific use, but also for social purposes—to teach toilet etiquette.

As for my students, I knew that they had learned much more than merely which tissue flushes best. One child summarized for us all, "I feel great about this project. We learned a lot, and it was fun."

TO FLUSH AGAIN

One day after the project had been, in a manner of speaking, completed, the class was discussing conservation of energy. One member of the group who had been doing research on toilets of the future mentioned that water conservation will probably some day force the use of a new kind of toilet. Another student shook his head in disbelief and asked, "Wow, Mrs. McShane, won't there have to be a different kind of toilet tissue from all those we have just tested?"

With some hesitation, I replied that I thought there would, realizing that compost, dirt, or chemical toilets undoubtedly will demand a tissue different from what we use today.

I glanced at the golden throne and realized that . . . (to paraphrase T.S. Eliot) in our end was a new beginning.

A COMMENDABLE COMMODE

Building a classroom toilet requires some rooting around for materials and a bit of mechanical know-how, but nothing insurmountable. Our model allows easy maintenance, easy transport, and duplicates the water flow and pressure of the average household toilet. A brief overview of our construction method follows.

For the frame, we used two-by-three boards for the four legs, with a piece of half-inch plywood for the top and another for the bottom. The finished frame stands 80 cm from the floor, is 68 cm wide and 75 cm long, and moves on four ball-bearing wheels attached to the four corners of the frame.

A drawer, measuring 34 cm wide, 50 cm long, and 10 cm deep, fits beneath the top of the frame. The bottom of the drawer has been replaced by fine mesh (1/32) window screen stapled to the drawer frame. Wooden slides built under the plywood top allow the drawer to be easily removed. Removal is very important, because it is in the drawer that tissue is caught, allowed to drain, and then removed for measurement. (A test tube brush can be used to remove very small pieces of flushed tissue caught in the screen. Water should be run through the screen frequently to keep it completely free of paper particles.)

A full-sized household toilet sits over a circular hole slightly smaller in circumference than the toilet base cut out of the top piece of plywood in the frame. A toilet flange sealed with a beeswax ring holds the toilet in place.

A large container must be placed under the toilet. Our 56-L school wastebasket was securely anchored to the plywood base with four wooden blocks nailed in place. These blocks keep the container from tipping when the entire apparatus is moved.

A pipe with a control valve is connected to the base of the toilet tank. One end of a long, rubber hose is attached to the bottom of the pipe; the other end of the hose is connected to the ¼-horsepower sump pump that sits at the bottom of the wastebasket. On a tee below the valve is a faucet where a hose can be attached for emptying the water storage container. The valve enables the tank to fill after each flush; the faucet makes emptying the water storage basket very simple. Fresh water can be put in the container with a hose connected to a fresh water supply.

Remember, all electrical connections must be grounded. The switch that operates the sump pump sits next to the toilet base; the outlet is beneath the plywood top of the platform.

This system worked well for us, but don't hesitate to introduce your own ideas to come up with an even more commendable commode for your classroom.

POOR MATH, SCIENCE SKILLS THREATEN U.S. PROSPERITY

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss an article which appeared in the Washington Post on February 1, 1989, regarding the science and math achievement of America's young people. This article disclosed some very disturbing news: This country does a poor job in teaching our young people mathematics and science. I ask that the entire article be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

An Education Department and National Science Foundation study of math performance in six countries put American 13-year-olds at the bottom, below students from South Korea, Canada, Spain, United Kingdom, and Ireland. In fact, South Korean students performed at a level four times that of United States students. Similarly in science, United States students scored worse or no better than students in the three European countries and four Canadian Provinces as well as Korea.

Our scientific and technological leadership continues to be challenged by competitors throughout the world. The foundation of our international preeminence and our educational excellence is being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity.

Last week I introduced S. 134, a bill to establish the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act which would provide an annual $5,000 scholarship to one female and one male high school senior in each congressional district to study science, mathematics or engineering at the college of their choice. While this action will not solve the serious problem facing us, it will serve as an incentive for students demonstrating the aptitude, desire, and commitment needed to succeed in these vital technological fields. It will redirect our focus on those areas of study which are essential to achieving economic stability and scientific advancement.

As our need for scientific and engineering personnel increases, we are facing a decline in our pool of qualified personnel. In business and in government, science is becomng the key to success. My bill addresses this problem. The challenge of international competition and technological change place a premium on the kind of long-term investment this legislation will provide. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.

SURVEY OF MATH, SCIENCE SKILLS PUTS U.S. STUDENTS AT BOTTOM

(By Barbara Vobejda)

An international comparison of mathematics and science skills released yesterday shows American 13-year-olds scoring at the bottom, with South Korean students performing at high levels in math at four times the rate of U.S. students.

In both math and science, U.S. students also scored worse or no better than students in the three European countries and four Canadian provinces who also participated in the survey.

In math, 40 percent of South Korean students showed an understanding of measurement and geometry concepts, for example, compared to 9 percent of Americans, and 78 percent of South Korean students could solve two-step problems such as finding an average, compared to 40 percent of Americans.

In science, more than 73 percent of the students in South Korea could use scientific procedures and analyze science data—design experiments and draw conclusions, for example—compared to 42 percent of American students.

"Few comparisons are more odious than the ones embodied in this little book," said Bassam Z. Shakhashiri, assistant director for science and engineering education at the National Science Foundation. "The lack of preparation for further education and future employment that these American teen-agers demonstrated is nothing short of frightening."

The report, funded by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education, compared math and science performance in the United States, South Korea, the United Kingdom, Ireland, Spain, and the Canadian provinces of British Columbia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. In New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, French- and English-speaking populations were assessed separately.

All students were given the same 63 math questions and 60 science questions, translated for non-English-speaking populations. About 1,000 American students participated in the survey, which was based on representative samples in each country.

The study was the latest evidence of low science and math achievement among American youngsters, particularly in contrast to their counterparts in many Asian countries. A 1986 study of fifth graders showed that even the highest-scoring Americans performed below Japanese of all levels. And a national study released last June found that nearly half of American 17-year-olds cannot perform math problems normally taught in junior high school.

Officials at the Educational Testing Service (ETS), which administered the study, tied the results to the nation's future economic position. "It's a pretty accurate prophesy of what the 23-year-olds of 1999 will be able to do," said Archie Lapointe, executive director of the Center for the Assessment of Educational Progress at ETS.

In math, the countries fell into three groups, with South Korean students achieving the highest average score, 568 on a scale of 1,000. The second tier included British Columbia, English- and French-speaking populations of Quebec and English-speaking students in New Brunswick. The third tier included English-speaking students in Ontario, the French-speaking population in New Brunswick, Spain, the United Kingdom and Ireland.

The lowest-ranking tier included French-speaking Ontario and the United States, where the average score was 473.9.

In science, participants fell into three groups, with British Columbia and Korea at the top, and the United States, Ireland and the French-speaking populations in Ontario and New Brunswick at the bottom. The other countries and provinces ranked in a middle tier.

Ironically, when asked if they are good at math, 68 percent of American students agreed, compared to 23 percent of South Korean students.

While the study did not analyze why students in some countries performed better than others, Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, argued at a news conference yesterday that very little science is taught in American elementary schools, and most elementary teachers have very little science background.

The study showed that the more time a student spent watching television, the poorer the performance in math and science. It did not assess whether frequent television watching caused poor performance.●

CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY COMMISSION

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, the Consumer Product Safety Commission is charged with protecting the public from unreasonable risks of injury from consumer products. Yet, in recent years, the agency has been so constrained by budget cuts and by indifference from many in the previous administration as to have been unable to discharge its responsibilities. The result has been tragic. Thousands of injuries and needless deaths have occurred that could have been prevented.

I ask that an article on the Consumer Product Safety Commission which ran last week in the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD. I recommend it to my colleagues' attention.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 2, 1989]

THE LITTLE AGENCY THAT CAN'T

(By Dale Russakoff)

For eight years, the Consumer Product Safety Commission was Washington's domestic Nicaragua. Nobody declared war on the agency assigned to protect Americans from unsafe products; they just threw everything they had at it.

First they strafed its staff. There were about 975 employees in 1981; today there are 519. Then they imposed economic sanctions. In 1981, it had a budget of $42 million; today it has $34.5 million, almost exactly the price of running the Defense Department for one hour.

Then came the puppet government—a commission stacked with political conservatives who had no background in product safety.

The even took the agency's downtown building away. Today the commissioners, who used to meet in the K Street business district, hold court on the lower floors of a drab, Bethesda apartment building, overlooking a Giant Food loading dock and a bowling alley. (Actually, they don't hold court at all these days because the five-member commission has so many vacancies that it now lacks a quorum of three.)

It is not just consumer lobbies who think things have gotten out of hand. The American Academy of Pediatrics, which sees its share of childhood injuries, says the CPSC "has been emasculated." Bob Adler, associate professor at the University of North Carolina business school, calls it "a regulatory speck."

And a conservative appointed by former president Ronald Reagan said: "This whole place has been traumatized, tortured and drop-kicked around since 1981."

Here is what happens when an agency attempts to protect everyone in America from dangerous products with only $34 million a year:

The health and science staff discovered indoor air pollution threats from humidifiers and wanted to notify the public. It was decided that acting commission chairman Anne Graham would make a videotape for television stations across the country. But there wasn't enough money to rent a studio.

So Ken Giles, a public affairs officer, volunteered his home as the backdrop, and Graham drove there (in her own car) on Monday for the taping. The film required some deft editing, however, because one of Giles' young sons, who was upstairs at the time, began crying just as Graham was saying, "Obviously it's a risk to everyone who's inside. . . ."

It is not uncommon to find one person doing the work of two. Shelley Deppa, a psychologist with nine years' experience examining the safety of children's products, said she recently budgeted how many months it would take to accomplish the work she is assigned this year. She would need 24 months.

In an office jammed with crib headboards, defective rattles and commendations from the commissioners, she explained that she was supposed to finish a study by 1984 on children's head-entrapment. But, in between, she was diverted to investigate deaths and injuries from lawn darts, bunk beds, choking hazards, portable electric heaters, crib toys and more.

Its field staff slashed, the Washington staff has become its own roving inspection force, bringing in defective products to be investigated wherever it finds them. Graham brought in a prescription drug that didn't have a child-proof cap. Deppa spotted some toys that violated the CPSC choking standard in a craft shop. (She was on her honeymoon at the time.)

In the public affairs office, which has the key task of mailing out bulletins and brochures warning of safety hazards, the printing budget was cut about 50 percent in the last year, office director David Shiflett said. To try to keep pace, the office has shifted envelope-stuffing contracts to the D.C. Association of Retarded Citizens, which charges a cut rate.

Graham, 39, has been acting chairman since the departure last month of Terrence Scanlon, who was known to the agency's supporters as the enemy within. She has been meeting with employees in all divisions, sending out memos hailing Americans' right to know that products are safe and "looking for things I can do to let people know I really believe in our mission."

Graham, a Republican activist and protege of Reagan intimate Lyn Nofziger, came to the commission in 1986 with no experience in consumer products. But she has won respect as a consumer voice and is being widely greeted as a "new breeze" in these uncertain times. Many employees at her embattled agency said they are hopeful that President Bush's nominee to replace Scanlon will provide Graham with an ally who believes in their work.

But they are understandably reluctant to get too optimistic, and, in any case, the White House appears preoccupied with bigger agencies.

"Whenever a new commissioner was named, we used to say, 'This one couldn't be worse than the last one,' " a longtime staffer said recently. "Since 1981, we've been afraid to say that."●

HELSINKI COMMISSION CHAIRMAN NOMINATES CZECHOSLOVAK HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST FOR NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, last October, Czechoslovak citizens demonstrated in Prague on the 70th anniversary of the founding of an independent Czechoslovak State. Armed with nothing more than the courage of their convictions, these people faced off against massive armored personnel carriers, milita units equipped with tear gas and water cannons, and an impressive array of antiriot squads. Each side nervously eyed the other, until finally the demonstrators broke into a spontaneous chant: "The whole world is watching you, the whole world is watching."

Indeed, the whole world has been watching Czechoslovakia these past few months. Time and time again, we have witnessed Czechoslovak citizens demonstrate their increasing dissatisfaction with a system that has been far too unresponsive to the will of the people for far too long. Unfortunately, this increased activism has only been met with increased repression on the part of the authorities.

Just a few weeks ago, citizens gathered in Prague to commemorate the death of Jan Palach, a young Czechoslovak who, 20 years ago, committed suicide by self-immolation to protest the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia. Their peaceful memorial was marred by the brutal intervention of security forces. In the end, over 800 people had been arrested by the authorities, some of whom still remain in prison.

Shocked by the overreaction of the officials, Frantisek Cardinal Tomasek wrote to Prime Minister Adamek, citing the source of the disturbances as "the defective leadership of the state in the past decades." He added that, because "the security organs used crude force against the expressions of peace loving citizens, they acted not only against our existing laws, but against humanity in general."

One of those people who remains in prison is Vaclav Havel, a world-renowned playwright. Mr. Havel is no stranger to prison, though. He had previously been sentenced to a 4½ year prison term for his work with the independent citizens' initative, charter 77, and VONS, the Committee for the Defense of the Unjustly Persecuted.

In spite of relentless harassment by the authorities, including imprisonment, repeated detentions, house searches, and confiscation of property, Havel has remained active in the struggle for human rights. In 1988, he became associated with several new Czechoslovak human rights initiatives. In particular, he has signed "Democracy for All," the manifesto of the Movement for Civil Liberties, which was established in October 1988 in order to promote political pluralism and democracy through peaceful means. He has also become a member of the Czechoslovak Helsinki Committee, created in November 1988, with the specific goal of monitoring and reporting on compliance with the Helsinki accords.

Vaclav Havel is now in prison, but he is not alone in his cause. In a dramatic move in Prague this week, over 700 of his colleagues—playwrights, producers, artists, and actors—signed a petition calling for his release and the release of others imprisoned because of the recent events. These signatories, many of whom are prominent leaders in Czechoslovakia's officially sanctioned cultural life, have threatened to refuse to work if Havel is not released.

For these people, like many others in his country, Vaclav Havel has become a symbol of an enduring and selfless commitment to human rights. In recognition of his tremendous efforts for fundamental freedoms and democratic reform, I, along with the cochairman of the Helsinki Commission, Representative STENY HOYER, have nominated Vaclav Havel for the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize.●

THE REAL ANGUISH OF ABORTIONS

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Washington Post on February 5 published an enlightening piece by columnist Colman McCarthy describing the emotional effects suffered by women who have had abortions.

I ask that Mr. McCarthy's article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

THE REAL ANGUISH OF ABORTIONS

(By Colman McCarthy)

Since 1973, when the Supreme Court legalized abortion, 20 million have been performed. About 20,000 have been done by Dr. Julius Fogel, 75, a Washington obstetrician-gynecologist. I've known him for more than 20 years, owing to his friendship with my wife, who had served as an obstetrical nurse in Fogel's hospital.

I spoke to him the other day when C. Everett Koop, the surgeon general, announced that the government would not be issuing a report on abortion's emotional effects on women. Not enough is known. Koop said that almost 250 studies "do not support the premise that abortion does or does not cause or contribute to psychological problems."

The reason I talked with Julius Fogel is that in addition to being an obstetrician-gynecologist he is also a psychiatrist, one of the few U.S. physicians to practice both crafts. If anyone has an opinion worth listening to—one based on something more than ideology or anecdotes—it is Fogel. Well-credentialed, and well-regarded in the medical community, he is a dispassionate observer.

"There is no question," he said, "about the emotional grief and mourning following an abortion. It shows up in various forms. I've had patients who had abortions a year or two ago—women who did the best thing at the time for themselves—but it still bothers them. Many come in—some are just mute, some hostile. Some burst out crying . . . There is no question in my mind that we are disturbing a life process."

Fogel's thoughts last week were identical with those he expressed in 1971 when I interviewed him on the same subject. That was two years before Roe v. Wade, and Fogel and others were doing what were then called "therapeutic abortions." He did not claim then, or now, that mental illness automatically follows an abortion. "Often," he said in 1971, "the trauma may sink into the unconscious and never surface in the woman's lifetime . . . [But] a psychological price is paid. I can't say exactly what. It may be alienation, it may be a pushing away from human warmth, perhaps a hardening of the maternal instinct. Something happens on the deeper levels of a woman's consciousness when she destroys a pregnancy. I know that as a psychiatrist."

Fogel, unfortunately, wasn't one of those consulted by Koop. The surgeon general says that he sought the views of 27 scientific, medical, psychological and public health experts. The impression left now is that the data aren't there to lead to any conclusion that he or anyone else should be acting on. It's close to unbelievability that a major medical procedure performed 20 million times in 16 years has somehow been left either unsufficiently studied or studied in a way that the results end in a draw.

Variables and uncertainties surely exist in the studies of abortion aftereffects, depending on everything from the woman's age and income to her religion and education. And it may be true, as Koop claims, that "scientifically you can't prove a thing." But since when is scientific certainty the credibility standard for deciding, as Julius Fogel has done, that people are hurting?

In "Aborted Women: Silent No More," David Ctionardon says in a chapter on the psychological impact of abortion that studies of the aftereffects are common. He sites seven, ranging from an American Journal of Psychiatry report on 500 women to a survey of available studies by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists in England. The latter found, "The incidence of serious, permanent psychiatric aftermath [from abortion] is variously reported as between 9 and 59 percent."

Reardon states that "Even the most biased pro-abortion surveys admit that severe post-abortion psychological trauma does occur. . . . One researcher even claims that 'disablitating' psychiatric problems occur in 'only' 1 percent of aborted women. But dismissing even a 1 percent rate of disabling sequelae with an 'only' is obviously unjustifiable when the number of women undergoing abortions each year has reached such large proportions. If 'only' 1 percent of 1.5 million women suffer severe disabling psychic trauma from abortion, that means that each year 15,000 women are so severely scarred by post-abortion trauma that they become unable to function normally."

Whatever the numbers and percentages, the pending Supreme Court decision on a Missouri antiabortion law has become a bonfire heating the already inflammatory rhetoric on both sides. The National Abortion Rights Action League needs to lay off its preachments about "reproductive freedom" as if destroying fetal life is the problem-free pinnacle of feminist principle. On the other side, George Bush opposes abortion and calls for adoption. Is he calling also for federal money to help couples who would adopt children but who are in debt paying for the ones they already have?

One effort worth honoring is a new project begun this month by Archbishop Roger Mahoney of Los Angeles—a diocesan counseling program to help women deal with post-abortion stress. In Washington, Julius Fogel has long worked to counsel women. The two men have opposing views on the morality of abortion, but they come together in easing the anguish, whether or not it's scientifically proven.●

GREG BLAYDES

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the accomplishments of an exceptional college student in my State. Mr. Greg Blaydes of Greensburg, KY, an agriculture student at Western Kentucky University, was named the most outstanding junior animal science student in the United States. This award was bestowed by the National Block and Bridle Association at the North American Livestock Exposition, the largest all breed livestock show in the world.

Greg stands out as a complete student who not only excels in the classroom, but participates in a tremendous number of other activities. In a decade when agriculture has experienced more than its share of problems and as a result lost some of the more brilliant students to other disciplines, Greg exemplifies the very type of student that agriculture needs.

Much too often in today's society it is the troubled young people that gain all of the notoriety. Therefore, I feel privileged to provide some notoriety to a very deserving young man for his contribution to the field of agriculture and to his community. He will surely prove to be an asset to the American farm community and be successful at whatever future endeavors he might undertake.

I would like to commend Greg for his hard work and subsequently congratulate him on this most distinguished award. I know that his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Blaydes, and the citizens of Greensburg, KY, are deservedly proud of this fine young man.●

BABY PROTECTION OF LAW

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Union Leader, New Hampshire's daily newspaper, on February 4 printed an interesting piece by Charley Reese regarding abortion.

I ask that the article by Mr. Reese be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

SHROUD OF PRIVACY DENIES BABY PROTECTION OF LAW

(By Charley Reese)

I do not know if the Supreme Court will reverse the Roe vs. Wade decision which commercialized abortion on a vast scale, but it should.

Somehow the issue of abortion got injected into the politics of feminism. Those feminists who did so show themselves to be creatures of bizzarre and cruel fantasies passing for thought.

Allowing a woman to abort a female baby serves the purpose of proclaiming woman's equality with men? Bizarre. Equally bizarre is that occasional whimper from emasculated males that since the baby is carried in the woman's body, the fate of the baby is entirely a woman's problem. If that is so before birth, why not after birth? Are we to say that fathers bear no responsibility for children? I don't think even the most ardent feminist would join their docile eunuchs and go that far.

Whatever happened to humanity? To human problems?

Whether to kill or spare a human being is not a simple decision. What's wrong with Roe vs. Wade is that it designates by decree a class of human beings whose lives can be taken on whim.

Immediately an industry of death sprang up. Entrepreneurship and marketing know-how and lust for profit did for abortion what they did for underarm sweat. Teenage discounts. Abort now, pay later. We take Master Card, Visa, etc. Sell 'em, suction 'em, and send 'em home. Hire a lobbyist. Find a way to get federal money. Convince the suckers that this profitable industry is not a profitable industry but rather a sacred right of women, especially of the poor and the minorities. For the suckers with a little more education, the line is that this profitable industry is actually legal and a scientific method to achieve a better quality of life. For the fashionably atheistic or agnostic, the line is that opponents of abortion represent the dark forces of superstition bent on destroying science and returning people to the horrors of the dark ages.

Let us pause for a moment to dispose of that fradulent claim that a fetus is not a human being. Upon conception, the human life created is genetically complete. All that occurs after that is growth. All the mother contributes from that point on is food and oxygen. If it were not human life, no abortion would be necessary since the function of an abortion is to prevent the birth of a human baby by terminating its life and disposing of its remains.

These cold facts of science dictate a moral choice. Does one kill a human being for being an inconvenience? Roe vs. Wade made it legal to do so. The Supreme Court, however, has no moral authority. The Supreme Court conceivably could one day decree that it is legal to kill people who are inconvenient by reason of insanity, illness, mental retardation or age.

Courts determine matters of law but not of conscience. To forget that distinction always puts civilization in peril, for the law, ultimately, is dictated by politics. The law did not present an obstacle to the Nazis. It became the Nazis accomplice.

Note that before Roe vs. Wade and today, organized political efforts are at work, putting the lie to childlike notion that judicial decisions are arrived at in an Olympian laboratory by disinterested and neutral demigods.

All judges are politicians who wear black robes and who owe their jobs to politicians who won elections. Many of them are exhacks and fund-raisers. Don't be a chump and forget that.

As for the Constitution, it is silent on the subject of abortion. That's another thing wrong with Roe vs. Wade. To justify destroying the work of 50 legislatures, the court's majority concocted a right of privacy which is violated when the state prevents abortion.

That, too, is bizarre fantasy posing as thought. The government may invade my privacy to execute a search warrant, to determine my taxes, to tell me how far from my property line my garage may extend, to confiscate my property, but if I am a pregant woman, I am suddenly enveloped in the shroud of privacy which denies the baby the protection of the law.

OPERATION RESCUE

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Washington Post on February 5 printed a very interesting piece by columnist Nat Hentoff in defense of the antiabortion efforts of "Operation Rescue." Mr. Hentoff compares the participants in "Operation Rescue," who struggle against treating prenatal infants as property, with the 19th century abolitionists who struggled against treating Americans of African origin as property.

I ask that Mr. Hentoff's article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 6, 1989]

CIVIL RIGHTS AND ANTI-ABORTION PROTESTS

(By Nat Hentoff)

Planned Parenthood recently assembled 13 distinguished civil rights leaders so that they might express their scorn for the notion that there is any moral connection between the Operation Rescue demonstrations "and the civil rights struggles of the 1960s."

The leaders—including Jesse Jackson, Andrew Young, Julian Bond, John Jacob, Mary King and Roger Wilkins—deplored the pro-lifers' "protests to deny Americans their constitutional right to freedom of choice. They want the Constitution rewritten." And in the unkindest cut of all, these leaders—once themselves demonstrators against laws they considered profoundly unjust—compared the nonviolent Operation Rescue workers to "the segregationists who fought desperately to block black Americans from access to their rights."

Actually, however, a more accurate analogy would link these pro-lifers to the civil rights workers of the 19th century, the Abolitionists, who would not be deterred from their goal of ensuring equal rights for all human beings in this land. They believed, as these 13 civil rights leaders later did, that social change comes only after social upheaval.

What the Abolitionists were opposing was the rule of law—ultimately underlined by the Supreme Court in its Dred Scott decision—that people of African descent, whether free or slaves, had "never been regarded as a part of the people or citizens of the State." They had no rights whatever. They were the property of their owners, no more. The Abolitionists did indeed want the Constitution rewritten.

Now, the pro-lifers, aware that the Supreme Court has declared itself in error before, are protesting the holding in Roe v. Wade that "the unborn have never been recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense." Although that decision also spoke of a time when the fetus becomes viable and then may be protected by the state, in fact we have abortion on demand.

As Justice Harry Blackmun said in Doe v. Bolton—decided on the same as Roe v. Wade—the mother's health is paramount, and that includes, among other things, "physical, emotional, psychological, familial" factors. Abortions can be obtained for these reasons, and more.

So, like the slave, the fetus is property and its owner can dispose of it. Increasingly, for instance, women are undergoing prenatal testing to find out the gender of the developing human being inside them. If it's the wrong sex, it is aborted.

Pro-lifers who maintain the fetus should have equal protection under the law are not limited to those driven by religious convictions. There is the biological fact that after conception, a being has been formed with unique human characteristics. He or she, if allowed to survive, will be unlike anyone born before. From their point of view, therefore, pro-lifers are engaged in a massive civil rights movement. In 16 years, after all, there have been some 20 million abortions.

Some pro-lifers, like some of the abolitionists, feel that nonviolence, however direct, is insufficient. They are of the order of John Brown. As noted by James McPherson in "Battle Cry of Freedom," Brown stalked out of a meeting of the New England Antislavery Society, grumbling, "Talk! Talk! Talk! That will never free the slaves. What is needed is action—action!"

Those relatively few—and invariably isolated—pro-lifers who follow John Brown's flag are surely not in the tradition of Martin Luther King, and the 13 civil rights leaders have reason to keep them at a far distance. But Operation Rescue, and similar demonstrations, are not violent. Entrances are blocked, and so they were in some nonviolent civil rights demonstrations. There is shouting, some of it not very civil, back and forth across the lines, but so there was in the 1960s.

The only actual violence connnected with Operation Rescue has been inflicted by the police, most viciously, in Atlanta where one of the Planned Parenthood's 13 civil rights leaders is mayor. A member of the Atlanta City Council, Josea Williams—himself a close associate of Martin Luther King—has said: "We who were the leaders of the movement in the '50s and '60s are now political leaders. And we are doing the same thing to demonstrators that George Wallace and Bull Connor did to us."

Twelve years ago, another associate of Dr. King argued against the Roe v. Wade thesis that a woman's privacy rights justify abortion. That, he said, "was the premise of slavery. You could not protest the . . . treatment of slaves . . . because that was private."

The civil rights leader who said that was Jesse Jackson—before he became a member of the pro-abortion congregation. By then, he was also a political leader.●

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I submit for printing in the RECORD, the Rules of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry as required by rule XXVI, paragraph 2, of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The rules of the committee follow:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

RULE 1—MEETINGS

1.1 Regular Meetings.—Regular meetings shall be held on the first and third Wednesday's of each month when Congress is in session.

1.2 Additional Meetings.—The Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, may call such additional meetings as he deems necessary.

1.3 Notification.—In the case of any meeting of the Committee, other than a regularly scheduled meeting, the Clerk of the Committee shall notify every member of the Committee of the time and place of the meeting and shall give reasonable notice which, except in extraordinary circumstances, shall be at least 24 hours in advance of any meeting held in Washington, D.C. and at least 48 hours in the case of any meeting held outside Washington, D.C.

1.4 Called Meeting.—If three members of the Committee have made a request in writing to the Chairman to call a meeting of the Committee, and the Chairman fails to call such a meeting within seven calendar days thereafter, including the day on which the written notice is submitted, a majority of the members may call a meeting by filing a written notice with the Clerk of the Committee who shall promptly notify each member of the Committee in writing of the date and time of the meeting.

1.5 Adjournment of Meetings.—The Chairman of the Committee or a subcommittee shall be empowered to adjourn any meeting of the Committee or a subcommittee if a quorum is not present within fifteen minutes of the time scheduled for such meeting.

RULE 2—MEETINGS AND HEARINGS IN GENERAL

2.1 Open Sessions.—Business meetings and hearings held by the Committee or any subcommittee shall be open to the public except as otherwise provided for in Senate Rule XXVI, paragraph 5.

2.2 Transcripts.—A transcript shall be kept of each business meeting and hearing of the Committee or any subcommittee unless a majority of the Committee or the subcommittee agrees that some other form of permanent record is preferable.

2.3 Reports.—An appropriate opportunity shall be given the Minority to examine the proposed text of Committee reports prior to their filing or publication. In the event there are supplemental, minority, or additional views, an appropriate opportunity shall be given the Majority to examine the proposed text prior to filing or publication.

2.4 Attendance.—(a) Meetings. Official attendance of all markups and executive sessions of the Committee shall be kept by the Committee Clerk. Official attendance of all subcommittee markups and executive sessions shall be kept by the subcommittee Clerk.

(b) Hearings.—Official attendance of all hearings shall be kept, provided that, Senators are notified by the Committee Chairman and Ranking Minority Member, in the case of Committee hearings, and by the subcommittee Chairman and Ranking Minority Member, in the case of subcommittee hearings, 48 hours in advance of the hearing that attendance will be taken. Otherwise, no attendance will be taken. Attendance at all hearings is encouraged.

RULE 3—HEARING PROCEDURES

3.1 Notice.—Public notice shall be given of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be held by the Committee or any subcommittee at least one week in advance of such hearing unless the Chairman of the full Committee or the subcommittee determines that the hearing is noncontroversial or that special circumstances require expedited procedures and a majority of the Committee or the subcommittee involved concurs. In no case shall a hearing be conducted with less than 24 hours notice.

3.2 Witness Statements.—Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any subcommittee shall file with the Committee or subcommittee, at least 24 hours in advance of the hearing, a written statement of his or her testimony and as many copies as the Chairman of the Committee or subcommittee prescribes.

3.3 Minority Witnesses.—In any hearing conducted by the Committee, or any subcommittee thereof, the minority members of the Committee or subcommittee shall be entitled, upon request to the Chairman by the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee or subcommittee to call witnesses of their selection during at least one day of such hearing pertaining to the matter or matters heard by the Committee or subcommittee.

3.4 Swearing in of Witnesses.—Witnesses in Committee or subcommittee hearings may be required to give testimony under oath whenever the Chairman or ranking Minority Member of the Committee or subcommittee deems such to be necessary.

3.5 Limitation.—Each member shall be limited to five minutes in the questioning of any witness until such time as all members who so desire have had an opportunity to question a witness. Questions from members shall rotate from majority to minority members in order of seniority or in order of arrival at the hearing.

RULE 4—NOMINATIONS

4.1 Assignment.—All nominations shall be considered by the full Committee.

4.2 Standards.—In considering a nomination, the Committee shall inquire into the nominee's experience, qualifications, suitability, and integrity to serve in the position to which he or she has been nominated.

4.3 Information.—Each nominee shall submit in response to questions prepared by the Committee the following information:

(1) A detailed biographical résume which contains information relating to education, employment, and achievements;

(2) Financial information, including a financial statement which lists assets and liabilities of the nominee; and

(3) Copies of other relevant documents requested by the Committee.

Information received pursuant to this subsection shall be available for public inspection except as specifically designated confidential by the Committee.

4.4 Hearings.—The Committee shall conduct a public hearing during which the nominee shall be called to testify under oath on all matters relating to his or her suitability for office. No hearing shall be held until at least 48 hours after the nominee has responded to a pre-hearing questionnaire submitted by the Committee.

4.5 Action on confirmation.—A business meeting to consider a nomination shall not occur on the same day that the hearing on the nominee is held. The Chairman, with the agreement of the Ranking Minority Member, may waive this requirement.

RULE 5—QUORUMS

5.1 Testimony.—For the purpose of receiving evidence, the swearing of witnesses, and the taking of sworn or unsworn testimony at any duly scheduled hearing, a quorum of the Committee and each subcommittee thereof shall consist of one member.

5.2 Business.—A quorum for the transaction of Committee or subcommittee business, other than for reporting a measure or recommendation to the Senate or the taking of testimony, shall consist of one-third of the members of the Committee or subcommittee, including at least one member from each party.

5.3 Reporting.—A majority of the membership of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for reporting bills, nominations, matters, or recommendations to the Senate. No measure or recommendation shall be ordered reported from the Committee unless a majority of the Committee members are physically present. The vote of the Committee to report a measure or matter shall require the concurrence of a majority of those members who are physically present at the time the vote is taken.

6.1 Roll calls.—A roll call vote of the members shall be taken upon the request of any member.

6.2 Proxies.—Voting by proxy as authorized by the Senate Rules for specific bills or subjects shall be allowed whenever a quorum of the Committee is actually present.

6.3 Polling.—The Committee may poll any matters of Committee business, other than a vote on reporting to the Senate any measures, matters or recommendations or a vote on closing a meeting or hearing to the public, provided that every member is polled and every poll consists of the following two questions:

(1) Do you agree or disagree to poll the proposal; and

(2) Do you favor or oppose the proposal.

If any member requests, any matter to be polled shall be held for meeting rather than being polled. The chief clerk of the committee shall keep a record of all polls.

RULE 7—SUBCOMMITTEES

7.1 Assignments.—To assure the equitable assignment of members to subcommittees, no member of the Committee will receive assignment to a second subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all members of the Committee have chosen assignments to one subcommittee, and no member shall receive assignment to a third subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all members have chosen assignments to two subcommittees.

7.2 Attendance.—Any member of the Committee may sit with any subcommittee during a hearing or meeting but shall not have the authority to vote on any matter before the subcommittee unless he or she is a member of such subcommittee.

7.3 Ex Officio Members.—The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member shall serve as nonvoting ex officio members of the subcommittees on which they do not serve as voting members. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member may not be counted toward a quorum.

7.4 Scheduling.—No subcommittee may schedule a meeting or hearing at a time designated for a hearing or meeting of the full Committee. No more than one subcommittee business meeting may be held at the same time.

7.5 Discharge.—Should a subcommittee fail to report back to the full Committee on any measure within a reasonable time, the Chairman may withdraw the measure from such subcommittee and report that fact to the full Committee for further disposition. The full Committee may at any time, by majority vote of those members present, discharge a subcommittee from further consideration of a specific piece of legislation.

7.5 Application of Committee Rules to Subcommittees.—The proceedings of each subcommittee shall be governed by the rules of the full Committee, subject to such authorizations or limitations as the Committee may from time to time prescribe.

RULE 8—INVESTIGATIONS, SUBPOENAS AND DEPOSITIONS

8.1 Investigations.—Any investigation undertaken by the Committee or a subcommittee in which depositions are taken or supoenas issued, must be authorized by a majority of the members of the Committee voting for approval to conduct such investigation at a business meeting of the Committee convened in accordance with Rule 1.

8.2 Subpoenas.—The Chairman, with the approval of the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee, is delegated the authority to subpoena the attendance of witnesses or the production of memoranda, documents, records, or any other materials at a hearing of the Committee or a subcommittee or in connection with the conduct of an investigation authorized in accordance with paragraph 8.1. The Chairman may subpoena attendance or production without the approval of the Ranking Minority Member when the Chairman has not received notification from the Ranking Minority Member of disapproval of the subpoena within 72 hours, excluding Saturdays and Sundays, of being notified of the subpoena. If a subpoena is disapproved by the Ranking Minority Member as provided in this paragraph the subpoena may be authorized by vote of the members of the Committee. When the Committee or Chairman authorizes subpoenas, subpoenas may be issued upon the signature of the Chairman or any other member of the Committee designated by the Chairman.

8.3 Notice for taking depositions.—Notices for the taking of depositions, in an investigation authorized by the Committee, shall be authorized and be issued by the Chairman or by a staff officer designated by him. Such notices shall specify a time and place for examination, and the name of the Senator, staff officer or officers who will take the deposition. Unless otherwise specified, the deposition shall be in private. The Committee shall not initiate procedures leading to criminal or civil enforcement proceedings for a witness's failure to appear unless the deposition notice was accompanied by a Committee subpoena.

8.4 Procedure for taking depositions.—Witnesses shall be examined upon oath administered by an individual authorized by local law to administer oaths. The Chairman will rule, by telephone or otherwise, on any objection by a witness. The transcript of a deposition shall be filed with the Committee Clerk.

RULE 9—AMENDING THE RULES

These rules shall become effective upon publication in the Congressional Record. These rules may be modified, amended, or repealed by the committee, provided that all members are present or provide proxies or if a notice in writing of the proposed changes has been given to each member at least 48 hours prior to the meeting at which action thereon is to be taken. The changes shall become effective immediately upon publication of the changed rule or rules in the Congressional Record, or immediately upon approval of the changes if so resolved by the Committee as long as any witnesses who may be affected by the change in rules are provided with them.●

29-059 O-90-16 (Pt. 2)

JULIA PAKE

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I ask my colleagues in the Senate to join with me in recognizing a great Alabamian who celebrated her 75th birthday on February 6, 1989.

Julia Pake was born on February 6, 1914, in Selma, AL, and later moved to Montgomery, where she was educated in Montgomery County schools. Hard work and dedication allowed her to attend Huntington College to pursue her goal of becoming on educator. After serving Alabama in her capacity for 20 years as a teacher in the Montgomery school system, Julia retired in 1976.

A dedicated wife and mother, Julia Pake married Lee Pake, Sr., in 1936. Their two children, Jean and Lee Jr., are a tribute to their wonderful parents. Julia is also the grandmother of four grandchildren.

She is known to all as a compassionate and caring woman, a good friend and a concerned citizen. Julia left a remarkable legacy in the many students she touched throughout her career as an educator.

In addition to her unparalleled role in the field of education, Julia Pake's commitment to her community extended into the realm of civic and charitable endeavors. The Montgomery Realtor Association, the Montgomery Museum of Fine Arts, and the Temple Bethel Church Sisterhood Organization are just a few organizations that benefit by her participation.

I would like to wish Julia Pake many happy returns on this special occasion. I hope that her next birthday finds her happy, blessed and as prosperous as this one.●

INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL AND TRADE CENTER AND FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, last Friday, February 3, my Subcommittee on Water Resources, Transportation, and Infrastructure held a hearing on three of the most important Federal building projects ever to be authorized by Congress. One of these is the International Cultural and Trade Center and Federal Office Building to be built at the Federal Triangle site in Washington, DC.

Senator Charles H. Percy chairs the Presidential Commission which oversees this exciting undertaking. I ask that his testimony and accompanying documents be reprinted in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

The material follows:

TESTIMONY BY SENATOR CHARLES H. PERCY BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS, FEBRUARY 3, 1989

Good morning, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, and your very able staff. It is a great pleasure to be with you this morning in my capacity as Chairman of the United States International Cultural and Trade Center Commission. This is my first testimony since leaving the Senate in January 1985.

Having a lifelong involvement in foreign trade, for 28 years as a businessman and also during my 18 years in the Senate, I take this responsibility for promoting world trade, increasing cultural exchange and helping to globalize and internationalize the United States marketing efforts very seriously. This committee is to be congratulated for its leadership in launching such a unique and creative enterprise and I agree with President Reagan, who in his letter to me on April 13, 1988 said, "America faces no more important challenge than improving its competitive position worldwide. The International Cultural and Trade Center, under your leadership, will become an important symbol of our national resolve—public and private—to meet this challenge head on in a constructive, mutually beneficial manner." I ask that the complete text of the President's letter be included in the Record at this point.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 13, 1988.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Charles Percy and Associates, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PERCY: Last August I signed P.L. 100-113, authorizing the United States International Cultural and Trade Center to be built within the Federal Triangle on Pennsylvania Avenue. The International Center will be the centerpiece of what I hope will be one of Washington's most significant Federal buildings.

I would like you to serve as a Member and Chairman of the International Cultural and Trade Center Commission, which will oversee the establishment, operation, and maintenance of the Center. Your background in business, government, and public service; your experience in foreign affairs, and your personal commitment to improving the United States' trade position make you ideally qualified to undertake this important initiative.

The Center provides a unique opportunity for America to develop creative reciprocal arrangements with other nations regarding trade, cultural exchange, and consular activities. The Center's program of informational, cultural, and educational events will provide a basis for expanding or improving accommodations for our Government's endeavors overseas.

You will have the wholehearted support of this Administration as you undertake this assignment. In particular, I am asking the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Agriculture; the Director of the United States Information Agency, the United States Trade Representative, and the Administrator of General Services to give the Center special attention and to commit the necessary resources to make the project successful. I also believe that you will find the Congress, which passed the legislation unanimously, most eager to assist you with this project.

America faces no more important challenge than improving its competitive position worldwide. The International Cultural and Trade Center, under your leadership, will become an important symbol of our national resolve—public and private—to meet this challenge head on in a constructive, mutually beneficial manner.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

I am proud now to introduce the other private sector members of the Commission who were able to join us this morning. First, I am joined at the table by the Commission's distinguished Vice Chairman, the Honorable Harry C. McPherson. Harry played an important part in bringing this exciting project into being when he served as President of the Federal City Council. We also have with us the Honorable Michael Gardner, attorney, Mr. Abe Pollin, entrepreneur, and Mr. Jud Sommer, finance executive. Mr. Donald Brown, developer, who also played an important role in the early days of this project, is out of town today and could not be with us. But these Presidential appointees plus nine ex officio members representing key Cabinet and sub-Cabinet agencies have been hard at work since last April 29th, when the Commission first met, organizing and putting the initial program in place. The Presidential appointees are appropriately bipartisan—three Republicans and three Democrats—and we are working together hard and well. Our Cabinet members have each attended at least one meeting and as often as not, when they could not be present, they were represented by the Deputy Secretary or the equivalent. Our legislation provides that we must meet at least three times per year. In the past ten months we have met formally eight times and approximately ten times informally. I am happy to report that we are off to an excellent hard working start with the Commission. We have benefitted, too from the excellent staff led by Ken Sparks and Mike Newell.

This morning, I will describe some of the programming concepts that are being developed for the Center—both for the long and short term—and, then ask for your counsel and assistance in resolving several items a few of which may require legislation.

Mr. Chairman, for a number of reasons, America has an extremely serious trade problem. We are importing more than we are exporting by more than $10 billion a month. And although significant progress was achieved in 1988, most experts feel that it will be extremely difficult to sharply reduce the deficit in 1989. Just what combination of policies can begin to bring our exports and imports into balance in the relatively short-term is a proper matter for debate. In the long run it is clear that America needs to strengthen its commitment to trade and to actively and aggressively involve more Americans in the process. Today fewer than 2,000 companies account for over 80 percent of all of our exports. Americans must become more export and foreign trade conscious. And that, Mr. Chairman, is where we feel the new Cultural and Trade Center can make its most significant contribution. We see as our central mission elevating the level of awareness of all Americans as to the importance of trade to their own individual and collective well-being. And since trade and cultural understanding are so inextricably bound together, the Center's proposed programs are designed to not only inform our people on the nuts and bolts of trade but to provide that information in as rich a cross-cultural setting as is humanly possible. Only by understanding other cultures—their customs, their needs and their desires—can we truly expect to increase the goods and services which we sell abroad. We intend to build on the excellent start underway with the Department of Commerce, "Export Now" program and the Small Business Administration's (SBA's) nine conferences that have been held across the country with the full support of ST&T.

With this in mind, we are proposing several exciting activities for the new Center and you have in front of you some illustrations that have been prepared to highlight each activity:

A One-stop Trade Information Center—where it will be our goal to be able to answer 90 percent of all of the questions that business executives might ask about getting involved in and strengthening their own foreign activities. And we would arrange through the Center to help the prospective trader get the answers to the other 10 percent of his questions. This will be a public-private partnership involving federal resources from Commerce, Agriculture, the Trade Representative, the Export Import Bank, Customs the Small Business Administration and a host of other departments and agencies, as well as international organizations such as the World Bank and the IMF and private sector groups such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and others. Just one example: The Department of State would issue passports at the Center and those foreign nations requiring visas could issue them at the Center, saving days of cross-town travel.

A Trade and Cultural Conference Center—where actual trade negotiations as well as conferences and meetings will take place. We hope to use the newly renamed Mellon Auditorium which will be interconnected with the Center as a principal meeting hall for this activity. These facilities will be fully equipped with translation services and information systems.

An Education and Training Center—where business people can learn how to trade and how to win friends and markets overseas. Courses would be taught on trade policy, trade finance, trade operations, area studies and language. Working with existing institutions we believe it will be possible to provide thousands of business men and women with badly needed training each year. In addition we hope to work with groups such as the Close Up Foundation, the great universities, institutions and "think tanks" uniquely located in the Nation's Capital to provide learning experiences for thousands of students and young people each year.

A Reception Center—where those countries which lack adequate facilities or all others who wish to, can host a state dinner with appropriate decorum and security. Also, we envision a club facility as part of the reception center where government officials, diplomats and the international community can meet, inform, and entertain one another.

Chancery Annex Office Space—where commercial attaches, consular officials, cultural attaches, trade and other missions as well as representatives offices from international organizations and from each of the 50 states, territories, and major cities will maintain information offices.

An International Exhibit Center—where each of the regions of the world will be represented with a permanent exhibit area featuring a major attraction designed to showcase that part of the world. Around the central attraction, countries will be allowed to have exhibits which promote their culture, their trading interests and tourism. In addition, more than 30,000 square feet of exhibit area will be reserved for special showings of artistic, cultural or trading significance. This area might be used in conjunction with a particular visiting dignitary or it might also be used by institutions such as the Smithsonian or the National Gallery for appropriate international functions.

Specialty shops where merchandise and foodstuffs from around the world will be available for sale. Roughly 130,000 square feet have been reserved for this function, which would make it roughly equal to the Shops area in the Marriott Hotel complex and a little larger than the expanded retail area in the Old Post Office. We believe that the combination of exhibits and specialty retail will be an important international learning experience for millions of Americans who have not had the opportunity to travel abroad or experience these things first-hand.

And, finally—An International Performing and Cinema Arts Center—where the world's great artists and more specialized attractions can be presented on a regular basis. We have planned a 1,500-2,000 seat performing arts theater that could be available for instance—for the celebration of each country's "National Day", or for states' days or other state functions, two film theaters, a rehearsal hall which could also be used for special presentations and a IMAX or special film facility where the trading equivalent of the Smithsonian's "To Fly" would be playing constantly.

And, Mr. Chairman, I should point out that the reciprocity provisions of the Foreign Missions Act which I was pleased to cosponsor would apply to foreign government activity in the Center. In other words, as we provide space to service the needs of foreign governments, we will have the right to seek similar accommodations or some other quid pro quo for our own activities in those countries.

Mr. Chairman, we believe that this combination of facilities in conjunction with compatible U.S. Government offices space such as the State Department's Passport Office, U.S.I.A., (which would include World Net and the Voice of America from which visiting Chiefs of State could conveniently televise and/or broadcast to their own countries), the Woodrow Wilson Center, parts of the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture will make for precisely the kind of internationally focussed program which this country so badly needs and which your committee envisioned. My only regret is that it will take us approximately five years to have the building and these programs ready to go. But you are cordially invited not only to our ground breaking but also to our official opening.

In the meantime, though, we have already offered to work with the Bush Administration to see what kind of programming we can do that would both help America's trade situation now and set the stage for the more comprehensive programming we will be able to undertake in the future. For example, we are exploring hosting a major conference of top business leaders in what we are calling an Export Mobilization Conference later this Spring. We would hope to undertake many conferences and educational programs each year until the Center opens in 1994.

As you can see from this listing of programming concepts, we have been very active during the past ten months, Mr. Chairman, and we will be even more active in the months ahead. I want to compliment the Commission members for their support. I also want to thank the hundreds of volunteers from Roger Stephens and Ambassador Wachtmeister, to many lesser known but terribly knowledgeable people who have helped with this planning. And, of course, I want to state for the record how much we have enjoyed working with our partners in the enterprise—the Pennsylvania Avenue Development Corporation and the General Services Administration. Hank Berliner has been a superb chairman of PADC and we look forward to working closely with Richard Hauser, the new chairman, in the future. The Acting Administrator of GSA—Dick Austin—has been extremely helpful to us as has been his National Capital Regional Administrator Dick Hadsell. And we thank the Aspen Institute and its able President David McLaughlin for cosponsoring at the Wye Plantation a stimulating conference on the goals and objectives of the ICTC.

And finally, I would like to suggest some areas where we need some help from the Committee and from the Congress in order to develop the Center to its fullest potential. First, it is necessary to resolve quickly the matter of the Federal tenancy. As you know, there apparently was some misunderstanding at the time this legislation passed Congress as to whether the Department of Justice was to be accommodated in the Center as the major tenant. Attorney General Meese and the then GSA Administrator signed a memorandum of understanding in March 1988 that would have given nearly all of the Federal office space in the Center to the Justice Department for consolidation of its operations. As I mentioned earlier, the Commission did not come into existence until April 29, 1988 so it was not a party to this agreement. As soon as the Commission was advised as to the nature of the agreement, it voted overwhelmingly to seek USIA as the principal U.S. tenant and to help the Justice Department consolidate elsewhere in the City. You and the leadership of this Committee as well as the leadership of the House Public Works Committee and many other key Congressmen and Senators have come forward to firmly support the ICTC Commission on this matter, but to date the issue is unresolved.

We believe that GSA Director Austin has done all that he could to accommodate the Justice Department but so far without success. The Department of Justice has not seen fit as yet to consider other alternatives. Needless to say we believe that the Center cannot succeed in its mission if space in the Center is occupied to any significant extent by the Department of Justice. Foreign governments simply will not participate with us in this endeavor under those circumstances any more than we would if some government were to present us with a similar offer. The Justice Department, on the other hand, does need to consolidate its activities, and anything the Committee can do to help the Department get consolidated will be appreciated.

We will also need the Committee's help this year with some corrective amendments to the enabling legislation. Many of these were anticipated by the Committee at the time the legislation was being considered. For example, it was impossible to know at the time just how the Commission would wish to organize or what level of funding it would require. As an interim step, a limitation of 15 staff positions, only ten of which could be direct hires, was imposed until the Commission could get organized and describe what would be required to operate. Likewise, an annual limitation of one million dollars to be provided through reprogrammings by our constituent agencies was established as a spending ceiling. Although the Commission can live with these ceilings through September of this year, it is clear that we will need relief to operate effectively next year. We have a management study underway to determine just what staffing and financial needs are anticipated. Peat Marwick is working with us on this and we would expect to be able to share the results within a couple of weeks. Preliminarily, I would expect that we will be asking for a small appropriation annually until the Center is established and able to sustain the Commission's activities.

I also suspect that we will want to operate the day-to-day activities of the Center more like the Kennedy Center or the Smithsonian, as a non-profit entity rather than as a government agency. I would anticipate recommending that the Commission be retained to set policy and to account for Federal funds, but that a non-profit be chartered to handle daily operations. It is our belief that the many business and artistic decisions that the Center will have to make can be better accommodated in that manner.

I also feel that consideration should be given to adding the Secretary of Treasury and the Secretary of Labor to the Commission as ex-officio members. These two important Cabinet officers are key resources for us in planning our trade programs.

Finally, the limitation of ICTC activity to 500,000 occupiable square feet should be removed. The limitation was intended to assure that Federal office space would be the predominate use of the building and that objective will clearly be met. It will simply make program planning and future operations smoother, if we can be guided by project needs rather than by an arbitrary space allocation.

Once again I want to commend you, Mr. Chairman, for your leadership on this important initiative and I hope you share with us the excitement we feel that the Center offers a long term solution to the problem of how to deal with the trade crisis and make America truly competitive once again.

We look forward to working with you and your staff in shaping the necessary legislation for your consideration early this year.

My fellow Commissioners and I will be happy to respond to any questions you may have.

I ask that the list of members of the ICTC Commission be placed in the record at this point.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a very unique school, located in my home State of New York, on its centennial celebration. Webb Institute of Naval Architecture, of Glen Cove, Long Island, is the oldest school of naval architecture and marine engineering.

The school is academically competitive—comparable to MIT and CalTech, and also very selective—Webb's total enrollment is approximately 80. This allows the school to focus all its energies and resources toward its single degree—a bachelor of science in naval architecture and marine engineering. The academic program includes a unique combination of both classroom and practical hands-on training. Its funding is also unique—due to its endowment and other sources of income, Webb Institute is able to operate as one of only three tuition-free private colleges.

In 1989, this prestigious institution celebrates its 100th anniversary. It was originally chartered as Webb's Academy, and founded on April 2, 1989, at Fordham Heights in the Bronx. Webb's Academy became Webb Institute of Naval Architecture in 1920, and 27 years later moved to its present campus in Glen Cove.

Throughout 1989, the school's students, alumni, parents, faculty, and friends will participate in various festivities honoring Webb Institute. I am pleased to join them in their celebration, and am sure that my colleagues join me in wishing them another successful 100 years of academia.●

NEGOTIATED RULEMAKING ACT OF 1989

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 303, The Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989, which was introduced on January 31. This bill largely reflects the excellent work of Senator LEVIN, who is a member of the Governmental Affairs Committee, which I chair. The committee held hearings last Congress on a bill quite similar to this one and reported it to the full Senate, where it passed unanimously by voice vote. Senator LEVIN has long advocated negotiated rulemaking as an alternative to the adversarial process that, at present, characterizes much of agency rulemaking. I commend him for his sustained support for this vital issue of good governance.

Negotiated rulemaking, sometimes called regulatory negotiation—or reg neg—is a process by which an agency develops a rule through convening a committee composed of representatives of the affected interests. The basic notion is that if these representatives sit down together and make a commitment to find areas of agreement, regulations can be designed which are of better quality and which are less susceptible to challenge because the affected parties have participated in their development and have a stake in their success. This approach presents an alternative to the present rulemaking procedure which, under some circumstances, may encourage affected businesses, interest groups, and agencies to adopt extreme positions and adversarial relationships with respect to rules being developed without face-to-face negotiations.

Federal agencies have engaged in successful negotiated rulemakings on a number of occasions. The Environmental Protection Agency has taken the lead in the Federal arena, with negotiations on wood burning stoves, nonconformance penalties for vehicle emissions standards, standards for the protection of farmworkers from pesticide hazards, regulations for permit modifications for hazardous waste facilities, abatement of asbestos in schools, emergency exemptions from pesticide regulations, and underground waste injections. Other agencies which have tried or are in the process of trying negotiated rulemaking include the Federal Aviation Administration—pilot hours, seating disabled airline passengers; the Occupational Safety and Health Administration—worker exposure to benzene and methylenedianiline; the Federal Trade Commission—implementation of the Magnuson-Moss Act; and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission—management of records related to radioactive waste repositories. Some of these negotiations have resulted in proposed rules; others have not. But even where the parties have not reached final agreement on a rule, experience has shown that they are likely to have resolved some areas of conflict and benefited from the exchange of information on the positions and objectives of the other affected parties.

Although agencies are now free to use negotiated rulemaking, some are apparently reluctant to do so without statutory guidance. In addition, confusion sometimes arises over how the negotiated rulemaking process dovetails with normal rulemaking procedures, the Administrative Procedure Act, and the Federal Advisory Committee Act. Agencies and parties asked to participate in negotiated rulemakings have also, on occasion, expressed desire for assistance with the process.

This bill lays out a basic framework for negotiated rulemaking when an agency decides to employ that procedure. It also assigns the Administrative Conference of the United States [ACUS], an independent Federal agency charged with making regulation more efficient, the responsibility to act as a clearinghouse for information and assistance.

Under the bill, to engage in negotiated rulemaking, an agency would establish an advisory committee with representatives of the agency and the affected interests. The advisory committee would be chartered and operate under the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act to assure openness, proper recordkeeping and cost controls. The rulemaking committee would conduct its negotiations under the leadership of a mediator or facilitator who would assist the parties in reaching consensus on a rule. If the parties do achieve consensus, the agency would publish the rule in the Federal Register, in a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking under existing procedures for public notice and comment. If the parties do not reach final agreement on a rule, they file a report summarizing the issues they were able to resolve and explaining their conflicting concerns.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989. It presents a considered and effective alternative to contentious and litigious rulemaking, which unfortunately dominates much of our regulatory agencies' work.●

CAPITAL GAINS UPDATE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues a copy of a recent column by Jodie T. Allen, which appeared in the Washington Post several weeks ago. It describes one way that a capital gains tax cut could be accomplished. Quite simply, Mr. Allen proposes that marginal tax rates on short-term capital gains be increased as the price for enacting a reduction in long-term capital gains rates.

As my colleagues will recall, the Tax Code used to allow a 60-percent exclusion for capital gains. After tax reform, capital gains are treated no differently for tax purposes than ordinary income. As a consequence, investors are more likely to avoid riskier, long-term investments and opt for investments favoring a current return.

In the 99th and again the 100th Congress, I introduced legislation (S. 444) to restore a two-tier tax on capital gains. For assets held more than 1 year, my proposal would allow a tax exclusion of 40 percent of the capital gain, and for those held more than 3 years, a 60-percent exclusion. I plan to reintroduce my bill again this year.

As one of the founders of the Capital Gains Coalition here in Congress, I am anxious to hear debate on alternative approaches to reducing the capital gains tax rate. The Capital Gains Coalition, which began meeting early in the 100th Congress, represents a bipartisan effort to reduce the rate on capital gains. The coalition recently held its organizational meeting for the 101st Congress and is off to a good start. I encourage those of my colleagues with an interest in this issue, to join the coalition.

As a businessman, I well know the importance of the capital gains exclusion. We must encourage long-term investment and restore a system which does not punish those who have built their own business or farm, or attempted to plan for their retirement.

Mr. President, I ask that Mr. Allen's column, "How the Bush Administration Could Achieve a Capital Gains Tax Cut," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

HOW THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION COULD ACHIEVE A CAPITAL GAINS TAX CUT

(By Jodie T. Allen)

During his campaign, George Bush floated the idea of cutting the tax on capital gains to a scant 15 percent from its current maximum of 33 percent. That idea seems likely to get short shrift from a Congress that sees ahead the grim task of raising, rather than cutting, taxes to reduce the budget deficit. But Bush might end up getting at least part—the better part—of what he wants if the issue of capital gains were taken up in a nonbudget context.

A capital gains tax revision plan that combined a cut in taxes on long-term investment gains (for everyone) with a hike in the levy on short-term gains (for the very rich) could possibly win both White House and Capitol Hill support. The most likely opportunity for the development of such a plan would be in the course of hearings—already scheduled by the tax-writing committees in both houses—on the recent rash of mergers, acquisitions and leveraged buyouts that has rocked financial markets.

Bush has already made a good start toward amicable dealings with key congressional members and committees. Ways and Means staffers were both surprised and charmed when, on their first day of business this year, Bush dropped by to chat briefly and cordially with not only the committee's powerful chairman, Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), but a handful of the top committee aides as well.

Committee staff generally accept the idea that ultimately a budget package will be worked out that will include some revenue hikes. But given Bush's still-adamant opposition to any tax increases, they wonder how that will come about.

"I can see where we're going," said one Ways and Means aide, "but I still can't see how we're going to get there from here."

The aide concedes, however, that the capital gains tax revisions might conceivably be taken up in a nonbudget context. And the peculiar structure of the tax—as it emerged from the 1986 tax overhaul—provides ample reason for revision on the grounds of both equity and efficiency.

The equity problems arise from the peculiar rate structure put in place in 1986. In order to provide the lowest possible income tax rate for very wealthy individuals—who benefitted most from the tax shelters that the measure sought to eliminate—but also keep revenue losses within bounds, the tax writers introduced a "bubble" in the rate schedule.

For example, single individuals with taxable income above $43,150 face a federal tax rate of 33 percent on income between that level and $100,480. For a married couple, the 33 percent rate applies to taxable income between $71,900 and $171,090. The tax rate then falls to 28 percent on income above those upper limits and stays there indefinitely.

Tax committee staffers point out that the situation, though anomalous, isn't completely unfair because taxpayers with total income in the 33 percent marginal tax range still have at least slightly lower average tax rates than, say, Donald Trump or Leona Helmsley. Moreover, at least in the popular view, the 33 percent income range is heavily populated with free-spending yuppies, who are nobody's favorite charity.

The bubble's strange properties are thrown into sharper relief when one considers the situation of a family of relatively modest income that decides to take a one-time capital gain on a long-held asset—say, a block of stock or piece of property. Perhaps even more likely, the asset in question is a fair-sized home owned by a couple whose children—an asset that represents the couple's main store of accumulated wealth.

Capital gains, remember, now count as ordinary income for tax purposes. Even if the couple is eligible to take its once-in-a-lifetime $125,000 exclusion on the sale of a house, today's high real estate prices could very well push the couple into the 33 percent tax bracket. And so, the couple might end up forking over one out of three dollars of much of the profit to Uncle Sam (plus another cut for local tax authorities). Meanwhile, the high-flying Wall Street arbitrageur pays only 28 percent on the several-million-dollar profit he made on last week's stock market gamble.

The situation seems especially unfair since the apparent capital gain realized on the long-held asset may, thanks to inflation, actually be a capital loss. The purchasing power of the dollar has fallen by roughly half since 1975. Stock bought that year for, say, $50,000 and sold this year for $100,000 has not, in fact, appreciated at all. It returns no real gain to the seller.

But under current law, that seller might still have to pay a tax of up to 33 percent on his nominal gain. This is hardly an encouragement for the sort of long-term investment which, presumably, the president-elect hopes to encourage by his proposal to cut capital gains rates.

On the other hand, the raider or greenmail artist is presumably not the sort of investor whose welfare most concerns Mr. Bush. Indeed, many well-respected financial analysts and executives see considerable danger in the proliferation of novel financial instruments, as well as the merger, acquisition and leveraged-buyout mania that, quite apart from any fundamental benefits that may ultimately accrue from corporate reorganizations, generate enormous profits for deal-makers, brokers, lawyers and other middlemen.

Writing in the Outlook section of the Post this month, Wall Street guru Henry Kaufman and former Treasury secretary Michael Blumenthal both recommended a boost in taxes on short-term gains to refocus financial markets on long-term values. And Leslie Douglas, a governor of the Securities Exchange Association, further recommended taxing short-term profits of tax-exempt institutions, which now provide much of the capital for speculative ventures.

One way to address all these concerns would be to: 1) raise and extend the tax on all short-term capital gains to the 33 percent that now applies to only a few recipients; but 2) adjust the long-term capital gains computation to take account of the value-eroding effect of inflation. That's a reform that tax experts—and legislators such as Sen. William Armstrong (R-Colo.) and Rep. Bill Archer (R-Tex.) have long recommended.

A conceptually perfect job would require indexing other forms of investment income as well and would be overly complex and, possibly, expensive to the Treasury. But introducing even a crude approximation into the tax code would be a great improvement over the current regime with its perverse incentives and peculiar impacts. And if, in the process, some extra revenue dollars found their way into the federal treasury, who would complain?

CLOSED CAPTION BROADCASTING OF SENATE FLOOR PROCEEDINGS

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, for the more than 20 million Americans who are hearing impaired, the only way to follow a Senate debate is to read it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—the day after it takes place. The Senate voted over 2 years ago to televise Senate floor proceedings, but that agreement did not provide for closed caption broadcasting for the hearing impaired.

Closed captioning is a process by which the audio portion of a television program is translated into captions, or subtitles, which appear on the TV screen. Hearing impaired viewers can then read what they cannot hear. The subtitles can only be seen on a TV set equipped with a special decoding device.

Closed captioning brings television's world of information, learning and entertainment to individuals with hearing impairments. It is a wonderful technology.

I believe it is time to use that technology to allow individuals with hearing impairments to participate more fully in their government. That is why I am very pleased to be an original cosponsor of Senator DOLE's resolution to implement closed caption broadcasting of the Senate floor proceedings.

For years I have advocated the use of new technologies to help people with hearing impairments enjoy what many of us take for granted. In 1976, I initiated an effort, supported by Members of both Houses of Congress, urging the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] to allow the television networks to reserve line 21 of their broadcast signal on a permanent basis for closed caption television.

I am proud to say that the FCC granted that authority in 1976. Soon after, Texas Instruments developed the decoding technology to translate television dialog into a running script. Although that technology is available, the cost of the decoding devices has been prohibitive for many.

I introduced legislation to make access to the decoders more affordable, and I worked with other Senators to secure $1.5 million for closed caption decoder development in the fiscal year 1985 appropriations bill. This support for research and development has brought the cost of decoders down significantly.

There is so much we can do to encourage equal access for the hearing impaired. In 1986 I installed a toll-free telephone line for the hearing impaired in my Burlington office. Through the use of a teletypewriter, Vermonters with hearing impairments can call my office to get help with a problem, request information or just speak their mind.

A democracy cannot thrive unless its people participate. The Senate has the opportunity to expand participation in the democratic process by bringing the business of the world's most deliberative body to those whose only barrier is that they cannot hear. I will work hard with Senator DOLE and the leadership to gain support for closed caption broadcasting of the Senate.●

CONFIRMATION OF MANUEL LUJAN AS SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, last week the Senate considered the nomination of Mr. Manuel K. Lujan to the position of Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

In the spirit of bipartisanship, and following the favorable recommendation delivered by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, I voted in favor of Mr. Lujan's confirmation. I did so, however, with reservation.

My criticism is not meant as a personal attack against Mr. Lujan. In fact, I find the Secretary-designate amiable, hard working, and dedicated to public service.

My criticism focuses on his voting record. During his 20-year tenure in the House, Mr. Lujan compiled a voting record on environmental issues that I would consider disturbing.

At this point in the confirmation process, the League of Conservation Voter's assessment of Mr. Lujan's environmental voting record is familiar. Out of a possible 100 points, he averaged merely 18—a score approached by few of his colleagues.

He supported, and pledged his continued support, for oil and gas exploration in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge. Mr. Lujan voted twice in favor of weakening amendments to the Endangered Species Act. The Secretary-designate has been a consistent foe of clean air legislation. In short, he opposed environmental initiatives offered from both sides of the aisle.

I am confident that Mr. Lujan is aware of the significance of the position of Secretary of the Interior. I also hope he is aware of the extraordinary challenge this position represents today.

Not only will he have to balance the need to conserve our natural resources at a time when they are in such demand, as every Secretary of the Interior has had to do;

Not only must he manage these resources with equal attention to productivity and conservation, as every Secretary of the Interior has had to do;

Not only must he conform to the current budget climate at a time when Federal support for public projects is so much in demand, as every Secretary of the Interior has had to do;

Not only must he carry out the duties ascribed to him by law as Secretary of the Interior;

He must do more than was ever expected of a Secretary of the Interior. At no time before has our environment faced the crises it does now; it will not withstand the neglect of another environmentally disinterested administration.

I encourage Mr. Lujan to rise and meet this extraordinary challenge as Secretary of the Interior. I look forward to working with him to effectively address the issues threatening our environment today.●

ELMER FEDDER

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, a longtime friend of mine, Elmer Fedder, the editor and publisher of the Winchester Times in Winchester, IL, sent an open letter to the Governor of Illinois, our colleague Senator DIXON, and myself, as well as to a number of other people who are officials in the State and Nation.

At this point, I ask to have printed in the RECORD his letter, and I urge my colleagues in the Senate and the House to read the letter by Elmer Fedder.

What Elmer Fedder talks about for the State of Illinois, calling on leadership in the State, is just as true at the Federal level. We now have a President who says he wants to go down in history as the education President. We have a Congress that, I think, is willing to provide leadership in the field of education.

But we have not zeroed in on what our specific goals should be.

I sense that we now move somewhat at whim rather than having a plan that can really lift the level of education in the Nation, with the primary emphasis at the State and local level, but with the Federal Government assisting and providing leadership.

I am taking the liberty of sending a copy of Elmer Fedder's letter and this statement in the RECORD to the Secretary of Education, Lauros Cavazos. Secretary Cavazos is the person who would have to provide the leadership. I do not believe that any of the educational organizations, by themselves, have a broad enough base to do it.

The most effective commission I have ever served on had a length of 1 year. That was the President's Commission on Foreign Languages and International Studies, chaired by James Perkins, the former president of Cornell University.

I am not sure whether a commission appointed by Secretary Cavazos to report back in 1 year is the answer, but it is the best answer I can think of off the top of my head.

This commission should have a few key Members of the House and the Senate, plus members of the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, the National School Board Association, the National Parent-Teachers Association, the principals, administrators, and representatives of nonpublic schools, and so forth.

A dream for what American education ought to be is needed. And the time to start dreaming is now.

The letter follows:

[From The Winchester (IL) Times, Nov. 17, 1988]

AN OPEN LETTER

(To Gov. James R. Thompson, Lt. Gov. George H. Ryan, Secretary of State Jim Edgar, Attorney General Neil Hartigan, State School Supt. Ted Sanders, Senator Alan J. Dixon, Senator Paul Simon, Congressman Richard J. Durbin, 18th Dis., Congressman Robert H. Michel, 20th Dis., Speaker of the House Michael J. Madigan, Senate President Phillip J. Rock, State Sen. Vince Demuzio, State Rep. Tom Ryder)

Illinois got the news (note considered good) on Nov. 19 that the Super Collider was going to be built in Texas.

I can remember that all, or most of you, were listed on a letter in support of the Super Collider project for Illinois. I can remember thinking that it was great that the political leaders of the state could agree on something like this. And it appears that all of you worked hard to get the Super Collider for the state.

There has been great disappointment since the announcement was made. I thought of writing this letter when the earlier support was shown for the Super Collider. Now that the determination has been made, my request is even more important, and it is this:

Wouldn't it be great if all of you could agree on supporting education in Illinois as unanimously as you have on the Super Collider? What could be more important to the future of our state than to make education the number one priority, make it a goal that would lift this state to new heights.

I do not harbor any delusions that this would be as quick a fix as landing the Super Collider for the state but it would be a "better fix" for generations to come.

We need to have education become a state and national goal, much as John Kennedy did in declaring putting a man on the moon in the 1960's. That was great and it gave our nation a purpose, a goal.

Education needs to have better teachers, turned out by colleges that will increase the standards to become good teachers.

Education needs to have better pay for teachers to keep them in the profession.

Education needs to become as exciting as putting an American on the moon.

The answers won't come easy. But the ultimate goal is one that would be much better for our state in the long run than the Super Collider could ever be.

I do know that the present emphasis on education is good but not good enough. It has been funded sporadically and there is not the continuity that there should be.

Let's have a group of ordinary citizens, teachers, school board members, college level professors, administrative representatives and students put their heads together and come up with a long term plan and let's stick to it. Now our efforts are fragmented, disjointed, without real purpose or meaning.

Can we rise above all of this and give the state a really good education system? That answer can only come from you.●

HELP FOR A LIBRARIAN

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, The American Civil Liberties Union is receiving more than the usual amount of attention these days.

The Peoria Journal Star recently had a story about Kay Thompson and some teachers in Chicago who said some things that may not have been popular and may not even have been right but who were defended by the American Civil Liberties Union.

I urge my colleagues to read this fine editorial, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

[From the Peoria (IL) Journal Star, Oct. 8, 1988]

HELP FOR A LIBRARIAN

The Chicago media have been reporting the story of a high school librarian who was removed from her position for the outrageous sin of speaking her mind about education.

Kay Thompson was among three faculty members transfered out of Roberto Clemente High School for comments reported in a newspaper story about the school and the heavily Puerto Rican neighborhood surrounding it. The trio talked about the difficulties of teaching in an area where students are caught up in gang wars, where large numbers of girls are pregnant, where parents are indifferent and family life is often unstable. Problems like these, the professionals said, at least partly explain why Clemente students' achievement scores rank near the bottom in the city, which means they must be abyssmal on a nationwide scale.

What Thompson said was basically this: The students' parents do not do enough to motivate their children. Their homes place too little value on academic success. There is not enough talk about college and the future. For these reasons, parents deserve at least as much blame for the students' failure as do their teachers.

She's not the first person to say that kind of thing and certainly not the only one to believe it. Educators everywhere recognize the extent to which a student's family helps determine how well he succeeds in school.

But parents of Clemente students did not like hearing what Thompson and the others had to say. They organized protests and boycotts, to which the Chicago school board eventually responded by transferring the three teachers. Thompson refused to acquiesce. She took her case to a federal judge, who ordered her reinstated until her suit can be heard. Meanwhile, the parents continue to march and shout, urging among other things that students cut classes one day a week until the "racist" librarian is gone from the staff.

Not all the students agree with the parents. Many still at Clemente and others now in college have been outspoken in praising their librarian for inspiring them to succeed.

Thompson doesn't intend to give up without a fight. But like most teachers, she doesn't have a great deal of money to hire an attorney to push a case for the sake of principle, even when the principle is among those most basic to this nation—the right to speak freely without repercussion. Fortunately, she found a lawyer willing to represent her for free.

The organization the lawyer works for does that kind of thing in the interest of policing the Constitution and the American way of life. It does so even when the causes are themselves unpopular and those who expouse them are under attack; popular causes usually do not need defending. It does so even when it becomes the victim of attacks by politicians who use McCarthyesque techniques not to advance the interests of the country, but to get themselves elected.

The organization is the American Civil Liberties Union.●

BLACK SASH MOVEMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on Sunday, December 25, a day set aside to remember the less fortunate, the New York Times had a story about the Black Sash movement in South Africa.

I ask that this article he reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the end of my remarks.

There are some signs of hope in South Africa, despite a government that is oppressive and stubborn in its unwillingness to provide justice for all its citizens.

One of those hopeful signs is an organization called Black Sash.

When I was in South Africa last year, I had the opportunity to meet with some of the leaders of Black Sash.

They are quietly trying to stand up for justice and change in South Africa.

I applaud their efforts, and I urge my colleagues to read this article.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 25, 1988]

WHITE SOUTH AFRICAN WOMEN STEP OFF THEIR PEDESTALS TO FIGHT APARTHEID

(By Christopher S. Wren)

PORT ELIZABETH, SOUTH AFRICA, December 24.—Four mornings a week, the hard wooden benches at the Black Sash advice office here overflow with the bewildered, the desperate and the defeated.

The clients are poor and black, and they turn to a handful of white volunteers to help them get a job, a home, a pension check or just a little justice from a system stacked against the powerless.

With one organization after another restricted under the national state of emergency, much of the open, legal struggle for civil rights in South Africa has fallen upon Black Sash, an organization of middle-class white women who, along with the churches, constitute one of the most effective protests against apartheid today.

"I suppose it's by default," said Judy Chalmers, a Black Sash worker in Port Elizabeth. "They've detained everybody else."

These women consider themselves altogether ordinary, but their activities range well beyond noblesse oblige. They solicit depositions on police beatings, monitor trials, search for those detained without charges, dispense advice on surviving apartheid and mount silent protests wearing the black sash of mourning that gave their organization its name.

In its three decades, Black Sash has matured from a well-meaning society of leisured ladies into a feistier vanguard of women juggling careers as well as families, more impatient with a system that coddled them into adulthood.

The women of Black Sash are often heckled, sometimes detained and occasionally jailed. Some have had telephones tapped and car tires slashed. Bricks have been thrown through their windows and dead cats hung from their doorknobs.

Yet they continue to challenge the complacency of other white South Africans, who consider them ingrates for rattling the foundations of a society that lavished them with privilege.

"The greatest conversation-stopper at a dinner party is to announce that you're a member of Black Sash," said Rosemary Meny-Gilbert, who runs the Black Sash office in Cape Town, "Within the white community, we are seen as leftists, even pink. Among blacks, we are seen as moderates."

The Government has let Black Sash survive while closing down other anti-apartheid groups in part because white South African society has perched its women on pedestals. The police find it awkard to pack the paddy wagons with well-bred troublemakers who look like their mothers or sisters.

Mary Burton, Black Sash's president, recalled being detained at Pollsmoor Prison after a protest in Cape Town. "When I was in the cells, there were a couple of warders who could have been my children and who found it very difficult," Mrs. Burton said, "They hesitated closing the door until they had to do it."

That these women would choose to range the wretched black slums alone or in pairs strikes some whites as foolhardy. In one unruly black township outside Port Elizabeth, soldiers expressed concern for the safety of Sandy Stewart, a Black Sash member passing through their roadblock.

"The reason we're not afraid is that we don't come in carrying a gun," she snapped back. "Why don't you try it?"

Fear of ridicule inhibits some women from joining Black Sash, as does concern for their families.

"I've never known a Black Sash woman to be stopped by her husband's career, but if you're actively involved, you need a very supportive husband," Mrs. Meny-Gilbert said. She said her husband, Christian, a civil engineer who helped look after their two children, "always wants to know where I'm going."

MEN ARE ASSOCIATES

The men who offer support, usually husbands or boyfriends, are permitted to become associates, but not full members. "We've discussed the idea that men should come in, and there was a feeling there was more protection as a women's organization," said Joan Grover, a Cape Town dowager who joined Black Sash after immigrating from Rhodesia in 1957.

Some members interviewed admitted that joining Black Sash had built their self-esteem though they dismissed feminism as a narcissistic indulgence. "It's hard to claim you're oppressed when you see all around you people who are so much worse off," Mrs. Burton said.

Black Sash was born in the mid-1950's, when some upper-class white women in Johannesburg organized an automobile caravan to Cape Town, the seat of Parliament, to protest Government plans to revise the Constitution.

From its early peak of 10,000, membership has declined to a hard core of 2,000, a fraction in a white population of 4.5 million. Almost all come from the English-speaking community. So few Afrikaner women joined that Black Sash stopped printing literature in Afrikaans.

Volunteers have different reasons for joining. "Some are religious but just as many are not," Mrs. Chalmers said. "Some have a personal experience that pushes them."

Others decide they are fed up with apartheid. Their common purpose, Mrs. Chalmers said, was as "thinking people who believe South Africa has got to become a democratic state if we're not going to be destroyed."

She joined Black Sash in 1981 after concluding that traditional politics were ineffective. She began helping in black townships with her sister, Molly Blackburn, a Black Sash veteran whose fearlessness was legendary in the Eastern Cape.

One of many Blackburn anecdotes recalls her hearing that police had detained a black teen-ager during unrest in Uitenhage a couple of years ago. Mrs. Blackburn invaded the police station and discovered the youth handcuffed to a table; two policemen were beating him while a third chewed on a take-out order of fried chicken. "Just what is going on here?" she demanded in the voice a schoolmistress would use to reprimand naughty pupils. The cowed policemen let her march out with their battered prisoner in tow.

When Mrs. Blackburn was killed in an automobile crash in December 1985, black mourners showed up by the thousands for her funeral on a hot day. "It was the most incredible event," Mrs. Burton recalled. "The streets of Port Elizabeth filled with black people from all the little towns. I'm sure the whites thought the revolution had come."

Since her sister's death, Mrs. Chalmers has walked point for Black Sash in the Eastern Cape, a conservative region as unforgiving of civil rights workers as the Mississippi Delta was a quarter-century ago. But she is welcome in the black communities around her native Port Elizabeth.

The women of Black Sash have found audacity their best weapon. "I feel like an aging lioness surrounded by jackals," Mrs. Chalmers said. "They still don't know how to handle me."●

REFLECTIONS ON "THE UGLY DECADE"

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the beginning of a new year is a good time to look back and look forward, a good time to reassess and to reflect. In a column I write for newspapers in my State, I've done a little reflecting on the decade were about to complete. I ask to have it reprinted in the RECORD.

REFLECTIONS ON "THE UGLY DECADE"

Getting away to my home in rural southern Illinois for the holidays provided an opportunity to breathe some clean air, saw a few logs for our fireplace and reflect on what is going right in the nation and what is going wrong.

Novelist James Michener has called this "the ugly decade." More pointed, columnist William Rentschler writes, "We wallow today in * * * the cesspool of unrestrained greed."

One of America's wealthiest persons, industrialist H. Ross Perot, gave a talk in which he said we're going to have to learn to care more about each other or the nation will be on a permanent road of decline.

One of the things that is happening in the nation is that the weakest and poorest among us are less and less on our doorstep. We shudder when we see people sleeping on the streets, but people who face almost as desperate a situation, but who have shelter, are hidden. We increasing are segregating the nation on the basis of economics.

And what is true within the nation is true of the world. If you compare defense expenditures as a percentage of national income, the United States at 5.8 percent is far ahead of Western European nations, about two and one-half times the percentage expenditure of Canada, and almost six times the percentage expenditure of Japan.

But then you compare what we are spending on foreign economic assistance to help the world's desperately poor and we are behind those same nations. The Netherlands and Norway spend five times as much as we do on this, relative to national income.

We spend one-fifth of 1 percent of our national income on economic assistance to other countries. After World War II, under the Marshall Plan, we spent 2.9 percent of our national income—more than ten times as much as we do today.

Why the change?

Is the United States poorer today? No.

Is poverty around the world less of a problem? No.

The difference is after World War II your congressional representatives and your Senators could come home and say to the Schmidts and the Scarianos and many others in this country of European ancestry, "I'm helping your relatives."

But now the poor live in nations like Sudan, Bangladesh, Mauritania—and virtually no one comes up to political leaders and asks, "What are you doing to help my relatives?" The political sex appeal is gone for economic assistance.

And that problem is compounded by leadership that too often says, "Look out for yourself. Don't worry about others."

It is not said that bluntly, but that is the message.

And so we have learned to tolerate urban school systems that should shame us. Families desperate for jobs are not our neighbors, and so we pay little attention. They're on Indian reservations or in the inner city or in isolated rural pockets of poverty. None of the 38 million Americans without any health insurance is likely to be in our circle of friends.

We have just gone through a holiday season when Christians make much of Christmas and Jews make much of Hanukkah.

We are very public in our professed piety.

But the caring and selflessness that our religious call for too often are lackng.

Theologian Donald Shriver has written, "There are not many people in public life of whom one can say, 'They talk as though their faith is so much a part of them that they don't have to make public reference to the fact.' "

Public piety has replaced genuine concern.

The beginning of a new year is a good time to remind ourselves that ultimately we are one family, and when anyone in that family hurts, all of us hurt.

I hope we can become "a kinder, gentler nation," not just with our words, but with our deeds.●

DEALING WITH OUR MASONIC DESTINATIONS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, Francis G. Paul, the Sovereign Grand Commander of Free Masonry in the United States, wrote a column in their publication indicating some positive, constructive steps that are being taken by the Supreme Council of the Masonic organization.

The Masons have contributed immensely to enriching this Nation.

Anyone who has visited a hospital for crippled children supported by Masons understands in very human terms what has been done.

And I have seen them reach out to build bridges of understanding. A very practical example is in Shawneetown, IL, where the Masons and the Knights of Columbus get together annually for a fundraising dinner for good causes in that area.

There are a host of other examples that could be cited.

I ask that the statement of the Sovereign Grand Commander, Francis G. Paul, be printed in the RECORD.

All of us need to reexamine how we can play a more constructive role in building a better America.

The Masons have set a fine example by reaching out and making their fine organization an even finer one.

The statement follows:

"Obstacles are those frightful things you see," someone wrote, "when you take your eyes off your goals."

One of the best, most efficient ways to stay where you are or even go backward is to focus on the obstacles. They are the distractions that keep us from becoming the best we can—both personally and as a fraternity.

When you and I take a risk, we test ourselves. When we decide to solve a problem, we face the possibility of failure. When we step out to break new ground, we know the voices of the critics will be raised. Safety is certain, at least for awhile, if we do nothing.

Yet, Masonry teaches us to be dissatisfied—discontent—with the status quo. Freemasonry challenges us to reach for the ideals of justice, brotherly love, and improvement—individually and as a fraternity.

In its annual report to the Supreme Council in September, the Committee on the General State of the Rite broke new ground. While applauding our many successes, the committee urges us to set our eyes on our destinations, our goals.

Race and ethnic groups. "This committee carefully searched our constitutions and ritual," the report reads, "finding nothing to indicate that we should deprive membership in our fraternity to any man because of race, color or creed." Pointing out that this is indeed a difficult subject, yet it is one "that has been avoided for too many years."

The report continues, "It is the committee's opinion that unadmitted, residual racial bias hurts us, sapping our strength, and depriving us of men with strong leadership ability."

Although long overdue, the Supreme Council has elected the first black member to receive the 33° at our next annual meeting. "In today's society, we can no longer 'stone-wall' this vital issue if we really intend to practice what we preach—brotherly love—in this wonderful nation of people with many and diverse origins," states the committee report.

Sovereignty of the Grand Lodges. Nothing that the framers of our U.S. Constitution recognized that the survival of the young nation depended on a balance of authority between the individual states and a federal government, the committee indicates that "there is a lesson to be learned" for our fraternity.

The committee has stepped forward with a call for "some central governance group—a policy-setting body with executive power to provide cohesive, coordinated management of the total Masonic fraternity."

If we are to grow and if we are to meet the challenges of today and those of the 21st century, we must have a national approach for Freemasonry.

Penalties of the obligations and balloting. "It is becoming increasingly apparent that thinking candidates are have trouble giving honest assent to the current penalties contained in the obligations," reports the committee. "Oaths required deal with 'ancient' penalties which are obsolete, unbelievable, unacceptable and simply not relevant in today's society."

Oaths taken anywhere on a Bible are not "symbolic." Our creditability as a fraternity suffers when we attempt to "explain away" our ancient Masonic penalties. As a result, the committee urges all Bodies of Freemasonry to commence an "orderly rewrite and substitution of the onerous penalties in the various obligations of our order."

Finally, the committee addressed the balloting issue. "With our prevailing procedures of admitting new members only by unanimous, favorable ballot, we leave too much room for private pique and spite, all of which serves to deny true liberty and justice." In order to rectify this situation, the committee has called for the Supreme Council to amend its Constitutions to require three negative votes to reject a candidate for all of our degrees, and urges all Masonic Bodies to give this suggestion immediate attention."

For men whose eyes are on the goals, there are no obstacles, just opportunities to lead the way. The committee report received a standing ovation. Evidently, we are ready to move forward.

We may never achieve perfection, but we can find more perfect ways for justice, brotherly love, and improvement to prevail in Freemasonry—and the world. When you think about it, the only frightful obstacle is our unwillingness to act on our Masonic ideals.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FULL FUNDING FOR DRUG PROGRAMS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, January 27, 1989, I introduced H.R. 705, the Antidrug Abuse Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989. Joining me as original cosponsors were Representatives GILMAN, COUGHLIN, ENGLISH, FAUNTROY, GUARINI, SCHEUER, TRAFICANT, LARKIN SMITH of Mississippi, DORNAN, WYDEN, and LAWRENCE SMITH of Florida.

This bill would provide $1.786 billion to fully fund the Antidrug Abuse Act of 1988. It also would express the sense of Congress that Federal antidrug efforts should be fully funded in fiscal year 1990 at the increased levels Congress envisioned in the 1988 Omnibus Drug Act.

H.R. 705 does not include any specific proposals for raising additional revenues. Rather, it represents a statement from the Congress that our Nation's war on drugs must be made a top priority and that we are ready to work with President Bush and his new administration to find a way to fully fund a comprehensive approach to fighting drugs. I urge Members to support enactment of this critical supplemental appropriation.

Senator MOYNIHAN has introduced a companion measure in the Senate (S.26). On Wednesday, January 25, we held a joint press conference to announce the introduction of these bills. I would like to include in the RECORD at this time my statement explaining the need for this bill as well as the text of the legislation and a table summarizing the amounts provided by the bill:

STATEMENT OF THE HONORABLE CHARLES B. RANGEL, CHAIRMAN, SELECT COMMITTEE ON NARCOTICS ABUSE AND CONTROL, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON THE INTRODUCTION OF THE ANTIDRUG ABUSE SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT OF 1989

Good Morning.

Today, I am pleased to announce the introduction of legislation to fully fund the Antidrug Abuse Act of 1988.

Last Friday, George Bush was inaugurated as President of the United States.

President Bush has promised us "a kinder, gentler America," and we in the Congress are ready to help him fulfill that solemn promise.

I can think of no better way to inaugurate "a kinder, gentler America" than to stop the plague of drug abuse and drug trafficking that so sorely afflicts our nation.

I can think of no better way to begin "a kinder, gentler America" than to make drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation readily available for the millions of our fellow citizens who need and want help in ending their drug addiction and dependence; to offer hope for the future instead of unending despair and misery to drug addicts, their families, and loved ones; to end the crime that addicts must now commit to support their desperate habits.

I can think of no better way to start "a kinder and gentler America" than to end the constant fear that millions of Americans live with every day, trapped in neighborhoods terrorized by violent drug traffickers who hawk their poison openly on the streets and murder wantonly for control of lucrative drug markets, in brazen defiance of the law.

I can think of no better way to make "a kinder, gentler America" than to stop the record amounts of illicit drugs pouring across our borders and flooding our country with death and destruction.

I can think of no better way to fulfill the promise of "a kinder, gentler America" than to commit ourselves to a massive, public drug abuse prevention and education program to teach our citizens, and especially our youth, to reject the false promise to drugs.

It is for these reasons that I am proud to join today with my good friends and colleagues, Congressman Gilman and Senator Moynihan, to introduce the Antidrug Abuse Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989.

This legislation will provide an additional $1,786,175,000 to fully fund the omnibus Antidrug Abuse Act of 1988 that Congress passed last fall and the President signed into law. This bill will complete the initiative we started in the 100th Congress and honor our pledge to the American people to step up the war on drugs.

Of the additional amount included in the bill, 55 percent is for drug abuse treatment and prevention efforts and 45 percent is for law enforcement and interdiction. The bill includes an additional:

$25 million for grants to reduce drug treatment waiting lists;

$125 million for Federal assistance to State and local drug enforcement;

$164 million for the Coast Guard;

$86 million for the Customs Service;

$46 million for the Drug Enforcement Administration;

And additional funding for many other Federal anti-drug programs.

Providing full funding for drug programs in 1989 is a good beginning. But we must make a sustained commitment to anti-drug efforts if we are to have any hope of reducing the tragic effects of drug abuse and drug trafficking.

President Reagan's proposed budget for fiscal year 1990 requested $5.15 billion for all Federal anti-drug efforts. This is a net increase of $164 million over current funding for 1989. His budget appears to accept a number of the funding gains Congress approved in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, and it includes some significant increases for Federal drug enforcement and interdiction.

But his budget is far short of what is needed to fund Federal anti-drug programs at the levels contemplated in the 1988 omnibus drug bill. Moreover, it ignores some of the urgent problems drugs are creating for State and local governments. For the third year in a row, President Reagan's budget refuses to seek any funding for grants to State and local drug enforcement agencies, even though $350 million is authorized for this purpose.

The battle to save our nation from drugs is being fought every day in the streets of our cities and communities. This is not just a State and local problem It is a national problem, and the Federal Government needs to be a full partner in helping States and localities fight drugs.

The legislation we are introducng also calls for full funding of anti-drug programs in 1990 at the levels contemplated in the 1988 omnibus drug bill. According to preliminary estimates, it will take $1.6—$1.9 billion in addition to President Reagan's request to fully fund drug programs in fiscal year 1990.

In his inaugural address, President Bush pledged that the scourge of drugs will stop. This will not be easy, and it will not be cheap. We need a comprehensive anti-drug strategy backed by the resources to carry it out effectively The Anti-Drug Abuse Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1989 will move us significantly toward this goal.

Congress is ready to work with the administration to stop the scourge of drugs. I call on President Bush and his new administration to work with the Congress to fully fund our anti-drug efforts. We cannot afford to do anything else.

H.R. 705

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and for other purposes, namely:

Because of the urgent need to provide drug treatment and rehabilitation services to drug users upon request and to provide law enforcement agencies sufficient resources to arrest, prosecute, and incarcerate violators of the law, there is hereby appropriated an additional sum of $1,786,175,000.

A TRIBUTE TO DION SUMMERS AND SCOTT YOUMANS

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, each year the best high school football players from North Carolina and South Carolina compete in the annual Shrine Bowl in Charlotte, NC. At the end of the game, an outstanding offensive and defensive player are named. I am proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that this year both outstanding players of the game hail from the Sixth District of North Carolina.

On December 10, 1988, the 52d edition of the Shrine Bowl was played. The proceeds from this annual charitable event are used to aid handicapped children. It is my pleasure to report that North Carolina defeated South Carolina 14 to 7 to break a 7-year losing streak for the Tar Heel State. When the game was over, the most valuable offensive and defensive players were selected. The offensive player of the game was Dion Summers from Dudley High School in Greensboro, NC. The defensive player of the game was Scott Youmans from Eastern Guildford High School in Gibsonville.

We would be proud to have one of the stars of the game from our district, but to have two Sixth District student athletes named as the outstanding players is a true feat. Our congratulations go to Dion Summers and Scott Youmans. We would also like to congratulate Willie Young, the head football coach at Dudley High School and Robert Saunders, the principal at Dudley. Congratulations also go to Tommy Grayson, the head football coach at Eastern Guilford High School and David Girardi, the principal at Eastern Guilford. Also, thanks go to Doug Henderson of Western Guilford High School for a job well done. He was one of the assistant coaches on the victorious North Carolina Shrine Bowl champions.

The entire Sixth District of North Carolina is proud of the contributions made by two of its student athletes to this year's Shrine Bowl champion. Dion Summers and Scott Youmans were truly outstanding.

PANAMA CANAL TREATY: AN ILLEGAL DOCUMENT

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a bill that will show a sense of Congress that the Panama Canal Treaty is an illegal document. This treaty not only cost us our canal, but cost the taxpayers of America billions of dollars given to the Panamanian Government to take this vital piece of American property off our hands. To the Carter administration, this action was designed to redress an ancient grievance and to ingratiate the United States not just with Panama, but with our other Latin American neighbors as well. Further, the Carter people argued that the canal was increasingly obsolete and the fears registered by American critics of the treaty over the inability of the Panamanian Government to both maintain and operate the canal were grossly exaggerated. In addition, we were told, the revenues pouring into Panama, which was hurting economically, would provide the basis not just for improving that nation's economic welfare, but also for laying the foundation for a stable Panamanian democracy with close ties to the United States. Finally, we were assured that the United States would reserve a right to guarantee the protection of the canal in perpetuity.

Obviously, with the current situation involving General Noriega and his drug-dealing government, Panama is a land of unrest. Fortunately, the United States still controls and owns the strategically vital Panama Canal. A number of facts which have surfaced since President Carter and the Senate agreed to give away the Panama Canal have led to a public outcry. It is time that the Members of Congress reexamine the facts and understand that the Panama Canal Treaty was never properly ratified. I submit for your review, eight points that describe why this treaty was not ratified and therefore, should not be considered binding.

LEGAL PROBLEMS WITH THE 1977 PANAMA CANAL TREATIES

Two treaties were signed by President Carter and Panamanian "Head of Government" Omar Torrijos in 1977. The first was "The Panama Canal Treaty," which was intended to gradually transfer control over the canal and the zone to Panama, culminating in a final transfer of sovereignty in 1999. The second treaty was "The Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal" (The Neutrality Treaty), which was intended to guarantee the neutrality of the canal after the transfer was complete.

1. Conflicting Reservations: The text of the treaties as signed was not completely acceptable to the U.S. Senate, which was charged with ratification under the Constitution. In ratifying the treaties, several reservations were attached to clarify the meaning which the Senate placed on the treaties' provisions which were ratified.

Chief among these was the so-called "DeConcini Reservation," introduced by Senator Dennis DeConcini (D-Ariz.), which declared that the United States' right of intervention to guarantee the neutrality of the canal could be exercised unilaterally, without a prior request by the government of Panama and, if necessary, against the opposition of the government of Panama.

The DeConcini Reservation was strongly opposed by the Panamanian negotiators, who inserted a three paragraph counter-reservation into their instrument of ratification, asserting that it was the understanding of Panama that the DeConcini Reservation did not allow for unilateral U.S. action, despite the clear intentions to the contrary expressed in the Senate debate.

This Panamanian counter-reservation was never presented to the Senate for a vote (as required by the Constitution) and is not mentioned in the U.S. instrument of ratification. Clearly, the ratification was faulty and the treaties are void.

2. Illegality under the Vienna Convention: The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (1969) is generally recognized as the codification of the international law of treaties. Under Article 20.2 of the Convention, each reservation required the acceptance of the other party. Since neither reservation was accepted by the other party (indeed, since they are mutually exclusive) there has been no ratification under international law.

3. No transfer of sovereignty: Article I of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977 purports to terminate all previous canal treaties and states ". . . the Republic of Panama, as territorial sovereign . . ." There is no provision in the 1977 treaty which explicitly transfers sovereignty from the United States back to Panama.

The U.S. Supreme Court in 1907 concluded that the provisions of the 1903 treaty had granted sovereignty over the Canal Zone to the United States. Clearly then, some affirmative act was required to transfer sovereignty back to Panama. The abrogation of the 1903 treaty alone was not sufficient. Since the rest of the treaties cannot be constructed in any way with sovereignty remaining with the United States, the treaties must be void in their entirety.

4. Improper abrogation of the 1903 treaty: As noted above, the 1977 treaty purports to recind the provisions of the 1903 treaty. This is improper. The clear intent of the framers of the Constitution was for the Executive Branch to negotiate treaties, which would be ratified by the Senate (2/3 vote) and then become laws, just like other laws, which could only be repealed through the standard legislative process in both Houses of Congress.

If a treaty could be declared invalid by the President and the Senate, without the House of Representatives, then treaties would not be the "supreme law of the land" as guaranteed by Article VI. The principle is analogous to that which the U.S. Supreme Court used in 1983 to overturn the "legislative veto."

Since the House of Representatives, never approved legislation abrogating the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty of 1903, it remains in force; and the conflicting language of the 1977 Treaty is void.

5. Improper disposal of U.S. property: As noted above, the U.S. Supreme Court in 1907 found that the Canal Zone was the property of the United States. Under Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2 of the U.S Constitution. "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States. . . ." Therefore, U.S. property can only be conveyed through the normal legislative process (both Houses of Congress).

On September 27, 1979, President Carter signed into law Public Law 96-70, The Panama Canal Act of 1979, the only legislative vehicle pertaining to the Canal Treaties which was passed by both Houses of Congress. Key provisions of this law are Sec. 1503, "No property of the United States located in Panama may be disposed of except by law enacted by the Congress," and Sec. 1504(c), "the Panama Canal . . . shall not be transferred to the Republic of Panama prior to December 31, 1999."

Under this law, then, the Panama Canal and Zone still belong to the United States and will continue to belong to the United States until Congress, both Houses of Congress, passes a law disposing of it. Provisions of the Panama Canal Treaties to the country must be void.

6. Non-resident aliens as U.S. Officials: Article III of the Panama Canal Treaty (1977) provides for the President of the United States to appoint four Panamanians to serve as directors on the nine-member Panama Canal Commission, the government agency which operates the canal.

The U.S. Constitution requires that all officers of the United States must swear an oath to support the U.S. Constitution (Article VI, Section 3) and may be removed for treason (Article II, Section 4).

These Constitutional provisions clearly do not allow for non-resident aliens to serve as officers of the United States. Such an alien cannot take an oath to support the United States Constitution and, by definition, cannot commit treason against the United States. Therefore, this provision of the Panama Canal Treaty is unconstitutional.

7. Improper application of Panamanian Constitution: The Panamanians had long expected the 1903 Treaty to eventually be renegotiated, and made provision for it in the Constitution of Panama (1972). Article 274 provided that "Treaties . . . with respect to the Panama Canal . . . shall be submitted to a national plebiscite" for ratification. Accordingly, the treaties signed by President Carter and General Torrijos were submitted for a plebiscite by Panamanian Law 33 and approved on October 23, 1977.

However, the subsequent U.S. reservations and Panamanian counter-reservations (see above) were never submitted to a second plebiscite. The versions of the treaties ratified by the people of Panama in the October 1977 plebiscite are not the same as the versions ratified by the United States Senate in March and April of 1978; and both are different from the versions ratified by General Torrijos in June of 1978. Since the ratification was unconstitutional under the Constitution of Panama, the treaties are void.

8. Improper signing under Panamanian Constitution: Article 277 of the Constitution of Panama (1972) stipulates that the "Head of Government," then Omar Torrijos, had the power to "direct foreign relations," while Article 163 reserved to the "president of the Republic alone" the power to "enter into international treaties and agreements."

Despite this, the 1977 treaties were signed by General Torrijos, not the President of Panama. For this reason, the treaties are void under Panamanian law.

CARIBBEAN BASIN SCHOLARSHIP ACT

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, together with 25 of my colleagues including the Resident Commissioner of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, I am introducing legislation that will greatly enhance our economic and political efforts in the Caribbean Basin.

There is broad recognition that the well-being and future economic security of the basin translate into the military and national security of the entire Western Hemisphere. Many of the CBI countries, however, are plagued with poverty, civil unrest and instability. Their standards of living place them among the lowest of Third World nations. Without economic development these countries will never achieve lasting peace or stability.

To foster more stable, peaceful democracies in the region, we must establish a comprehensive program for promoting economic development. I believe that one essential component of that program is education and training assistance and for that reason, I am introducing legislation to establish a scholarship program for students from the 23 Caribbean Basin Initiative beneficiary countries to attend vocational schools or institutions of higher education in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The benefits of offering aid in the form of scholarships have been widely recognized. Increasing scholarship assistance was one of the major recommendations of the Kissinger Commission report on Central America. It determined that providing scholarship assistance to youth in the Caribbean Basin is in our mutual interest. It will counter the strong influence of Soviet and Cuban scholarship efforts and reaffirm our ties to the basin. Furthermore, by strengthening the skills of the regional work force, it will ensure that the basin countries have the capabilities to benefit from other forms of development assistance that the United States and other nations may provide. It will enable the people of the basin region to take an active role and have a direct stake in regional development efforts.

Specifically, my bill establishes a program to identify skill shortages in basin countries and provide training and education in those areas which will best promote economic development. The program would provide up to 1,000 scholarships per year for 4 years for students from countries which have been designated as eligible countries by the President pursuant to the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act and the awards would be apportioned according to population. In order to be eligible to participate, students would have to demonstrate academic potential, financial need and a desire to return to their country of origin upon completion of their program of study. The program would be administered by the Agency for International Development. It is estimated to cost $6 million annually. It would be funded equally by the Federal Government and the Government of Puerto Rico.

Senator BOB GRAHAM and Congressman DANTE FASCELL have also introduced legislation which would provide scholarships for Caribbean Basin students to study at universities in the United States. I support their legislation and I hope that my bill will complement their efforts.

By bringing students to Puerto Rico, my program seeks to capitalize on the high quality of the existing resources and facilities at the institutions of higher education and vocational schools which is available at lower cost in Puerto Rico than on the mainland. In Puerto Rico, there are more than 43 accredited higher education, technical and vocational institutions which offer excellent programs in areas such as agriculture, engineering, tourism, community development, labor relations, public administration, industrial and economic development, health, housing and public safety, and social work. The estimated cost of undergraduate tuition at the university is between $2,000 and $3,000. Since 1950, over 36,000 men and women from 186 nations and territories have taken advantage of the excellent educational opportunities afforded at low cost institutions in Puerto Rico.

In addition to benefitting from the high quality and the low cost of the education and training available in Puerto Rico, I believe that educating students there is advantageous because, in many cases, students share a common language and a common culture and they can witness a successful democracy within the region.

The Caribbean Basin Scholarship Program would greatly aid our efforts to foster economic development in the basin. It would also strengthen the mutual ties of friendship and understanding among the basin countries, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the United States. It could be one of the most effective tools which we can offer to promote economic development, peace and prosperity in the Western Hemisphere. For all of these reasons, I urge your strong support for this legislation.

H.R. 798—THE HOME OWNERSHIP OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1989

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, home ownership is the symbol of the American dream. It is a fundamental ideal to which all Americans aspire. It is also an important source of both financial and emotional security to families.

As all of us know, however, the opportunities for home ownership have diminished considerably in recent years. Since 1980, rising prices and higher mortgage interest rates have increasingly outstripped the ability of many Americans—particularly young people who are first-time home buyers—to meet the costs of home ownership. For those who do manage to buy a home, they must delay the purchase for several years, both spouses must work, and they must very often settle for a less desirable home.

Nowhere is this more evident, Mr. Speaker, than on the San Francisco Peninsula. The skyrocketing cost of housing has simply priced many people out of the market, and potential first-time buyers are falling further behind each year in their ability to enter the housing market.

As chairman of the Employment and Housing Subcommittee I have examined the effectiveness of the Federal Housing Administration in assisting young families to buy homes. In 20 percent of all metropolitan areas, a median-priced home costs well more than the maximum FHA mortgage limit of $101,250. Furthermore, first-time buyers must raise increasingly larger downpayments before they can even consider buying a house. Although many of my constituents could make monthly mortgage payments, they are unable to make the necessary downpayment.

A number of policy changes can help make it possible for first-time home buyers with middle-class incomes to participate in the American dream of home ownership. The Home Ownership Opportunity Act of 1989, which I am introducing today, is one step in that direction. My legislation will amend the Internal Revenue Code to make it possible for first-time buyers to transfer funds from their IRA accounts or other annuity accounts for use as a downpayment on a first home, without the currently required tax penalty.

The bill includes appropriate safeguards to prevent abuse. The maximum amount which may be used in this way is $10,000 and the tax base of the property would be adjusted accordingly so that, upon sale or rollover, tax would be collected. We do not need and do not intend to provide double tax benefits, but we can help by freeing IRA funds without tax penalty for purchase of a first home.

Mr. Speaker, my legislation will not cost the Treasury or the American taxpayers any money. We already defer tax on these retirement funds. All this legislation does is make it possible to use these funds, without penalty, for more Americans to share in the American dream. I invite my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

THE 1989 AGRICULTURE AGENDA

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, January 25, 1989, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Although the 1985 law governing agricultural programs will not have to be rewritten this year and 1989 is expected to be a good year for farmers the Congress will still face several important agricultural issues.

The financial recovery for American agriculture seems likely to continue in 1989, although much depends on the weather. A second year of drought conditions could cause major livestock liquidations and food price hikes, which could have a major impact on U.S. agriculture for years to come. Yet weather experts believe that temperatures and rainfall are likely to return to average levels because droughts rarely occur back to back. If the weather cooperates, 1989 could be a very good year for farmers overall, with some sectors doing better than others. The Department of Agriculture is forecasting that net farm income could reach $48 billion if yields are near normal. That would be $9 billion higher than last year, and after adjusting for inflation, the highest level in more than a decade.

The expected increase in farm income is a reflection of high market prices and increased plantings, which will more than offset higher production expenses. Market prices are expected to remain high because last year's drought depleted stocks of most commodities and there are indications of lower levels of production in other parts of the world. Increased plantings are due to the Secretary of Agriculture's decision to replenish stocks by increasing the number of acres farmers may plant while continuing to participate in the commodity programs.

The value of U.S. farm exports is expected to grow slighty to $36.5 billion in 1989. Agricultural exports have climbed steadily in recent years, from a low of $26.3 billion in 1986. The recent Soviet announcement that they may have to increase their grain purchases by 50 percent over last year brightens the outlook. Government payments to farmers are expected to drop as a result of relatively strong market prices and scheduled reductions in price support levels written into the 1985 law. Direct payments to farmers, which were $16.7 billion in 1987 and $14 billion last year, could fall to $10-12 billion this year.

Budget reductions: The federal budget deficit will continue to remain a central element in agricultural policy for the next few years. Cuts will likely be required in agricultural outlays to meet the 1990 deficit reduction target. In his final budget to the Congress, President Reagan recommended reducing federal payments to farmers an additional $2 billion in 1990 by either lowering target prices 5 percent more than already scheduled or by reducing the number of planted acres that would be eligible for support payments.

Omnibus farm bill: Initial consideration of a new farm bill will occupy the House and Senate agriculture committees toward the end of the year. Although there has been some talk of major changes in the farm programs, the general sense in the Congress at this time is that the basic approach of the 1985 law has worked, so a complete overhaul is not expected. The emphasis will likely continue to be on lowering federal support levels for farmers and increasing their reliance on the market and on export sales. A typical corn producer in 1990 will receive more than 40 percent of his net farm income from direct federal payments.

Farmers Home Administration: Recent reports of $35 billion in losses by the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) will contribute to calls to reform its operating procedures. While FmHA will not require a bailout like that needed for the savings and loans, the losses do reflect inadequate reporting standards and bring into question FmHA standards in approving loans. At issue is the question of how much the federal government should continue to help marginal farmers and young farmers.

Environmental improvement: Most major environmental concerns have an agricultural component. Failure to address these issues now may result in irreversible harm to the environment and our health. Maintaining water quality, particularly groundwater, and preserving of wetlands are both upcoming issues in 1989. Farmers may have to modify their farm practices in order to meet national standards in these areas. Pesticide runoff from farms is considered to be the major cause of surface and ground water pollution in the U.S. In addition, farmers have a long-term interest in the effect of global warming and in preventing ozone depletion, which may reduce crop yields.

Trade negotiations: While the U.S. has recently made progress with Canada and Japan in the area of trade, major issues with the European Economic Community (EEC) remain unresolved. At the Montreal trade negotiations in December, the United States proposed removing all farm subsidies but was unable to get the EEC to agree to any significant reductions. In addition, the EEC recently restricted the import of beef containing growth hormones, which will cost U.S. producers an estimated $100 million. Retaliation by the U.S. could lead to further EEC import barriers which would harm the prospects for expanded trade.

Rural development: In recent years, rural income has fallen to 73 percent of urban income, and rural unemployment rates now exceed urban rates by 2 percent. Improving the outlook for rural areas will require a concerted effort to improve income and employment opportunities. The challenge is to create an environment in which private initiative can be supported by federal, state, and local governments. Proposals under consideration include improving rural access to credit and capital, upgrading the quality of the rural labor force through better education and job training, and improving infrastructure, particularly in the area of telecommunications.

CONTRACT PROCEDURES FOR NOAA SHIP REPAIR CONTRACTS

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to provide parity between the ship repair contract procedures of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] and the Navy and Coast Guard. This bill will resolve a dispute between NOAA and the Department of Labor [DOL] as to which Federal contract law should apply to NOAA's repair contracts. Legislative clarification of this issue is supported by NOAA and DOL.

The bill provides that contracts for the construction or repair of vessels owned or operated by NOAA are subject only to the procurement policies and procedures of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act—commonly referred to as the Walsh-Healey Act (41 U.S.C. 35 et seq.), and not to those of the Davis-Bacon Act (40 U.S.C. 276a et seq.). The bill does this by amending the law which defines the functions and duties of the Coast and Geodetic Survey (33 U.S.C. 883a–i). The legislation is necessary to provide parity between the Federal Government's contract procedures for NOAA vessels and vessels of the Navy and Coast Guard. It would resolve the issue of which labor standards to apply to NOAA ship construction and repair contracts.

Only the Walsh-Healey Act applies to the construction, alteration, furnishing, or equipping of vessels within the authority of the Department of the Navy (10 U.S.C. 7299). Contracts for the repair of vessels other than those under the authority of the Navy may be subject to the Davis-Bacon Act under a 1987 interpretation by the DOL.

Traditionally, the Department of Commerce [DOC] and NOAA have considered NOAA ship construction and repair contracts to be subject to the Walsh-Healey Act. This primarily was because they viewed NOAA vessels as falling within the term "naval vessels" in 10 U.S.C. 7299 which provides that contracts for the construction, alteration, furnishing, or equipping of a vessel within the authority of the Navy are subject to the Walsh-Healey Act. DOL, however, has advised DOC and NOAA that the term "naval vessel" is limited to vessels of the Navy and Coast Guard and does not cover NOAA vessels, even though NOAA ships may be transferred to the Department of Defense in time of war. Because of this interpretation, it is necessary to enact a separate statutory provision parallel to 10 U.S.C. 7299 to ensure that NOAA ship construction and repair contracts are treated the same as those of the Navy and Coast Guard.

The application of Davis-Bacon to NOAA ship construction and repair contracts would result in more costly and time-consuming procedures which I regard as unnecessary and burdensome to the successful operation of the NOAA fleet. For example, Davis-Bacon requires DOL to establish prevailing wage determinations in the area of the contract's performance. Yet, DOL apparently does not have wage rate determinations for shipyard personnel, who are unlike construction and production workers in other fields for which wage rates have been developed. Building carpenters are not the same as ship millwrights; inside and outside machinists have no counterparts in shoreside construction; plumbers are not the same as pipefitters; welders are not the same as shipfitters, grinders, scalers, and burners.

Finally, since much shipyard work is performed for the Navy and Coast Guard, the application of Davis-Bacon to NOAA construction and repairs would cause shipyards to pay different wage rates to the same employee, depending upon whether the employee was working on a NOAA ship or on another Government ship. It would also cause employees of equal status to be paid differently depending on whether they were assigned to work on a NOAA vessel or on a Navy or Coast Guard vessel.

For all these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

1988 WESTERN FOREST FIRE SEASON

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD a statement by me before the Interior Subcommittee on Public Lands:

STATEMENT OF HON. RON MARLENEE

Mr. Chairman, we are here today to examine a policy so misguided, so abusive, so wasteful, so destructive that no better definition could be drawn to describe the term, "Scorched Earth Policy."

The deliberate destruction of resources are almost incomprehensible.

By my estimates, the tangible public resources torched and scorched total between $1 billion and $2.5 billion dollars.

The cost to the private sector cannot be estimated.

This disregard for creatures big and small would make the most aggressive hunter weep.

In the private sector it would be called arson. In the bureaucracy and among environmental groups it's viewed as God's will, or something akin to faith healing.

This hearing should concern itself as much about the attitude, personnel management, and communication as about fire policy itself.

Montana was devastated by fires last summer. In addition to the fires in Yellowstone, which spilled over into Montana, we experienced several massive and deliberate fires which started in Forest Service wilderness areas and later caused dramatic losses to private property owners. In fact, one rancher who will testify this afternoon had 25,000 acres of his property burn because of a fire starting in a wilderness area that was not put out, because it was the will of God, it was not contained because it was the will of God and, guess what got out of control?

Last summer, I personally flew over the Rocky Mountain and Yellowstone fires several times and met with local citizens who were concerned about federal fire policies as well as what they perceived as bureaucratic bungling on the part of the upper managers of the fire-fighting effort.

It is clear to me and literally thousands of my constituents who have contacted me that changes must be made in how we manage fire in national parks and wilderness areas. Any federal fire-fighting policy, above all else, must protect the lives and property of citizens and communities adjoining federal lands.

Current laws must be reformed so that private landowners who are victimized by fires originating on federal lands are promptly compensated.

Let me recount some of the allegations I heard from Montanans who worked on the Yellowstone fires:

Park rangers threatened or gave a citation to a fire-fighting crew for crossing a meadow with their truck to put out a fire. The ranger was concerned the truck would destroy park vegatation.

Several helicopter pilots claim that park officials would not allow them to dip their water buckets in certain streams and lakes for needed water drops.

Others charge that Park Service personnel prohibited the building of heliponds inside the park and thereby threatened the safety of fire crews and contributed to the spread of the Hellroaring Fire.

An electric utility that provides power to part of the park tried to minimize the problems of burning trees falling over its power lines by widening its narrow right-of-way corridor. For whatever reason, this modest request was denied and power outages in the park were numerous.

The Park Service hosed down all buildings near Mammoth with the curious exception of the Photo Shop of the concessionaire. Some long-time residents believe this is because the Park Service never really liked the location of the photo shop in the first place.

Although it fortunately did not burn, it reconfirmed the suspicions of some of a "selective burn" policy by park officials.

Finally, and perhaps most disturbingly, I have heard from many credible folks that a research biologist in Yellowstone regularly chanted the slogan "Burn Baby Burn" while wildfires devoured Yellowstone.

It is my understanding that a joint Forest Service/National Park Service panel is currently investigating these allegations of misconduct. It is imperative for Congress to know if a group of environmental elitists in the governmental bureaucracies, in the name of "letting Nature take its course," actually impeded fire-fighting efforts.

When we discuss Yellowstone, it is instructive that this panel remember the words on a stone monument outside the northwest entrance of Yellowstone Park. They read, "For the benefit and enjoyment of people—Yellowstone National Park, created by an act of Congress, March 1, 1872.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to hearing all of today's witnesses and wish we had the opportunity for individuals from different panels to question each other. Since that is not possible, I would like to highlight some differences in testimony that hopefully will lead to a spirited discussion.

For example, the testimony of a witness in Panel 2 implies to me that "short-term economic interests of local citizens who derive their income" from park tourism should somehow be subservient to some lofty goal of "long-term resource protections." This Congressman is eagerly waiting to learn if the concessionaire in Panel 6 whose family-owned enterprise has faithfully served park visitors for over 70 years and has survived two world wars, the Great Depression, and the so-called energy crisis is a short-term economic interest that should get a condescending stare from federal officials.

The testimony of a witness in Panel 6 states, "Many businesses in Yellowstone had banner years, particularly motel owners, restaurants and grocery stores which helped house and feed the fire fighters." By this logic, all it takes to bring prosperity to national park merchants is to encourage a fire of holocaust proportions and let the resulting government fire-fighting checks bolster the local economy. Fortunately, this perverse logic is resisted by the enterprising and hardworking men and women that make up Main Street businesses and understand how real wealth is created in our free enterprise system.

Although it is difficult to assess the economic impact to the many Mom and Pop businesses so common to Montana communites victimized by fire, I can say that my Montana field offices were deluged with calls and visits last summer and fall from constituents who suffered substantial economic losses because of fires.

Regarding larger businesses, I do know that two concessionaires lost a combined total of approximately $8 million dollars in 1988 due to fires in Yellowstone. Needless to say, this economic devastation trickled down to approximately 1,000 employees who were released early by one of these enterprises because of surrounding fires.

As I study the Yellowstone fires in more detail, I am starting to painfully agree with one of the conclusions reached by fellow Montanan Alston Chase in Panel 3 who states, "We are witnessing a great fire sale. Yellowstone is being repackaged by bureaucratic spin-doctors, gullible journalists and environmental organizations that are not doing their homework."

Mr. Chairman, Let us provide the American people the legislative oversight function they elect us to perform, and prevent a summer like the one of 1988 from ever happening again.

THE PLIGHT OF AUGUSTIN NAVRATIL

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, 2 weeks ago, I had the opportunity to attend, along with secretary of State Shultz, the concluding session of the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. During those closing days, Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Jaromir Johanes gave his assessment of the achievements of the Vienna meeting, and reflected on its relevance to Czechoslovakia. As I had the opportunity to meet Minister Johanes 2 years ago when I was in Prague with a delegation from the Helsinki Commission, I reviewed his statement with great interest with the hope that I might find therein some sign that the increasing repression of human rights by Czechoslovak officials will soon let up.

In his speech, Minister Johanes cited his main concern as "care for (a person's) inalienable rights, understood in the widest sense." Accordingly, the Czechoslovakia government has created a "Committee of the Czechoslovak Public for Human Rights and Humanitarian Cooperation," which, Johanes declared, "will certainly actively contribute * * * [t]o further the development and securing of human rights in the national and international sphere." While I welcome the tone of Minister Johanes address, recent events are very disturbing.

In the Vienna concluding document, which the Czechoslovak Government has just pledged itself to uphold, the participating States confirm that, "their laws, regulations, practices and policies (will) conform with their obligations under international law and [be] brought into harmony with * * * CSCE commitments." I welcome the creation of the new Czechoslovak human rights committee as an organization which may strive to implement this goal. As a case which merits special attention, I urge the committee to examine the plight of Augustin Navratil, for I believe that Mr. Navratil's continuing incarceration in a psychiatric hospital stands in direct contradiction to the CSCE commitments contained in the Vienna concluding document.

Augustin Navratil is a simple man. A railway worker, he is married and the father of nine children. A devout Roman Catholic, Navratil penned a 31-point petition in 1987 calling for religious freedom in Czechoslovakia. The petition was subsequently supported by Frantisek Cardinal Tomasek, Czechoslovakia's highest ranking Catholic official, and garnered over half a million signatures.

Although Navratil was arrested in March of 1988, he was not convicted of any crimes. Instead, in October he was remanded to a psychiatric hospital, even though Swiss doctors who had been permitted to examine him declared that his mental state was within normal limits.

By continuing to hold Augustin Navratil in a psychiatric hospital under these circumstances, the Czechoslovak Government is violating the following commitments, contained with the Vienna concluding document: The right to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time before an independent and impartial tribunal, including the right to present legal arguments and to be represented by legal counsel of one's choice; the right to be free from arbitrary arrest, detention, or exile; and the right to protection from psychiatric or other medical practices that violate human rights and fundamental freedoms.

In light of these new commitments so recently enshrined in the Vienna concluding document, and the pledge of the Government of Czechoslovakia to uphold and respect those rights, I urge the Committee of the Czechoslovak Public for Human Rights and Humanitarian Cooperation to examine the case of Augustin Navratil with a goal of returning this man to his family and his church.

TRIBUTE TO DR. VICTOR D. GRAGG

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to honor Dr. Victor D. Gragg, a devoted public servant and a great American, who will be retiring in June, as superintendent of schools at Fort Osage R–I School District in Independence, MO.

Dr. Gragg is a native Missourian. He studied at Culver-Stockton College and proved to be outstanding in the sport of basketball. In 1956, he began teaching high school physical education, advancing to superintendent of schools at LaGrange, from 1959 to 1967. After completing the requirements for his doctorate at the University of Missouri, Dr. Gragg began his tenure as superintendent of Fort Osage R–I School District in 1970.

In addition to Victor Gragg's fine work in Missouri public schools, he is a member of the Missouri State Teachers Association and a past president of the Greater Kansas City Association of School Administrators. He and his wife, Norma, have also taught in their Independence church where Victor is a deacon.

On behalf of this body, I wish to express appreciation to Dr. Gragg, who served as superintendent longer than any other in Fort Osage School District's history. May he enjoy his time of retirement in good health among the company of his family and friends. All my best wishes to Victor and his wife, Norma.

LIFETIME OF SERVICE TO COMMUNITY AND COUNTRY

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I always take great pride in the accomplishments of those individuals within the community who have given of themselves tirelessly to help others on a voluntary basis.

We have learned from long, hard experience that community pride and involvement on the part of individuals is worth far more in terms of the quality of life than all the Government programs put together.

I can tell you from first-hand experience that being a volunteer in a community project is a very rewarding experience.

Bob Tracey, who is retiring as Postmaster of Morristown, NJ, after 28 years of service, has been recognized for his involvement in a volunteer effort that include the March of Dimes, the Kiwanis, Police Athletic League boxing coach, the Federal United Fund drive, Catholic Share Charities, the American Heart Association, Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, Morristown Ambulance Squad, Juvenile Conference Committee of Morristown, National Council of Alcoholism, the National Heart Association, and much more.

He headed community flood relief efforts for the victims of Tropical Storm Agnes in Pennsylvania's Wyoming Valley. He once entered a burning building in a rescue attempt.

As Postmaster, Bob was awarded the Superior Accomplishment Award in 1971 for his lifesaving heroism. He received the Presidential Award for Hiring the Handicapped in 1967. He received the U.S. Postmaster General's Bicentennial Award for Outstanding Bicentennial Activities in 1976.

His military career has spanned two wars—World War II and the Korean conflict—and he has served in two branches of our Armed Forces—the Navy and the Army. He also served with distinction as a member of the New Jersey National Guard.

Bob has been an active member of American Legion Post 59 and Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 5461 since 1946. Bob served as Legion Post 59 commander in 1981. He has been a member and ceremonial officer for Morristown and Morris Township Veterans' Day and Memorial Day Committees for 30 years. He has chaired the Legion's hospital program and has been a member of the Morris County Veterans Service Officer Committee throughout the 1980's.

For these and many other voluntary efforts, Bob was named Veteran of the Year in 1975 and received the Jewish War Veterans Community Relations Plaque in 1983.

Bob has given of his time on numerous occasions to promote physical fitness, as an active jogger and marathon activist, little league coach, boxing coach, and as an active participant in the Babe Ruth Baseball International Program.

These are the highlights of Bob Tracey's community service activities, but is not a complete listing.

He is also an active member of his church and will celebrate his 40th wedding anniversary in April with his wife, Mary, his 4 children and his 11 grandchildren.

I have no doubt that Bob will enjoy a very active and rewarding retirement. I join with his many friends to wish for him all the best.

KOREAN WAR MEMORIAL FUNDING NEARS HALFWAY POINT

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that we are making good progress in raising the funds necessary for the Korean War Memorial, but we still have a lot to do.

So far, we have raised about half the $6 million required by law to construct the monument. We are extremely grateful to those corporations and individuals who have been so generous.

It is my hope that members will include in their next newsletter appeals for the remaining funds.

The memorial will pay tribute to the 5.7 million Americans who served in what has been our forgotten war, and especially the 54,000 who gave their lives for their country. In recent years, we have erected a memorial as a fitting tribute to those who served in Vietnam. Similar tribute to our Korean war veterans is long overdue.

MAINTAIN U.S. MEMBERSHIP IN THE INTERNATIONAL TROPICAL TIMBER ORGANIZATION [ITTO]

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced legislation authorizing the President to maintain U.S. membership in the International Tropical Timber Organization [ITTO]. This measure will help to sustain world trade in an $8 billion a year industry. More importantly, it will enable us to do a better job of addressing some of the most pressing environmental problems plaguing the world today.

By way of background, the 1983 U.N. Conference on Tropical Timber established the International Tropic Timber Agreement, which took effect 2 years later. The agreement is administered by the ITTO, comprised of 42 member governments, including the United States.

In implementing the agreement, the ITTO: provides an effective framework for cooperation and consultation between tropical timber producing and consuming nations; coordinates statistical data; and supports research and development on marketing, utilization, reforestation, and management of tropical forests. The ITTO is unique because it essentially administers a commodities agreement that nonetheless has a conservation mandate.

U.S. participation in the organization is important for two general reasons. First, timber harvested in tropical rain forests is an important component of world trade, both to producing and consuming nations, including the United States. The continued existence of the forests is especially important as a source of support for many in the less developed countries who depend on the forests for their livelihood.

Second, a wealth of scientific evidence suggests that tropical deforestation is growing at an alarming rate. The environmental consequences of this problem, if ignored, include: unwanted contributions to the greenhouse effect; the elimination of species in the affected regions, many of which have yet to be discovered and others which are used in the development of pharmaceuticals and other commercial products; an increase in soil degradation, soil erosion, and downstream flooding; and interference with weather circulation patterns.

Practically speaking, this legislation will permit the State Department to fund our participation in the ITTO through a Conventions and International Organizations [CIO] account. Future funding requests through this account are expected to be modest.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this bill does not set forth a plan, exhaustively comprehensive in scope, which will solve the environmental and trade problems brought about by the steady disappearance of the rain forests. But it will guarantee our presence in an important international forum designed to address these problems. Again, I urge its support.

LEGISLATION TO ALLOW EMPLOYEES OF RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS OUT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I plan to reintroduce legislation to correct a problem created by the 1983 Social Security Amendments which resulted in the Federal Government's intrusion into the ability of religious organizations to carry out their ministries. What my legislation will do is allow employees of religious organizations to opt out of the Social Security System, and thus prevent the Social Security System from over burdening religious organizations with the FICA tax.

From the very beginning of the Social Security System until the 1983 amendments, religious organizations and their employees were exempted from the system. Prior to the 1983 amendments, Congress realized that failure to grant such an exemption would jeopardize religious freedom. A 1946 report to the House Ways and Means Committee by the committee's social security technical staff declared that these groups were exempted from taxation because their representatives "feared endangering their freedom from taxation and the separation of church and State; they feared extension of Government influence on religious . . . policies."

However, the Social Security Amendments of 1983 brought the employees of all nonprofit (501(c)(3)) organizations—including church employees—into the system. After passage of these amendments, a public outcry arose because Congress had considered all categories of nonprofit groups together and had failed to address the special first amendment concerns raised by mandatory coverage of religious groups. In the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 [DEFRA], Congress attempted to correct the problem by allowing religious organizations, but not their employees, to elect out of the system. Unfortunately, this modification did not solve the problem because the employees of the religious organizations which chose to opt out of the system are treated as self-employed, and thus liable for the full share of the 15 percent FICA tax.

The provision hits especially hard on the employees of many church schools. Since many State school employees are currently exempted from FICA taxes, the FICA tax burden on church school employees makes it difficult for churches to pay salaries competitive with public schools. In addition, the present law interferes with the strongly held religious conviction of some churches that they should provide for their own retirement. Thus, for those religious schools which uphold this higher conviction, there is a double burden because they must pay salaries to their employees which reflect the heavy 15 percent FICA tax.

The Supreme Court has held that the church school is an "integral part of the religious mission" of the church in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 408 U.S. 602 (1971). My legislation will allow religious organizations to shed the economic burden imposed by the Federal Government in the form of Social Security taxes.

An excellent example of how the FICA tax intrudes upon the ability of a church to carry out its religious ministry is the case of the Bethel Baptist Church in Sellersville, PA. According to the pastor of this church, the Rev. Richard A. Harris, the church operates a preschool day care program and a school in furtherance of its religious mission. The members of Reverend Harris' faith believe that every activity involved in its ministry, including such vocations as secretary, maintenance worker, teacher, and so forth, is a religious ministry and is not secular or commercial in nature. The functions performed by employees of the church in its ministries are religious functions governed and controlled by religious principles. Reverend Harris correctly points out that the church's employees are indispensable to the carrying on of the church's ministry.

The members of Reverend Richard's faith believe that scripture requires that Christians provide for their own financial security. Since many of Bethel Baptist's employees further the religious ministry of the church through its school, the employment relationship between the church and its employees'/ministers' wages and has instituted a program of benefits for its employees to provide for their financial security, which includes a pension plan funded solely by church funds.

By mandating that church employees must participate in the Social Security program, Congress has caused the Federal Government to preempt the scriptural belief of the members of this church and provide for the financial security of church employees/ministers. In addition, mandatory coverage—and thus taxation—by the Social Security program results in an extraction and diversion by the Federal Government of the church's funds which are meant for solely religious purposes.

What Bethel Baptist Church believes is that its scriptural duty to provide for the financial security of its employees is certainly a religious purpose. However, the Government imposed FICA tax causes diversion of these funds. If the church does not increase its employees' wages to cover the FICA tax, the church's employees' net income would be diminished substantially, thus hindering or eliminating the pursuit of their religious vocation in the church's ministries. If the church increases its employees' wages commensurate with the self-employment tax imposed upon them, the availability of the church's ministries, such as the Christian school it operates, would be endangered. Thus, an increase in tuition or an increase in the tithe to the chruch, or even a reduction of employee staff in the church ministries would result.

Mandatory coverage of employees of religious organizations would thus cause certain churches to violate what they believe is their scriptural mandate not to participate in, or collaborate in, any effort of Government to assume or preempt a church's responsibility of providing for the financial security of its followers. I ask my colleagues to recognize that at the heart of this issue lies the constitutional command that the Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. My bill will unburden churches from the intrusion of the Federal Government in the form of mandatory coverage by the Social Security System. The legislation will allow churches to opt out of the system if it interferes with its religious beliefs. I urge my colleagues to support this piece of legislation.

NATIONAL EYE DONOR MONTH

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, the efforts of Congress have helped make possible the enormous humanitarian and economic benefits of organ and tissue transplantation: lives saved, bodies repaired, sight restored and thousands of men, women and children returned to the workplace, classroom and community life. Our support of eye donation, in particular, has had a dramatic impact.

Thanks to increased public awareness of the benefits of eye donation, a record number of people are choosing to pledge their eyes to be used after death for sight restoring surgery and eye research. Last year alone, more than 80,000 donor eyes were received by eye banks across the United States and Canada. Of this number, the Eye Bank Association of America [EBAA] reports that 36,000 were used to restore sight through corneal tansplant surgery. The balance were used in other sight enhancing surgical procedures, and in important research projects to speed the day when thousands of persons with other types of blindness might also have their sight restored.

Since 1961, when the EBAA was founded, more than 300,000 corneal transplants have been performed with a 90-percent success rate, making this surgery the most frequently performed of all transplant procedures. Persons who have received the precious gift of sight through this surgery have come from all walks of life and all parts of the country.

The EBAA, through its 93 member eye banks, is coordinating activities throughout the United States and Canada in order to increase eye donations and expedite research. The EBAA is assisted by its allied organizations, the Association of Nurses Endorsing Transplantation [ANET] and the National Ambassadors for Corneal Transplant [NACT], whose members are former blind persons who have had their sight restored.

Despite this remarkable effort, thousands of blind men, women and children still wait in darkness because of a shortage of eye donations. Eye banking experts are convinced that one of the most effective means for increasing donations is to increase public knowledge of the donation process. They point out that many citizens do not realize that all eyes are acceptable for donation, regardless of the donor's age or quality of vision.

Therefore, it is fitting that we in Congress inform the public of the need for eye donations and encourage more people to become organ and tissue donors, as we have done every year since 1983. We do so by designating March 1989 as "National Eye Donor Month" and call on all citizens to support this humanitarian cause.

ABE ROSENTHAL DISCUSSES THE ATTEMPT BY AUSTRIANS TO DEAL WITH ANTI-SEMITISM AND THE NAZI PAST

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the Congress an outstanding article by A.M. Rosenthal. His article, "The Old Jew and the Cardinal," which appeared at the end of last year in the New York Times, is at once both captivating and evocative.

On a recent trip to Vienna, Mr. Rosenthal was struck, as so many of us are, with the city's beauty and charm. He also realized, upon observing a bystander's reaction to the installation of a monument to Holocaust survivors, that some of the city's residents still harbor sympathies to its infamous past.

Mr. Speaker, in an era when the Austrian President, Kurt Waldheim, carefully concealed his Nazi past for decades, the sentiments expressed by Mr. Rosenthal are most timely and relevant. I urge my colleagues to read this article:

THE OLD JEW AND THE CARDINAL

VIENNA.—On a March day in 1938, Theodor Cardinal Innitzer drove up to the Imperial Hotel in Vienna. Adolf Hitler was staying there. He was reveling in his first day of power as hero and master of Austria. He had taken the country without a shot. He had been greeted by millions of adoring Austrians.

The Cardinal got out of his car, turned and faced the crowd. He stretched out his right arm in the Nazi salute.

Fifty years later, another prince of the Roman Catholic Church in Vienna, Franz Cardinal Konig, talked yesterday about the "special secret" of the church: Christians are the "spiritual sons" of the "tribe of Abraham."

In an elegant room full of Jewish and Christian clergymen and academics from Europe and the United States, he said that Christianity was rooted in the patriarchs, Moses and the prophets. He said that therefore anti-Semitism had to be rejected by Christians, not only for humanitarian reasons but for religious motivations.

A few blocks away a new monument has just been unveiled as part of Austria's doleful marking of the day a half-century ago when she became an eager part of Hitler's Germany. One of the monument's statues is low to the ground—an old Jew on hands and knees scrubbing the sidewalk with toothbrushes. That is what Viennese Nazis did to Jews in the days after Hitler's entry—a small part.

That particular piece of horror still flashes sickeningly into the minds of people all over the world when they hear the word Vienna.

To put the statue in the central capital, Albertina Platz, was a mark of honor for Vienna, but on Sunday a crowd was around it all day, debating whether it should be there or anywhere. Wasn't it better to forget after all these years?

"What will you do if I urinate on it?" one man said to a stranger who thought the statue belonged right there in the middle of Vienna.

"I will punch you in the mouth," was the answer.

All this is part of Vienna 50 years after Hitler and Austria embraced each other so eagerly. The memory of Cardinal Innitzer is part of Vienna and so is the man who wanted to urinate in fury against the old Jew in metal. So is the President who hid his past as a Nazi intelligence officer.

But the man who was willing to back up his sympathy for the Jews with a punch in the mouth is also part of Vienna. So are some of the young people willing to face the truth that many of their elders still flee-in resentment or guilt.

And so is Cardinal König. The very decision to hold an international seminar here on relations between Jews and Christians was delicate one.

Some American and European Jews stayed away to boycott the country that elected Kurt Waldheim.

But most of those invited came. It was organized by the Institute for the Study of Mankind, a small, independent group of Eastern and Central European philosophers encouraged by Pope John Paul II. The Austrian Government contributed funds for the meeting and so did Lord Weidenfeld, born in Vienna and now a publisher in London and New York.

The meeting was held in the Hofburg, the great governmental palace. Every evening there is an official reception—by the city, by a bank that is helping with funds, by the German Embassy or by the small Jewish community.

There was a lunch in the one synagogue in Vienna that the Austrian Nazis did not burn down on Kristallnacht, because Aryan houses might have burned down with it.

The talk in the Hofburg was learned and rich—about 70 people attended. There was hope voiced for the future, but no sentimentality. The city is still full of whipped cream, and you have to hide to escape the orchestras playing the "Blue Danube" or a tourist humming "Wien, Wien." Lots of Loden.

But it is difficult to get sentimental over Vienna, lovely as it is. There are too many memories of the fact that Austrians produced Nazis as villainous as those from the Fatherland.

So listening to the good talk from good people in the meeting room at the Hofburg becomes at least as much an emotional experience as an intellectual one.

Is it right to talk of brotherhood in the city where people were humiliated and robbed and murdered by their neighbors?

But then the thought comes—what better place to speak of amity and common roots between Jews and Christians than the city where the crime of being a Jew brought horrors so unspeakable that death could come as succor? By the time the session adjourns there seems only one reality: There is no running from Vienna, for the Viennese or for the rest of us.

So you might as well stay awhile, in the company of two good men—the old Jew on the sidewalk and the Cardinal in the Hofburg.

THE BUSH INAUGURAL ADDRESS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, February 1, 1989, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE BUSH INAUGURAL ADDRESS

President Bush's inaugural address was impressive from several standpoints. He stood on what he called "democracy's front porch" with the Capitol dome in the background and some 140,000 people assembled below. The nation paused for the pomp and ceremony on "democracy's big day", and differences were for a moment suspended. The President's address had a resolutely decent message, indicating how he sees his responsibilities and the problems of his time.

The speech did not try to lay out the program for his administration, but to set the tone for governing. Many in the Congress feel that even though he has been a public figure for many years, he has not clearly defined his agenda. While his speech contained no specific battle plan for the first 100 days, it did set out a conciliatory and practical strategy for governing the country. The President sought to reach out to opponents at home and abroad, and emphasized the theme of inclusiveness. Despite few specifics, several broad themes emerged.

There was no hint of repudiating the Reagan legacy but at the same time he moved away from it carefully, skillfully, and modestly. He accepted the Reagan emphasis on freedom and peace, and committed himself to the pursuit of negotiated settlement of our differences with the Soviets. At the same time, he moved away from anti-government rhetoric, attacked selfishness, and emphasized tolerance and high moral principles.

The President spoke several times in his inaugural speech about "new breezes blowing", calling for subtle yet significant changes in the nation's course. Throughout the speech his tone was moderate and non-ideological. He spoke not just to the customary fellow-citizens but to "neighbors" as well. He rejected the materialism that has gripped the American spirit lately and said that as President he would seek to celebrate "the quieter, deeper successes that are made not of gold and silk, but of better hearts and finer souls". There was a heavy religious sentiment to the inaugural addresss. When he suggested that Americans were "enthralled with material things", he seemed to be attacking the acquisitive spirit and ostentatious wealth of recent years and the growing economic inequality.

The address was very revealing personally. It reflected his personal philosophy of involvement and commitment to public service. It stressed a strong sense of civic obligation, a feeling that we must leave our neighborhoods and towns better than we found them and give something back to the country "that has given us so much". He insisted that wealth and power be justified by generosity and good works. I almost got the impression that President Bush is uncomfortable with his affluent background. He certainly expressed strongly the view that privileged people owe something to those less fortunate.

He projected a sharp sense of the limitations of government as he called upon the people to demonstrate their goodness and courage by helping to meet the needs that government alone cannot. He called for a "new engagement in the lives of others, a new activism that gets the job done". Again and again he emphasized the obligation of service and reaching out to those in need. The President certainly had a sense of history when he said that "we are all part of a continuum, inescapably connected by the ties that bind". I was struck by his emphasis on old ideas which he said are new again: duty, sacrifice, commitment, and patriotism. He spoke of these things well, even eloquently, and I think he meant them.

The President's approach to achieving a "kinder, gentler nation" is not liberal but conservative, with a reduced role for government. He rejected the approach that public money can end the difficult problems that confront us and pointedly said that we are constrained by "a deficit to bring down". Perhaps the real question is whether his conservative approach to the social problems of the nation and his call for a new engagement in the lives of others will be sufficient to attack the problems of homelessness, drugs, hunger, and inequality. It would be a significant accomplishment if President Bush is able to inspire greater volunteerism. In the past, private efforts have been able to meet only a fraction of the needs.

President Bush also hit hard at the partisan divisions in government. In a dramatic gesture he put out his hand to the Democrats, hoping to purge the divisiveness and dissension that he said stem largely from the Vietnam controversy. He clearly wants to revive the cooperation that shaped American foreign policy through the World War II years. He wants to regain some of the presidential authority over foreign policy that recent presidents have lost, and hopes that increased bi-partisanship will translate into success on domestic issues as well. I thought the President was right on target when he said that the American people await action. "They did not send us here to bicker." I have often heard Hoosiers express similar sentiments.

His effort to quell the partisanship is an important step. It would not be reasonable to expect that all the differences and debates will be removed. Difficult decisions must be made on, among other things, land-based missiles, Nicaragua, the deficit, the savings-and-loans crisis, and the nuclear weapons cleanup. The President was shrewd in extending his hand to the Congress and challenging us to become part of the solution. He seemed to be setting a mood which would help him when the inevitable differences on issues bring some discord.

As George Bush takes over as the nation's 41st President, Americans respect his abilities but they also question whether he can deliver on many of his promises. They see him more as a symbol of continuity than an agent of great change. They doubt that he will be able to keep his campaign promise of no new taxes or produce a realistic plan with the Congress to cut the budget deficit. Yet for the time being, they are willing to minimize their differences with him and give him a chance to succeed.

LET'S REVITALIZE THE FEDERAL OCEANOGRAPHIC FLEET

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the NOAA Fleet Modernization Act of 1989. This bill authorizes the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] to develop and implement a fleet modernization and expansion plan over a 10-year period beginning in fiscal year 1990. Unless NOAA begins a modernization and expansion plan for the fleet, we will be unable to carry out important national ocean research objectives.

The NOAA fleet represents about one-third of the total Federal oceanographic fleet. As such, the fleet is vital to carrying out fisheries, oceanographic, mapping, surveying, and meteorological programs. A recently completed private contractor study, entitled "Assessment and Plan to Extend the Service Life of Vessels of the NOAA Fleet," has identified specific fleet shortcomings and recommended that NOAA expeditiously undertake a modernization plan which includes both vessel upgrades and needed ship replacements. Similarly, a 1988 report of the National Academy of Sciences' Marine Board, entitled "Strategies for Obtaining Ship Services: Alternatives for NOAA", warned that the Nation's ocean needs are expanding, while capital expenditures for the NOAA fleet are not keeping step with future or even present requirements.

The average age for a vessel in the NOAA fleet is 24 years. This is very close to the average industry-accepted service life for most vessels of 25 years. Without a modernization plan, obsolescence of the entire fleet in the 1990's will be inevitable. Inadequate fleet capabilities could lead to essential oceanographic programs being imperiled. Implementation of the modest modernization plan recommended by the private contractor study will not only extend the life of NOAA's ships, but it will ultimately reduce Government costs by obviating the need for a total fleet replacement program. Immediate action is required, however, if we are to realize any cost savings.

New NOAA responsibilities for monitoring marine mammals in the Pacific Ocean and for surveying and mapping the exclusive economic zone of the United States as well as offshore territories and possessions also require an expansion of the NOAA fleet. Furthermore, recent scientific focus on global climate issues requires NOAA to undertake additional research on atmospheric and oceanic processes. These responsibilities justify expanding the size of the fleet from its current size of 23 vessels to a total of 30 vessels.

As chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I am committed to supporting and enhancing the capabilities of the NOAA fleet in accordance with present and future needs. Laying up more vessels to save money for next year's repairs is not the solution. Longstanding national research and management objectives can best be secured by NOAA's maintaining adequate vessel capabilities and expanding the fleet, as needed, to meet future requirements.

I am also concerned about the deteriorating state of our Nation's shipbuilding capability. The last commercial oceangoing vessel was delivered 2 years ago, and there are no new orders on the books. American shipyards are now totally dependent on Navy work, although the Navy's budget continues to face a drastic pruning. The President's Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense called attention to this perilous situation in its second report and recommended that the United States "implement a national program for merchant ship construction in U.S. shipyards".

While certainly not a cure-all, I believe that this measure is an important step forward for our shipyards. It will provide them with desperately needed business through this lean time and will also send an important message that the Federal Government will strive to find a solution to the nagging decline of this vital industry. Moreover, the skills and technology necessary to construct a commercial vessel are different from those needed to build a military vessel. Once they are lost, they are not easily retrieved, and this bill will help retain them.

More specifically, my bill authorizes the Under Secretary for Oceans and Atmosphere, the Administrator of NOAA, to develop and implement a 10-year fleet modernization and expansion plan. This plan will generally include: The replacement of 4 obsolete vessels; the upgrading and modernization of 19 vessels; the acquisition of 7 new vessels; and the acquisition of new scientific equipment for the entire fleet. The new vessels are likely to include a deep-water oceanographic and atomospheric research vessel, a bathymetric survey vessel, a large fisheries research vessel, a coastal fisheries research vessel, and three coastal shipping hazards survey vessels. The bill also directs NOAA to upgrade eight, replace one, and acquire two vessels in the first 3 years of authorization.

NOAA also will need 10 new personnel positions to develop specifications for and acquire the vessels called for in the plan. My bill gives NOAA the authority to obtain needed personnel as well as the authority to acquire modern scientific instrumentation for the fleet.

All modernization, upgrading, and construction of vessels must take place in private shipyards in the United States. Furthermore, 50 percent of the cost of all machinery and equipment must be purchased in the United States except for scientific equipment that reasonably cannot be acquired in the United States. NOAA is granted needed authority to enter into multiyear contracts or charter agreements for the construction, lease, or acquisition of the vessels called for in the plan. In using this authority, NOAA should give careful consideration to the Marine Board's recommendations on long-term chartering. Finally, the bill authorizes a total appropriation of $440 million over 10 years, from fiscal year 1990 to fiscal year 1999.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to restore and expand our oceanographic research capabilities.

SHORTFALL IN FUNDING AT THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD my statement before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee regarding the shortfall in funding at the Veterans' Administration. It's time, Mr. Speaker, to honor the promises made to veterans that we would provide for their health care by authorizing and appropriating the necessary funds to adequately fund the Veterans' Administration. Veterans' programs deserve a No. 1 priority in the budget process.

SHORTFALL IN FUNDING AT THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to address this committee to tell you what is happening to the Montana veteran. I know that you and Mr. Stump have been strong supporters of the U.S. veteran. It seems that with this shortfall in funding at the Veterans' Administration, you need some reinforcements. I am here to help you make veterans' programs a number one priority.

It is outrageous that some service-connected veterans have been turned away from necessary health care at VA hospitals. Mr. Chairman, were you aware that veterans are receiving notices in the mail informing them that they only have a 30-day supply of medication left, and then the VA wishes them Godspeed as these veterans try to fill their prescriptions? This must end!

The Big Sky Country has a population of slightly more than 800,000 people and has the third highest per capita veteran population in the United States. More than 106,000 veterans are in Montana, which means that 1 out of every 8 Montanas is a veteran.

In World War II, Korea, and Vietnam, Montana had one of the highest rates for volunteers. However, over the past several years, Montana has received one of the lowest health care expenditures per veteran in the United States. This means that either the delivery of health care is highly efficient or we're getting shortchanged.

I think that the latter may be the case because former prisoners of war in eastern Montana are no longer able to receive care as outpatients. In addition, over 700 veterans have been given a 30-day supply of medicine and turned out to seek help wherever they can find it.

The VA Medical Centers at Miles City and Helena have had to close wards and restrict inpatient care to category A veterans and outpatient care to priority 1 veterans. Both medical centers had to take these measures just to survive the next few months, and the President's proposed fiscal year 1990 budget does not offer much relief.

In fact, it cuts spending on hospitals and health care by $100 million to $11.1 billion. This is a slap in the face of all veterans. Our enemies past and present could not have done a better job at devastating our national commitment to the defense of this country. We should start thinking of veterans' programs as part of the defense budget of our country. Without veterans, Mr. Chairman, we would not be sitting here today.

Mr. Chairman, you and I both want fairness for veterans. We've asked them to give up a portion of their lives defending this great land. We have an obligation as a Nation to honor the promises made to them that we would provide for their health care. I am asking you to propose stable, recurring funding that is fair for the rural Montana veteran.

In Montana, more than 80 percent of veterans live over 100 miles from a VA Medical Center. Although several veterans' groups have volunteered time and money to provide transportation to Miles City, being able to reach a VA hospital is not enough.

The Medical Centers must have the money to pay for medications, blood, food, and supplies. These Montana facilities do not have enough money in their recurring budgets to pay for direct patient care items needed to provide the quality of care veterans expect and deserve to have.

The VA centers in Montana have gone the extra mile to efficiently manage the meager resources allocated to them. But, they can't do it alone—Congress must provide equity of funding for the medical care of Montana veterans.

Currently, the VA Medical Center at Miles City needs approximately $1.1 million to survive this fiscal year to treat those veterans mandated by law. The VA facility at Fort Harrison faces a $1.7 million shortfall.

While this may be small by big city standards, this has a harsh impact over this large geographic area. The Miles City VA hospital alone serves a veteran population in an area the size of the State of Nebraska. In other words, this one hospital provides health care to veterans from an area from here in Washington, DC to Maine.

Over the past few years, the beancounters at the Office of Management and Budget appear to have had their own agenda—deficit reduction at the expense of veterans. The previous Administration kept assuring Congress that there was sufficient money in the VA system to care for veterans. The hearings held by this committee last September proved that many VA medical facilities were woefully short of funds.

However, it's now time to stop name-calling and finger-pointing. It's time to plug the shortfall at the Veterans' Administration as soon as possible.

I respectfully request your committee, Mr. Chairman, to approve an emergency supplemental appropriation before something tragic happens. I would also recommend the committee reject former President Reagan's budget priorities for the VA health care system, and instead authorize $12.77 billion for veterans' medical programs as suggested by various veterans' service organizations.

Simply put, Mr. Chairman, authorizing $11.1 billion will only worsen the shortfall in funding. VA hospitals need an extra $1.6 billion not only to close the immediate shortfall but to catch up for inflation and the "cannibalization" of the veterans' programs that is going on all across America.

Veterans have been waiting since last November for an answer to this problem. I think we owe it to them to get money out to VA centers—now!

To quote an American poet, Robert Service, "A promise made is a debt unpaid." The American veteran has been promised that he would be cared for in his old age, and in his infirmities. Mr. Chairman, I simply want that promise fulfilled. Thank you for the indulgence of your committee.

TRIBUTE TO MR. MAURICE J. CONNELL

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to call to the attention of my colleagues the selection of my very good friend Maurice Connell as the recipient of the Greater Hollywood Chamber of Commerce's 1988 Community Service Award. The award, to be presented at a dinner on February 11, 1989, in Hollywood, FL, is given annually in recognition of long and continued service to the community.

Maurie epitomizes the American ideal—that you can accomplish anything you want with hard work and perseverance. His life's accomplishments are a tribute to that belief. An excellent baseball player at the University of Toledo, he went on to try out with the Detroit Tigers. Later, Maurie served his country in the Army as an officer in the Pacific in World War II. Upon returning from the war, Maurie decided to try his hand at three quite different enterprises—a high school basketball coach, a partner in a Ford agency, and in the insurance business. However, Maurie was always drawn to politics, and abandoned his other pursuits to serve as right-hand man to former Ohio Governor Mike DiSalle and followed DiSalle to a position in the Kennedy administration.

At the age of 68, Maurie has not slowed down his hectic pace, serving as president of Maurice J. Connell Enterprises, an intergovernmental consulting firm. He is also the grant coordinator for the city of Hollywood. In this capacity, Maurie has acquired over $100 million in public funding for parks and land for municipal parking and sewers. In recognition of Maurie's contributions, the Hollywood Florida City Commission dedicated the Maurice J. Connell parking facility on Hollywood Beach on June 6, 1985. While securing grants for Hollywood takes a great deal of his time, he continues to be a prominent leader in the community, serving on a variety of boards, including the Orangebrook Country Club, Memorial Hospital, Chaminade-Madonna College Preparatory school, the Greater Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, and the Rotary Club. In addition, while most people use the game of golf for recreation, Maurie uses it as an opportunity to organize charity events for the chamber of commerce, the Sheridan House for Girls, and the Celebrity Tournament of Pembroke Pines.

Maurie's life has taken him to many different venues and to many different occupations. Through it all, Maurie has never lost his good humor or his uncanny ability to tell a story. While there is no doubt that Maurie has gained success through his interpersonal skills, he is a competitive man who knows how to achieve what he sets out to accomplish. He is admired and loved by everyone who knows him.

It truly is an honor to call Maurie Connell my friend and I am sure that my colleagues join me in congratulating this extraordinary man on his most recent honor.

EXTEND FEDERAL EMPLOYEE HEALTH BENEFITS FOR DEPENDENTS

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, it came to my attention that the dependents of Federal employees are only covered under the Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program until they reach the age of 22. This is an inequity which places many children of Federal employees at an educational disadvantage as compared to many children of employees in the private sector.

This oversight places a financial burden on those families who have children still attending a college or university after they have already turned 22 years of age. Families in this position must purchase health insurance from private carriers so that a child will be covered if some medical emergency should occur. There are many instances in which students may find themselves in this position. For example, if a student had been held back early in school or flunked a grade, that student might not graduate from college until after turning 22 years old. Also, a student may be forced to leave college for a year or semester for health reasons; again, this student might not graduate until after turning 22. In each of these instances, it is not the fault of the student that they have not already graduated from college before their health insurance expires. In fact, in some cases it is a credit to the student's character for having completed their education after experiencing an early setback. Such perseverance should be rewarded, not punished. We in the Federal Government should strive to make it possible for a child to finish his or her education without such extraneous worries.

A student presently caught in the situation which I have been discussing, would be forced to purchase a private health insurance plan. An unemployed, full-time college student would probably not have the means to purchase such a plan without neglecting his or her studies and taking an extra job. Some families might have the means to pay this added expense, but many would not.

This bill is a very simple one that would make graduating from college a little less of a burden than it already is for many families. The bill extends the age for which unmarried dependents who are full-time college students are covered by their parent's health benefits plan to the age of 23. This bill would make this provision of the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program consistent with that of the U.S. military, which already covers unmarried, dependent, full-time college students until the age of 23. We all know that in the private sector many dependents are covered up to the age of 25 or 26 in some cases.

In addition, many States such as Pennsylvania have a kindergarten age entry law which states that you must be 5 years old by a certain date in order to attend kindergarten. If a student is held back even 1 year, most likely that student will not graduate from college until after turning 22. This law has only been in effect for about 5 years so we do not know how many future college students it will affect.

I would like to thank my colleague and chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, BILL FORD, for joining me as an original sponsor of this bill and I would urge all of my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring the bill I introduced today to amend the Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program to cover unmarried, dependent, full-time college students.

A TRIBUTE TO PAUL S. SHORR

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Paul S. Shorr, the outgoing president of the Wilmington Boys and Girls Club for 1988. Mr. Shorr will be honored at the annual Keystone fundraiser banquet on February 9, 1989, at Los Verdes Country Club in Rancho Palos Verdes. This occasion gives me the opportunity to express my appreciation for Paul's work on behalf of the surrounding community.

Mr. Shorr is a native New Yorker who migrated to California to complete his bachelor of arts degree at UCLA. While attending UCLA, he majored in economics and minored in military service and tactics.

Upon graduation, Paul entered the military, and received a commission as lieutenant in the U.S. Army. Mr. Shorr went on to serve in the Korean war as an infantry platoon leader, infantry company commander, battalion adjutant, and regimental assistant operations officer with the 38th Infantry, 2d Division.

Mr. Shorr has received numerous honors while serving his country. He has been given the parachutist badge, combat infantryman badge, bronze star for valor with oak leaf cluster, purple heart with oak leaf cluster, Republic of Korea Unit Citation, and Netherlands Government personal citation award.

While in the Army, Paul saw action in battle for Old Baldy and Pork Chop Hill. He returned to the United States in 1953 and was stationed at Fort Bliss, TX. Afterward, he was transferred to 5th Infantry Division as company commander in Germany, until returning to the United States in 1956. After dedicating many years to a military career, he entered the private sector as an insurance broker, and became involved in land development.

As a civilian, Paul has contributed to his community in many ways. He served as president of San Pedro City of Hope Chapter for 2 years. He served on the board of directors of an over the counter listed corporation for 2 years. He was also president of the homeowners association for 1 year. Presently, he is stepping down from a year as head of the Wilmington Boys and Girls Club.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our congratulations to Paul S. Shorr today. Paul is a truly remarkable citizen who has dedicated his life to serving his country and the citizens of our area. We wish Mr. Shorr, his three sons, Steven, Stuart, and Tim, and his two grandsons, Brian Michael and Eric Scott, our best wishes today and in the years ahead.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. IRWIN R. BARR

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Mr. Irwin R. Barr. Mr. Barr has distinguished himself through exceptionally meritorious service as president and chief executive officer of AAI Corp. a major defense systems engineering and production contractor in the United States. As the chief executive officer, he implemented many innovative design developments that resulted in improved defense products which contributed immeasurably to the U.S. armed services.

Mr. Barr has provided the impetus toward product development and direction for innumerable initiatives and programs in the production of high-technology systems of electronic military training equipment, ordnance systems, combat vehicles, and remote pilotless aircraft used by Government and industry. His leadership, professional competence, and understanding of defense preparedness has made AAI Corp. on the the Defense Department's 100 largest suppliers of military equipment. Mr. Barr, a graduate of the Academy of Aeronautics and a registered professional engineer, is one of the founding members of AAI, having started as chief design engineer of the company in 1950.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Barr holds over 120 patents in a variety of technical fields from missiles to solar energy, and is considered an authority on ordnance design. His work started in 1960 on long rod heavy metal penetrators for the 90-mm cannon and puller sabots. His design increased the armor-penetrating capability 10 times over previous ammunition. Rounds based on this design have been developed in many calibers ranging from 20-mm to 120-mm. His invention of the puller sabot allowed the projective to be packaged in a smaller cartridge case improving the firepower of existing conventional weapons. Mr. Barr also directed the development of the presently employed concepts for fin-stabilized sabot ammunition, flechette rounds, and multiple salvo rounds.

Mr. Barr originated the design of the T-92 light tank of the 1930's. He developed the concept of high survivability [HSTV-L] and he recently introduced the lightweight combat tank equipped for an air defense and antiarmor capability. One of his recent projects was the development of a light-weight tank equipped with a rapid-fire—70 rounds a minute—75-mm cannon. His imaginative and professional direction produced outstanding benefits in developing a rapid fire weapon using flechette rounds on a small vehicle with a low silhouette and high obliquity armor which can be transported by helicopter. Mr. Barr has contributed his inventiveness throughout the total scope of the lightweight armored combat vehicle system. His many contributions to the field of ordnance resulted in his induction into the Ordnance Hall of Fame in May 1985.

Prior to his 36 years of service with AAI Corp., Mr. Barr was with the Glenn L. Martin Co., now the Martin Marietta Corp., in Baltimore, responsible for the design of the Viking rocket, the most sophisticated U.S. missile program in the years following World War II. This dedication, technical ability and engineering direction resulted in the development of the Viking rocket that held altitude records in the early 1950's, soaring 135 miles about the Earth.

Mr. Barr's total service to the defense industry in key executive positions and industry committee exemplifies the highest traditions of distinguished service and reflected great credit upon himself, the defense industry and the U.S. armed services.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the family and many friends of Mr. Barr on this very special occasion in congratulating him for his many achievements in life. I also extend my best wishes for continuing success and good health during the many years ahead.

LEGISLATION TO RELIEVE SAVINGS AND LOAN CRISIS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard about the savings and loan crisis. Some thrifts are in big trouble due to the large reduction in oil prices and the collapse of certain real estate markets in the Southwest. However, it is also clear that many thrifts simply bet the bank on risky investments and lost. Members of Congress also deserve much of the blame for the crisis, because as we deregulated the thrift industry we also left in place a system of federally backed insurance that was appropriate for a highly regulated industry, but, not a deregulated one. The net result was a disaster—savings and loans were given an incentive to engage in risky investments because they knew that the Federal Government would be there to pick up the pieces in the event that their risky investments went sour. Today, therefore, hundreds of savings and loans face the prospect of bankruptcy and the Federal Government must confront the possibility of bailing out depositors and selected institutions to the tune of between $50 and $100 billion.

In response to this crisis, we have heard sundry proposals. Some include a large tax hike while others contemplate a complete reform of the way in which we insure this industry. Just a few days ago, the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, outlined a plan that could become one of the approaches that the Federal Government could adopt to deal with this mess. The league, a politically powerful trade organization, said the cost of resolving the S&L crisis would reach $92 billion over 10 years and should be handled by a new Government "resolution corporation." The new agency would raise money to close or merge S&L's by selling notes guaranteed by the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I have recently introduced legislation that will play a vital role in contributing to this debate. My plan is exciting because it does not include a tax increase and it does not require the Federal Government to finance this bailout in a manner that will soak up an excessive amount of capital from the private sector. My plan is straightfo ward—the Federal Government would issue gold backed bonds, in denominations of $10,000. These bonds would be issued to depositors of failed institutions, as determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. These bonds will have an annual investment yield of 2 percent per year, compounded annually, and they will mature at the end of a 10-year period beginning on the date of issuance. Most importantly, they will be redeemable to maturity in gold.

Now all of my friends, and many of my foes, know that I have advocated the repeal of fiat currency and the concept that we should once again back our currency with gold. While I still support this idea, this bill does not achieve this end and now is not the time to discuss this issue. The purpose of this bill is simple—I believe that by backing these bonds in gold, the Federal Government will have a unique opportunity to make good on its obligation to the depositors of failed thrifts without soaking the good people of this country or bankrupting the Treasury.

My bill would allow the Federal Government to avoid adding more short term, high interest debt to our budget deficit by financing the bailout of the thrift industry with low interest debt. You see, the public will purchase gold backed bonds that yield 2 percent per year because they know that these bonds are as good as gold. The public understands that fiat backed bonds, currently printed by the Treasury, include a 6-percent premium to account for the anticipated rate of inflation. But bonds that are backed in gold are not affected by inflation because gold always retains its value. In 1928, for example, one could purchase a two-door Chevrolet with a rumble seat for $720 or 36 ounces of gold. Thirty-six ounces of gold today at around $400 per ounce will buy two fine Ford Escorts. In 1932, one could purchase a good suit of clothes for $20 or 1 ounce of gold. One ounce of gold will buy you a fine suit today. It should be noted that the gold at Fort Knox alone is currently valued at over $60 billion dollars and it is sitting idle. It also should be noted that these gold backed bonds would be negotiable for anyone needing cash.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that you and the other Members of the House will consider my proposal. Although it is an idea that sits outside of the current debate, it is workable. There are recent examples of gold-bond financing that have been used successfully in the private sector that can provide the Federal Government with a model. One of the best known examples was reported in the New York Times on February 12, 1988. According to this report, Newmount Mining Corp. borrowed 1 million ounces of gold for 5 years at 2½ percent interest. It then sold the bullion for close to one-half billion dollars, and used the proceeds to reduce its 8 percent debt by about one-third. Now my proposal is somewhat different, but it would nevertheless provide the Federal Government with similar benefits. I urge my colleagues to consider this proposal as part of our efforts to deal with this terrible crisis.

FOREST SERVICE IN NEW MEXICO WORKING WITH LOCAL COMMUNITY TO PROVIDE JOBS AND IMPROVE RELATIONS

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues the fine work being done by the U.S. Forest Service in northern New Mexico. New Mexico has a long history of rural Hispanic people utilizing the abundant natural resources of the mountains and forests. When New Mexico became part of the United States the traditional ways of using the land were disrupted. Many New Mexicans lost the land that they had received through Spanish and Mexican land grants. Much of this land became part of our national forest system.

This history has resulted in mistrust and even armed conflict between these New Mexicans and the U.S. Forest Service that persists to this day. That is why it is especially noteworthy that the Carson National Forest in New Mexico has joined with a local group of woodcutters known as the Madera Forest Products Association in a partnership to provide jobs and community development.

I have attached a recent newspaper article describing this exciting business venture. My congratulations to the Southwestern Region of the Forest Service, the Carson National Forest and especially former District Ranger Gilbert Vigil who was invaluable in setting up this business. I also commend Luis Torres who helped the woodcutters organize Madera Forest Products Association. This venture is an important step in improving the local economy and the relationship between the Forest Service and the citizens of northern New Mexico.

[From the North Albuquerque Journal, Sept. 2, 1988]

WOODCUTTERS, FOREST SERVICE JOIN FORCES TO CREATE JOBS

(By Jim Danneskiold)

In Northern New Mexico, "Las Florestas" has long been a term of mistrust and even contempt for members of the U.S. Forest Service.

After the U.S. Court of Private Land Claims adjudicated the Spanish land grants at the turn of the century, forest and grazing lands became the property of the government. Federal forest policies often were incompatible with traditional land-use practices, which led to angry confrontations.

But a small band of woodcutters from Vallecitos and La Madera have joined forces with the Forest Service to create permanent jobs and a base for future economic development in their area.

Luis Torres, a community organizer based in Espanola, has helped about 25 villagers organize Madera Forest Products Association, which has started selling firewood from its woodlot a half-mile south of Vallecitos on NM 111.

"We're setting up a firewood business to provide employment, but one of our primary goals is a community development effort," Torres explained.

The association has a contract with the Carson National Forest that assures it of up to 1.1 million board feet of fuelwood a year under the provisions of the Federal Sustained Yield Act of 1948.

The act created the Vallecitos Sustained Yield Unit in the El Rito District of the Carson. The 70,000-acre unit is one of seven set up in the national forests on an experimental basis.

"The thinking then was that the unit should somehow be supportive of the local economy," Torres explained.

When the Carson National Forest adopted its land management plan last year, Forest Service officials recognized the needs of the local economy by requiring area saw-mills to hire local workers and by reserving 1.1 million board feet of fuelwood and 1 million board feet of saw timber in the Vallecitos unit for local economic development, Torres said.

Former El Rito District Ranger Gilbert Vigil, who now works with the Southwestern Regional office in Santa Fe, has been helping the association set up its business. Torres said Vigil's help has been invaluable.

"The forests of Northern New Mexico need Northern New Mexicans administering them," Torres said. Working with the area's young people is one of the association's aims, he said, adding that the woodcutters hope to encourage young people to consider careers in natural resources.

The association recently incorporated, and has stockpiled about 70 cords of firewood, Torres said. The group is relying on word-of-mouth advertising, and expects Santa Fe to be the principal market for the wood, which currently is selling for $40 a pickup load.

"We think we can get people to go up and get a load of wood from us, rather than beat up your truck and have to borrow a power saw from your brother-in-law," Torres explained. "We can do it a heck of a lot cheaper than they can do it themselves."

Once the business is established, the association plans to use its profits for community development, Torres said.

"We're real interested in trying to provide some recreational opportunities for the young people in the area—an alternative to drinking beer on Saturday afternoons," Torres said.

The association has its eye on an abandoned schoolhouse in La Madera, which it hopes to acquire and renovate into a clubhouse for young people, complete with a game room.

Torres said the woodlot is open for business all day Saturdays and on Wednesday afternoons. Anyone interested in buying wood then or by appointment at another time should call 582-4200.

SUPPORT FOR VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION SPENDING

HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today the Veterans' Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, received testimony on the administration's proposed spending plan for veterans' programs.

Mr. Speaker, this budget proposal would turn back the clock on any feasible plan to meet the needs of the aging veteran population. The Veterans' Administration has begun to terminate health care programs, take hospital beds out of service, and deny to certain groups of veterans care across the country. This proposal projects unrealistic declines in the number of veterans utilizing VA health care services and funding cuts have been calculated based on these assumptions.

The proposed budget also cuts the number of full-time medical and research employees by 8,957 and requests medical facility construction funding that falls short of the Veterans' Administration own recommendations for fiscal year 1990 by $180.3 million.

In addition, this fiscal year, the Veterans' Administration faces a $432 million shortfall for funds to operate our Nations VA medical centers. If there is no supplemental for this year's budget, next year's shortfall is expected to be approximately $990 million.

To my colleagues on the Budget Committee, I urge you to adopt a budget with realistic spending levels to ensure that our Nation's veterans can continue to receive the care they are entitled to. To my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, I urge you to give favorable consideration to supplemental spending to prevent our VA medical centers from closing their doors to needy veterans.

CONGRESS FEELS SLEDGEHAMMER OF PUBLIC OPINION

HON. JIM BUNNING

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are voting on this resolution of disapproval today, in itself, is a major victory for the American people and proves once again that our system of Government can be responsive and can be representative when the public gets involved.

For several weeks now, a group of us have been trying to force this pay raise proposal to the House floor for an up or down vote. But we got nowhere. At least we got nowhere until the sledgehammer of public opinion started to be felt.

The flood of outrage that has filled our mailbags and has kept those congressional phone lines burning has prevailed. The people have turned this whole thing around. The public has smashed what started out to be a grand conspiracy of self serving silence here in this body.

So this vote today is a great victory for the people and a validation of representative government.

The people recognized the fact that Congress doesn't deserve a raise—certainly not a 51-percent pay hike or a 30-percent pay hike. And they let their representatives know how they felt. And that is the way it is supposed to work.

It is unfortunate that it took such a dramatic outpouring of public sentiment to wake this body up to its responsibility. The fact that our leadership tried to avoid this day of reckoning has to hurt the image and reputation of this body in the publics mind. But in the end, the people did win, and when that happens, we all win.

So, I congratulate the people back home who got involved and made their feelings known. And I urge my colleagues to vote for this resolution of disapproval, so we can get this pay raise charade behind us and get down to the business of the Nation.

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGE MILLS

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a member of my community who has spent his lifetime providing information and enjoyment to his fellow citizens. George Mills has been a cameraman for television WJZ-TV in Baltimore, MD, for the past 37 years. During his career George covered every Presidential inauguration from President Eisenhower to President Carter. George was also the cameraman who filmed the funeral ceremonies of President John F. Kennedy at Arlington National Cemetery.

There is a lighter side to George's career as well. During his tenure at WJZ-TV he covered virtually every major sporting event in the State, including both the Baltimore Colts and the Baltimore Orioles. In fact, he regards his filming of the Orioles' victorious 1966 World Series as his biggest career thrill.

George, who is a veteran of the Korean war, has been an active member of his community. He has volunteered his time to serve as a coach for numerous youth leagues as well as coaching the WJZ-TV basketball team for a number of years.

I salute my friend George on the occasion of his retirement. I request that my fellow Members join me in this well-deserved tribute.

GAO SHOULD AUDIT FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AND BANKS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I will reintroduce a bill to require the General Accounting Office to conduct a complete and thorough audit of the Federal Reserve System and banks.

Such an audit of the Federal Reserve is necessary when one considers that the Federal Reserve, the FDIC, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency "are empowered to carry out functions crucial to our system of Government and to our Nation's economy." Yet amazingly enough, Congress enacted a law that prevents the GAO from auditing these vital entities of our National Government. The ramifications of this secrecy take on greater significance when one considers that the Monetary Control Act allows the Fed to purchase paper obligations of foreign governments and use them as collateral for Federal Reserve notes. In stating a reason for excluding these crucial functions from the purview of the GAO audit, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs wrote in 1978: The Federal Reserve must be able to independently conduct the Nation's monetary policy.

The Fed, unfortunately, has abused its independence. Paul Craig Roberts, an economist at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, argues that the Fed used its power to thwart the economic policies of the Reagan administration during 1981–82. This study provides a good example of Fed. independence.

In late 1980 and early 1981 when the Reagan administration was putting together its economic policy, there was an almost universal consensus that little could be done to get inflation quickly under control. The administration sought to deal with the economic situation by providing moderate, stable, and predictable monetary growth that would first stabilize the inflation rate and gradually bring it down. The administration also enacted tax policies which would contribute to lower real interest rates and increase private sector saving. These policies were also to be coupled with cuts in federal spending. Ultimately, Reagan wanted to promote long-term economic growth and stability.

But the Federal Reserve did not provide the moderate, stable, and predictable monetary growth desired by the Reagan administration. The Fed believed that Reagan's economic policies would cause inflation to explode and that the Fed would ultimately be blamed. Out of self interest, the Fed greatly reduced the supply of money. During 1981 alone, the Fed produced 75 percent of the total reduction in monetary growth that the administration had intended to be spread over a 6-year period.

The policies of the Fed did bring down inflation. But the price was high. Millions of individuals lost their jobs as the country suffered from the worst recession since the great depression. An elected administration saw its policies subverted by an independent, unelected body bent on self preservation.

By allowing the Congress to audit the Fed, we will finally be able to piece together how it makes its decisions. This will make the Fed more accountable to Congress. Since Congress is an elected body, such oversite will ultimately serve the goals of representative Government. It is important that the people be given an increased say in matters which affect their well-being in such a vital area.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO "MR. CIVIL LIBERTIES," ERNEST BESIG

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a champion of civil liberty and a defender of civil rights, Ernest Besig. It is my distinct pleasure to recognize Mr. Besig as the first recipient of the Korematsu Civil Rights Award for his outstanding and dedicated service toward ensuring the protection of rights for all members of our society.

Through his more than 50 years of service with the American Civil Liberties Union, Ernest Besig has played a remarkable role in defending civil liberties in California. Under Mr. Besig's leadership, the ACLU's Northern California chapter grew in membership from 60 to more than 12,500 at the time of his retirement in 1971. Indeed, Besig is credited with defining what civil liberty is today and has respectfully been referred to as "Mr. Civil Liberties" by over two generations of lawyers, judges and clients for his dedication to the Bill of Rights.

While Besig has achieved national acclaim for his involvement in many of our Nation's most critical civil rights cases, he is being honored for what he has readily acknowledged as his most controversial case.

In 1942, Ernest Besig courageously represented Fred Korematsu in his challenge to the constitutionality of relocation and internment of Japanese-Americans. Unsuccessful, Besig called the case "the most shocking examples of a Government abusing the rights of citizens," and remained committed to the defense of this case for nearly 30 years. In 1983, the Asian Law Caucus and a team of attorneys filed a writ of coram nobis to reopen Korematsu's case and Besig's undaunted efforts were finally vindicated by the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the convictions. Last year, we closed the book on this sad chapter in our history through the passage of the Civil Liberties Restoration Act of 1987.

Mr. Speaker, Ernest Besig's courage and commitment to the principles of justice has assured him a place in history, the respect of all, and the gratitude of a nation. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Ernest Besig for his efforts to ensure a more just society.

PETER CHAHALES: A MASPETH INSTITUTION

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, one of the best features of the Queens edition of Newsday is a weekly column entitled "Queens Profile." This entry provides a biographical sketch of a prominent citizen of the Borough of Queens. Recently Newsday chose to feature my good friend and constituent, Peter Chahales. Peter, who is known informally as the Locality Mayor of Maspeth, has owned and operated the Spartan Restaurant for 32 years.

Mr. Speaker, Peter is a neighborhood institution and a pillar in the Greek community. I have been privileged to know him and work with him. The "Queens Profile" is an excellent biographical capsule of Peter's long and illustrious career as a businessman and civic leader and I ask that the article be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

QUEENS PROFILE—PETER CHAHALES

Job: Owner of the Spartan Restaurant in Maspeth for 32 years; known as the 'Locality Mayor of Maspeth,' he has been active in the community for more than 30 years, including as a member of Community Board 2 and as president of the Maspeth Chamber of Commerce and Maspeth Citizens Committee; raises funds for the Police Athletic League and is an active member of the Hellenic American Neighborhood Action Committee and the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association; acts as a community liaison to the Queens borough president; member of the Antique Auto Club of America

Biography: 67, born on Manhattan's East Side; before going into the restaurant business he was a song-and-dance man in vaudeville and burlesque; ran unsuccessfully for the State Senate and Assembly; married, two children, five grandchildren

Residence: House in Maspeth

Major accomplishment: "Playing an important role in uniting the community of Maspeth."

Best thing about Queens: "Pride in neighborhood and concern for community."

Community concerns: "We need the same thing that everybody else is making for. We need more police. The drug problem is a terrible, terrible thing, and we have it here, too."

LET'S HONOR OUR FORGOTTEN VETS

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today, along with 30 of my colleagues, legislation to recognize the efforts and sacrifices of our Korean war veterans. On June 25, 1950, armed forces from North Korea attacked the Republic of Korea. On June 27, 1950, President Truman ordered American forces to support the Republic of Korea, thus beginning American involvement in a 3-year conflict in which over 1 million United States soldiers served.

Korean war veterans represent America's forgotten veterans. These men and women served bravely, and their deeds and heroics have largely gone unnoticed. Our servicemen fought in a wide variety of terrains and conditions which ranged from tropical heat to arctic cold. Although our troops were outnumbered by the North Koreans and Chinese, they consistently outfought both. American pilots shot down 13 Communist aircraft for every one casualty they suffered. The Navy sealed off the North Korean peninsula from the outside world, and made the resupply of U.N. troops possible.

When the armistice between the United Nation's and North Korean forces was signed on July 27, 1953, over 54,000 servicemen had given their lives in defense of freedom in the Republic of Korea. In addition, of the 10,000 Americans that were captured by the North Koreans, only 3,000 survived their brutual treatment. From the initial fighting on the Pusan perimeter, to the brilliant landing at the Inchon Peninsula, to the stalemate trench warfare conditions, American soldiers demonstrated tremendous skill and courage.

I invite my colleagues to join us in sponsoring this measure. By setting aside July 27 as National Korean War Veterans Remembrance Day, we can honor those who served so bravely in Korean.

REINTRODUCTION OF WATER STORAGE LEGISLATION

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR.

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, last year I introduced legislation which addressed an existing and growing problem related to water quality and availability. During 1988 we witnessed one of the worst drought years in our history which called for congressional attention and action to provide relief to our Nation's farmers. As bad as last year was, many areas of this country are still suffering from dry conditions and lack of water threatens today the harvest of 1989.

My legislation during the 100th Congress relating to this problem had the purpose of providing incentives to private landowners to construct water storage reservoirs on their farms. The incentive was in the form of an Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service provision which would allow farmers who made such improvements, under limited conditions, to designate acreage used for water storage as acreage conservation reserve, or what is commonly known as set-aside.

Upon introduction, my legislation drew the immedate attention and support from a wide range of interests both within and outside the agricultural community. Farmers saw the measure as an opportunity to increase the value of their property both through capital improvements plus a more efficient means of establishing compliance with ASCS programs. Commodity groups felt that this measure would have a more stabilizing effect on farm prices since land would be taken out of production on a more permanent basis and help avoid the roller coaster effect of rising and falling markets due to overreaction to temporary conditions.

Environmental and wildlife enthusiasts supported the legislation as a means of increasing wildlife habitat and enhancing the Nation's wetland inventory. The legislation would also help the control of sedimentation and other forms of nonpoint source pollution related to farm activity.

Water resource and conservation management groups supported my legislation as a proper response to our growing water quality and availability problems. Today, much of the farming community has come to rely on irrigation as a necessary element in an economically viable farming operation. Unfortunately, most of the water resources used for this purpose have been coming from our fragile ground water supply. My legislation will not have the result of increased irrigation, rather, it will simply allow farmers to shift their means of operation away from ground water depletion and to the more practical and efficient use of excess surface water.

The academic community of land-grant institutions across the country agree that the legislation I introduced last year would be of benefit to the variety of interests described above. I received support from agriculture and water quality specialists from universities in Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Utah, Mississippi, Arkansas, and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing the legislation which I have just described. I would like to point out just a few minor revisions from the original bill that are present in that which I offer today. First, I am clarifying that water stored under the provisions of my legislation would not be limited to specific use. If the landowners wished to construct a reservoir solely for wildlife habitat or recreation, such use would be within the scope of the bill. Also, I am adding language which would require that any reservoir constructed for purposes of this bill be in compliance with an established conservation plan approved by the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. This provision would ensure that proper and safe reservoir construction would be used and also increase the use of conservation plans in areas where they might not otherwise be required.

We have all read the reports of ongoing drought in much of the Nation. We are also aware of the ground water depletion and water quality problems everywhere. I urge this Congress to join with me in offering this simple incentive to our Nation's farmers as one step in coming to grips with this national problem.

ACCOUNTING METHODS—THE BASIC ESSENTIAL FACT CONGRESSIONAL DEBATE CONCERNING FEDERAL DEFICIT REDUCTION MISSES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, congressional debate concerning Federal deficit reduction misses a basic, essential fact—accounting methods. Without doubt, an area as important as deficit reduction must be considered carefully, and decisions, must be based on reliable financial information. In the absence of such information, we would be making spending decisions without sound financial planning and jeopardizing the future of necessary programs. In fact, this is happening right now.

Currently, the U.S. Government requires no publication of the financial statements of its various entities, and used the cash basis of accounting for budget reporting. This presents some serious problems. According to one of the world's largest accounting firms, Arthur Andersen & Co., cash-basis, accounting "hides the costs of current programs, and results in misinformation and misunderstanding."

Cash-basis accounting keeps track of all the money which an organization received and paid out. It ignores money which an organization will both earn and owe in the future. It is an accounting method tailored to the needs of small businesses. When applied to a large government, it falls short of providing reliable information needed for sound policymaking decisions and therefore creates a clouded financial picture. A more appropriate alternative to cash-basis accounting is accrual-basis accounting or GAAP.

Apply GAAP [Generally Accepted Accounting Procedures] produces a more accurate picture of our Government's financial health. Accrual-based accounting matches expenses with their associated revenues; in other words, it recognizes financial events as they occur. Hence, it keeps track of all assets and liabilities. It provides the tools to evaluate both the current and future financial picture of an organization. The U.S. Government requires numerous State and local governments and all publicly held companies to prepare financial statements in accordance with GAAP. This ensures that these organizations will use the most sophisticated accounting methods presently available.

A study conducted by Arthur Andersen & Co. compared consolidated financial statements under cash-basis accounting with statements under GAAP. Under GAAP, the more accurate of the two, the deficit for 1984, for instance, was $148.1 billion higher than under cash-basis accounting. GAAP basis accounting shows that the National Government has been running deficits for the last decade which have exceeded the reported deficits by as much as 100 percent and 200 percent.

These deficits manifest a profound problem: A lack of accountability of elected officials to their constituents. Members of Congress, under the present accounting methods, are able to adopt programs which provide benefits currently without providing funding until later years. Individual citizens are therefore unable to judge whether their representatives are creating and maintaining programs in a fiscally responsible manner.

I plan to introduce the "Truth in Government Accounting Act of 1989," which will make the National Government fiscally responsible to the people. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and make public, for each fiscal year, consolidate financial statements for the United States based on accrual accounting procedures. These statements shall include reports on the operations of all instrumentalities of the U.S. Government. This will force the National Government to stop using the cash-basis of accounting and start using the GAAP method.

Some have argued that GAAP is not suited for government use. But Charles A. Bowsher, the Comptroller General of the United States, believes that the financial reporting of the National Government would benefit from the use of GAAP. GAAP has already been used successfully by governments. The National Government required New York City, for instance, to adopt GAAP during the midseventies when that city was experiencing financial woes. Partly from improved financial reporting, the fiscal health of New York City is now much improved.

The time has now come to return our country to the path of fiscal responsibility. We must also make Members of Congress more accountable to their constituents. Be forcing the National Government to adopt GAAP procedures, we can further these noble goals. I urge my colleagues to consider my bill and support it.

U.S. AMBASSADOR WINSTON LORD DISCUSSES UNITED STATES-CHINESE RELATIONS

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House the text of an important and outstanding speech by the American Ambassador to the People's Republic of China, Winston Lord. This address, given last December 2 to the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco, marks the 10th anniversary of the establishment of full diplomatic relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China.

Shortly after Ambassador Lord delivered this speech in San Francisco, I had the great pleasure of spending time with him in Beijing and meeting with Chinese Government officials to discuss issues in Chinese-American relations. Our Nation is fortunate indeed to have a diplomat with his great experience and insight to represent our interests in the People's Republic.

Ambassador Lord's speech, entitled: "A Stroll Through Tiananmen Square: Tradition, Tansition, and the Future in Sino-American Relations," points to the developing nature of bilateral relations with the People's Republic of China. Our relations have come a long way since President Nixon's first trip to Beijing in 1972, and as Ambassador Lord notes, "For every well-publicized dispute, hundreds of agreements and thousands of friendships are formed without fanfare."

Yet as a result of our growing friendship, our countries have many new issues to discuss and areas of cooperation to explore. We must address how we will manage trade between us, how we can cooperate in the international diplomatic arena, and how we can deal with fundamental human rights.

There is no question that important differences separate us and the Chinese on human rights, and Ambassador Lord emphasized in particular with regard to the situation of the Tibetan people that, "The Chinese should open up Tibet more to the press and others so the world can make informed judgments. And together with others, we urge them to move further to reflect the needs of the Tibetan people." While the Ambassador noted that there are occasional differences between the executive and legislative branches of our Government on details, "We share the same human rights concerns in Tibet, as elsewhere."

As Ambassador Lord noted, our countries are "friends, not allies." With time and determination the bond between us will surely mature. It is important that we maintain the course of improving relations with the People's Republic of China which were established by Presidents Nixon and Carter.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to read this important speech.

A STROLL THROUGH TIANANMEN SQUARE: TRADITION, TRANSITION, AND THE FUTURE IN SINO-AMERICAN RELATIONS

INTRODUCTION

Tiananmen Square, in the center of Beijing, is a symbol of China. The largest open square anywhere in the world, it attracts millions of visitors every year. Many of you have wandered there or seen images of its vast expanse.

At the north end of the square sits Tiananmen—the Gate of Heavenly Peace. Standing on that gate on October 1, 1949, Mao Zedong proclaimed the establishment of the People's Republic of China. Today national emblems suspended from Tiananmen proclaim the PRC's reemergence on the world stage.

On the square's west side looms the Great Hall of the People. Here American Presidents from Richard Nixon to Ronald Reagan have toured the globe with Chinese leaders. Here gallons of white-lightning toasts have hailed growing relations between America and China.

Blocking the square's south side is the granite and marble Memorial Hall encasing Chairman Mao. Close by is the world's largest Kentucky Fried Chicken. On some days, the queues paying respects to the Chairman and sampling the finger-lickin' recipe of the Colonel are equally long. This juxtaposition evokes China's struggle to modernize.

North, west, and south: China's role in the world. Sino-American relations. China's domestic panorama.

Come with me, then, on a stroll through Tiananmen Square. From where so much symbolizes the past, let us look at the present and the future.

CHINA'S ROLE IN THE WORLD

American perceptions of China have fluctuated widely—whether in the political, economic, or cultural spheres.

Our political attitudes toward China have swung between romance and hostility. We have chased red herrings; we have donned rose-colored glasses. For many Westerners, China has been a chameleon, changing color to reflect the reality we are inclined to see, whether yellow hordes, blue ants, or red guards.

Likewise, our views of Chinese economic opportunities have swayed between exaggerated vistas of greenbacks and the deep pessimism of black holes. We dream of lighting China's lamps, of selling our wares to a billion people. We decry China's restraints, renegotiations, and red-tape.

In the cultural area, our contacts multiply, but we at once rejoice and despair. A Chinese cast directed by Charlton Heston performs "The Caine Mutiny" to standing ovations and rave reviews. But Democracy Wall is only a memory and well-known Chinese scholars are denied permission to travel abroad.

These cycles of romance and hostility, boom and bust, elation and depression tell as much about our own perceptions as they do about China. We need to recall the Chinese symbol of yin-and-yang—that things in China are rarely as good or bad as they seem. A steadier vision should encompass the contradictions which reflect Chinese reality.

That reality is rooted in a long, possessive history. For millenia, China was the Middle Kingdom—in preeminence and seclusion. It exacted tributes from its neighbors and relied on itself. Then Lord Macartney's refusal to kowtow in 1792 presaged looming confrontations between a traditional China and an intrusive world. Ever since, China has struggled to take its place as an equal member of the international community, until recent decades suffering foreign encroachment. In short the Chinese have known only three ways to deal with outsiders—ignore them, dominate them, or be subjugated by them. This legacy makes opening to the outside world a dramatic—and traumatic—process.

Today China asserts itself forcefully on the global stage. With the world's largest population, nuclear arms, and a Security Council seat, the PRC is increasingly engaged in Asia and beyond. Through political ties, trade, and arms sales, Beijing spreads its influence to more distant regions. It sells missiles and launches satellites. It projects power in its own neighborhood and pays greater attention to ours. It fields a large Olympic contingent and is dismayed when its athletes reap only a modest harvest of gold.

As China's position in the world evolves, so do its relations with other nations, most prominently the Soviet Union, the countries in Asia, and the United States.

Indeed, as this week's headlines declare, China's Foreign Minister is now visiting Moscow for the first time in three decades. A summit is likely next spring. To the extent improved Sino-Soviet relations lessen tensions in Asia and elsewhere, it is a welcome development. Concerned observers should understand that this relationship has its own dynamic—and inherent limits. While the West poses no threat to China, the long Sino-Soviet border and the ethnic peoples astride it will not disappear. While the West offers capital, technology, and management to assist Chinese modernization, the Soviet Union has its hands full modernizing itself.

In Asia, China and America continue to take parallel approaches on many issues. For years, we have worked with Pakistan, the Mujahadeen, China, and others to effect an event of major historical importance—the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. We are monitoring the situation closely to see that the Soviets are as good as their word.

in Cambodia, with the ASEAN countries in the lead, we are cooperating with China to achieve a total Vietnamese withdrawal and a political settlement chosen freely by the Khmer people. We look to Prince Sihanouk as the future leader of an independent, democratic Kampuchea. We insist on a carefully circumscribed role for the barbaric Khmer Rouge.

On the Korean peninsula, China and America share the objectives of maintaining peace and stability, though our approaches sometimes differ. There are some hopeful signs. South Korean President Roh has made dramatic proposals which seek reconciliation. China and the Soviet Union are fast developing unofficial contacts with the South. The U.S. recently announced initiatives aimed at easing the North's isolation. But direct exchanges between North and South hold the key to real peace.

For the first time in a century, Beijing, Tokyo, and Washington enjoy positive relations with one another. China is building cooperation with Japan, but remains deeply ambivalent about Tokyo's role as an economic giant and future military power. Strong U.S.-Japanese relations provide insurance that Tokyo will continue to play a positive role in the region and the world.

Beyond Asia, Chinese and American positions are less harmonious in such areas as the Middle East, South Africa, and Central America. We are friends, not allies. We need to deepen our dialogue, where we diverge as well as where we converge. And we should expand our agenda—for example, to increase our cooperation on drug control, fight the scourge of terrorism, and clear up the environment.

This dialogue takes place against the backdrop of an international landscape which has been transformed over the past ten years. The Soviet-American balance has been redressed. Facing huge problems at home, Gorbachev strives for reform. Facing firmness abroad, he seeks to cut the costs of adventurism while pursuing Soviet interests by more subtle means. Triangular diplomacy is blurred. The world becomes more multipolar. Democracy and the market are gaining everywhere. In an information age, countries receptive to new ideas and technologies forge ahead. Closed and controlled societies fall behind.

These trends will continue into the next century and inevitably affect how China and America relate and react to one another. But, contrary to some fashionable pundits, I strongly believe strategic factors will remain crucial to our cooperation with China. To be sure, they are more muted and nuanced than before. But our two nations share a continuing stake in preserving global and regional balances. Moreover, the history and geography of Sino-Soviet relations will not change. Nor will traditional Chinese attitudes about dealing with near and far powers. Nor will America's view that China's integrity is essential for the world equilibrium.

SINO-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Outside the Great Hall on the west of Tiananmen Square, cars with U.S. embassy plates are now commonplace. Those inside the Hall representing our country are treating a wide range of Sino-American bilateral projects, which have greatly expanded since we first came together in the 1970's. These include:

Systematic political dialogue. Countless delegations tackle a broad agenda. In just the past few months, our Secretaries of State and Defense have visisted China, and two Vice Premiers have travelled across America.

Multiplied economic opportunities. The U.S. is China's second largest export market, its largest investor after Hong Kong. This year, two-way trade is growing by 25 percent and will surpass $13 billion. American companies have committed more than $3 billion in China and formed over 400 joint ventures.

Science and technology cooperation ranging from distant galaxies to alligators in the Yangtze and Mississippi rivers.

A military relationship which threatens no one and promotes stability.

Burgeoning educational and cultural exchanges. Artists and experts, teachers and tourists criss-cross the ocean. This year, over 50,000 Chinese citizens will travel to the U.S. while some 300,000 Americans will visit China.

The U.S. currently plays host and mentor to more than 30,000 Chinese students. They absorb a keen sense of American values and achievements and will form future bridges of cooperation. We hope they will return to help their country modernize. It is up to China, of course, to ensure that appropriate jobs, housing, and opportunities welcome them home.

China's decision to host the Peace Corps is a recent breakthrough. For the first time ever in a communist country, American volunteers will soon teach and learn and create enduring links of friendship.

On this tenth anniversary of normalized relations, we are right to celebrate these myriad accomplishments. But our very successes have spawned fresh challenges.

The maturing of Sino-American relations makes radical departures or dramatic breakthroughs less likely. As a result, popular attention often focuses on specific problems rather than on the generally sound state of our relationship.

Ten years have broadened and deepened contact between our societies, stretching our horizons, and multiplying constituencies in each country for strong relations. However, as the world changes, as our ties grow thicker, as China develops, certain issues loom larger.

Using a few concrete examples, let me sketch how America and china might each approach some challenges in the political, economic, and cultural realms. As I do, remember that for every well-publicized dispute, hundreds of agreements and thousands of friendships are formed without fanfare.

First, the political dimension. During the past couple of years we have witnessed encouraging trends in East-West relations and regional conflicts. Chinese-American dialogue and cooperation have played an important role in this process. In a world of shifting power, fluid alignments, and greater interdependence, China and America must maintain a sense of the overall stakes in our relations. This involves a sensitivity to one another's domestic imperatives, a resort to genuine dialogue, not brinkmanship. Such an approach has been evident in our recent exchanges on two topics which reflect China's expanding global influence—the launching of satellites and the spread of ballistic missiles.

To boost both its international prestige and its hard currency, China has made marketing its satellite launch capability an urgent priority. Despite conflicting pressures at home and abroad, President Reagan recently agreed in principle to the use of Chinese rockets to launch some American satellites, subject to three conditions. American and Chinese negotiators have resolved the problems of liability and technology transfer. This week they are working on difficult economic issues in our effort to assure fair competition.

In recent months we have launched an earnest dialogue with China regarding the specter of missile proliferation. The prospect of these weapons, together with nuclear and chemical technology, reaching volatile regions is truly alarming. This is a global issue involving all potential suppliers and recipients. We have conveyed our views to Beijing that these weapons are special and destabilizing, that all nations, including China, have an interest in checking their spread. Recent discussions have been productive, helping to clarify Chinese intentions. But great risks persist. We hope China will work with us and others to ensure that missile proliferation does not threaten stability and peace.

While not linked, the issues of satellites and missiles suggest the will and ability of our two countries to listen closely to one another. This quality will be sorely needed on both sides as we move through a more complex world.

High on the Chinese political agenda is the question of Taiwan. The most senior American officials have made clear that we continue to abide by the three Sino-American communiques. Beijing urges us to promote reconciliation between the Mainland and Taiwan, but we believe this is a process that must be worked out peacefully by the two sides themselves. While we will not advocate, neither will we obstruct. We welcome recent remarkable increases in indirect trade and human interchange and seek to foster an environment in which such developments can continue to take place.

Second, the economic dimension.

The rapid expansion of Sino-American economic cooperation has produced some hard bargaining and hard feelings as well as hard cash for both sides. It has fulfilled some dreams—and dashed others—of business people on both sides. Problems abound, but the fact remains that we have only begun to tap the potential in our cooperation at a time when the world's economic gravity is shifting to the Pacific.

On the U.S. side, we should encourage China's reforms while recognizing their ultimate success depends on the Chinese themselves. Specifically, we can:

Keep our market open. History attests to the folly of protectionism.

Transfer technology consistent with national security concerns and progress in bilateral relations.

Welcome China's application for the GATT while requiring the reforms to justify entry.

Shape effective strategies to face subsidized competition from third countries, while preserving the basic separation of government and business.

Steer between unrealistic expectations and unwarranted despair. American companies should look hard before leaping into investment. At the same time, they should consider not only their early profits, but also the future of China's economic strength.

China's policy-makers know they must attract foreign technology and investment if they are to fulfill their economic potential. To this end, the Chinese can:

Continue moving toward a pluralistic, market economy and a trade and investment climate which is clear, fair, and sure.

Surmount the inflation, inefficiency, corruption, and social instability which plague other countries in similar transitions.

Reduce high tariffs and import barriers; loosen controls over foreign exchange and import licenses; and allow competition in the services sector.

Streamline bureaucracy, speed negotiations, ensure implementation. Recognize that endless re-negotiation and haggling can be self-defeating.

Continue improving their infrastructure to ensure reliable access to power, raw materials, and transportation.

Meet U.S. national security concerns by providing information on the end use of technology.

Protect intellectual property. As China seeks to attract foreign technology and makes breakthroughs of its own, its self-interest will increasingly be at stake.

Together we can work on measures to improve our economic cooperation. In just the past two months, we have made a breakthrough to a maritime agreement after years of negotiation. A bilateral investment treaty remains to be completed.

Finally, the cultural dimension. Expanded contacts between our societies increase mutual understanding, but they highlight our fundamentally different values as well.

For example, human rights. Beijing should understand that as a nation of immigrants, America's concern for human rights is natural and universal. We do not single out China. In our global approach, we seek to strike a balance between our collective conscience and the sovereignty of nation-states.

In Tibet this summer, I frankly set forth American concerns, including foreign access and the humane treatment of prisoners. Americans need to remember that recognition of Chinese sovereignty over Tibet is a long-standing policy of our government, indeed of all governments in the world. This principle is a prerequisite for engaging the Chinese constructively on the situation within Tibet. So, too, is an acknowledgment that Beijing has taken some positive steps there since 1980.

Indeed throughout China there has been, since the Cultural Revolution, progress toward restoration and tolerance of religious and minority institutions and customs. No group more deserves such an approach than the Tibetans with their unique culture and religion. In response to global concerns, the Chinese should open up Tibet more to the press and others so the world can make informed judgments. And together with others, we urge them to move further to reflect the needs of the Tibetan people. While our executive and congressional branches do not always agree on details, we share the same human rights concerns in Tibet, as elsewhere.

China's population policy is another irritant between us. Americans need to understand that China confronts the classic Malthusian dilemma: a young and growing population, already over a billion people, living in a territory which is only one tenth arable and three-quarters urban sprawl, mountains and sand. Unrestrained population growth would doom China's future.

The Chinese in turn need to understand that Americans hold all life dear, that coercive or late-term abortions in any country are abhorrent to us. While Beijing's official policy prohibits forced abortions, clearer evidence that abuses are punished would be welcome. Let us hope we can find a way to help China's family planning policy without either compromising our values or imposing them.

Together China and America should be able to ease—or at least contain—our tactical quarrels, whether political, economic, or cultural. In recent years we have built solid foundations steadily, often quietly, by respecting each other's views and searching for mutual accommodation. This spirit should continue to infuse our relationship, for the long-term interests of both our nations dictate cooperation.

CHINA'S DOMESTIC SCENE

The south side of Tiananmen Square evokes the drama of China's changing domestic scene. This huge experiment will not only shape the future of one quarter of humanity but also color the course of peoples in the developing and socialist worlds. And it strongly affects overall Sino-American relations as well as our economic ties.

Recent press reports testify to China's current economic difficulties. Let me try briefly to put the current situation in perspective.

It is difficult to exaggerate the immensity of China's undertaking, either the boldness of reforms or their potential risks. China's leaders seek to strike a new social contract with their people by extending a revolutionary offer: exchange the "iron rice bowl" of guaranteed security for the opportunity for a better life.

Periods of pause and consolidation are an inevitable part of overhauling the economy of the world's most populous nation. But the current retrenchment differs from previous ones in several ways:

The Chinese seek to avoid the hard landing of previous corrections by permitting growth to continue at a slower, more sustainable pace.

While price reform is postponed, innovations like selling stocks in enterprises and houses to individuals are being introduced.

Beijing officials should understand better the impact on foreign traders and investors if they close their market. Although China's new policies have not been fully clarified, its leaders firmly state that no contracts with foreign enterprises will be cancelled. Current or new joint venture proposals will be scrutinized to see if they attract technology and earn foreign exchange or meet China's definition of "productivity." Energy and transportation projects fit the description; luxury hotels do not. As for Chinese import controls, America may have less cause for concern than countries which market consumer goods such as automobiles and electronics.

The Chinese recognize the dilemmas they face are the most serious since reform began. However, the tensions are probably less at the center in Beijing than between the center and the provinces. Local authorities have provided great dynamism, but they have also been running budget deficits and overheating the national economy. Beijing must find ways to regain central macroeconomic control without stifling local initiative.

Some press reports allege that China's leadership is in turmoil, that China could scuttle reforms and close its doors. It is true that China is grappling with the tough issues of reform at the same time it is making the political transition from Deng Xiaoping and the long-march veterans to new generations of leaders. It is also true that Chinese leaders debate policy vigorously. Given China's geographic expanse, its diverse population, and the volatility and complexity of its problems, one could hardly expect otherwise. Yet, China's debate seems to be more over the pace than the direction of reform. We do not see a fractious Chinese leadership engaged in an intense struggle for power.

Overall, China will remain open to the outside during this period—although credentials may be checked more closely at the door.

CONCLUSION

Tradition, transition, and the future come together in China as in few other places in the world.

Tiananmen Square—north, south, west.

An emerging China and a shrinking globe. The contours of Sino-American cooperation are being altered, but the basic imperatives persist. America welcomes a multipolar world of interdependence and openness. China reforms and looks outward.

A succession of Chinese leaders and four American Presidents of different persuasions, including President Reagan, have strengthened our relationship because they judged it in their nation's interest. So, I believe, will President Bush. Our approach to China—and Asia generally—should remain bipartisan.

A final thought. Squares, of course, have four sides. Yet I have deliberately not drawn in the last side of Tiananmen Square—the East, where days begin anew. In treating China we must resist the temptation to photograph the future, to impose a picture frame on a dynamic, vibrant nation which changes even as we meet.

The next time you stroll through Tiananmen Square, therefore, dwell not only on a history written but on a joint venture—and joint venture still unfolding. This month we celebrate the tenth anniversary of the normalization of Sino-American relations. Soon we will usher in a Pacific century. Although the past years have seen dramatic developments, China and America have merely begun a long voyage of friendship. Let us respect our differences, but reach for our potential. While measuring our tread, we should lift our vision. As we do, we will enrich our lives and those of future generations, here at home and around the world.

Thank you.

TRIBUTE TO VICTOR V. VEYSEY

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to praise a former Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Honorable Victor V. Veysey. Vic will soon be honored at the Imperial County Republican Associates' Lincoln Day Dinner.

Vic's experience and background are quite extraordinary. Born in 1915, he earned degrees from California Institute of Technology and Harvard University and did graduate work at Stanford University. Vic worked on the rocket development project at Cal Tech and was the works manager at a rubber plant during World War II. After that, he influenced many young students as a professor at Cal Tech and at Stanford Universities.

In the Imperial Valley, Vic Veysey began his career as a rancher and also turned toward public service. Vic served as a Brawley, CA School District board member and as an Imperial Valley College board member. In addition, he was an advisor to the U.S. Department of Agriculture until 1963 when he was elected to the California State assembly.

In November 1970, Vic Veysey was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives where he served in the 92d and 93d Congresses as a member of the Appropriations Committee. Since then, Vic has served the United States and his fellow Californians as the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, as director of Cal Tech's industrial relations center, and as California's secretary for industrial relations.

Vic Veysey has served his country, State, and neighbors well throughout his career. The Lincoln Day Dinner is just one indication of the lasting impression he has left on the community of Imperial Valley, CA. We've both been blessed with being able to serve the people of Imperial County and I'm proud to call Vic Veysey my friend.

STEEL IMPORT STABILIZATION EXTENSION ACT

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Executive Committee of the House Steel Caucus, today, I and 108 of my colleagues in the House of Representatives are introducing legislation extending the steel VRA program for a period of 5 years.

The steel caucus has been a strong advocate for import relief for the domestic steel industry. Our efforts have begun to pay off under the steel Voluntary Restraint Agreement Program [VRA's]. Since 1984, steel imports have declined from 26.4 percent to 20.4 percent and productivity has nearly doubled. Though these signs are encouraging, the job of obtaining the steel industry's competitiveness is not complete.

American steel producers compete in a world market dominated by foreign governments. In most steel producing countries, decisions about investment, disinvestment, production and pricing are influenced by the government. In addition, many foreign producers are heavily protected from foreign competition by high tariffs, quotas, restrictive import licensing and other nontariff barriers. These restrictive measures inevitably restrict U.S. steel producers from competing in the global and domestic steel markets. For the United States, the net affect has been plant closings and lost jobs.

The steel VRA Program, established as a trade policy in 1984 to take comprehensive action against unfair trade practices, is working. Under the VRA Program, the U.S. steel industry has made excellent progress toward its goal of becoming more competitive. Costs are being lowered sharply, labor productivity has been increased dramatically and product quality has been improved greatly.

Regardless of the progress made, substantially more remains to be done. New investment on a sustained basis of $3 to $5 billion annually is needed if the domestic steel industry is to match the competitiveness of its leading foreign competitors. After sustained losses of $12 billion between 1982 and 1986, the industry's financial gains of the past 18 months are inadequate to complete its comeback. Substantial reinvestment and modernization is still called for. Failure to extend the steel VRA's will abort completion of the steel industry's orderly restructuring. Moreover, in a world in which market forces are dominated by foreign government intervention, the restructuring of the steel industry will be hampered by the absence of an effective mechanism to deal with unfairly traded steel imports.

Steel is a notoriously cyclical industry. In 1988, the steel market, domestically and internationally, has been very strong. However, there is no assurance that the current strong market condition will last. Therefore, the steel VRA's are needed as a long-run mechanism to protect the steel industry from the likely flood of imports as the steel market weakens. A continuation of the steel VRA Program is not only called for, it is justified.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation being introduced goes beyond just providing assistance to the country's steel industry, it also means continued economic growth and prosperity for the Nation's economy.

HONORING JANET CARDILLO OF LEE, MA

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Janet Cardillo for her outstanding service to the Italian community. Janet is being honored by her friends and family at a testimonial dinner on February 11 for her many years of dedication to the people of Berkshire County and the State of Massachusetts.

Janet has always felt a strong affinity toward her Italian heritage and began working within the Italian community 15 years ago in 1974, when she joined the G. Marconi Lodge in Lee, MA. Members of the Marconi Lodge will agree that Janet's dedication and enthusiasm toward her work paved the way for her election as president of the lodge from 1981 to 1984.

Not only has Janet served as State deputy at the Amerita Lodge in Springfield, MA, but she has also served as State trustee for the Massachusetts Sons of Italy Lodge, a prestigious position she has been honored with for the past 4 years.

Janet Cardillo is truly a remarkable person. She has worked for over 18 years at Nuclear Components, Inc., in Great Barrington while raising four daughters and volunteering at various lodge functions. Most notably, Janet was the chairperson for the Annual Law Day in Berkshire County, a successful endeavor which took place in May 1988.

I congratulate and express my gratitude to you, Janet Cardillo, a woman with many honorable accomplishments. The testimonial which is being given in your honor is truly a testament to all of your many dedicated years of hard work. As a fellow Italian, I salute you, Janet. I wish you much success as you continue your services during the years ahead. Grazie, Janet, e buona fortuna!

HARRIET TUBMAN APPRECIATION DAY

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, February 1, 1989, marked the beginning of Black History Month. During the entire month of February, Americans will be saluting the contributions and achievements of African-Americans. Americans will remember the adversity that the sons and daughters of slavery had to overcome in order to fulfill their dreams of freedom and individual liberty.

I am exceptionally proud to come from a State that can boast of possessing a rich African-American political, artistic, and cultural heritage. Although Maryland was a slave State, she had the largest free black population of these States, and many active members in the Abolitionist movement. Perhaps the most noted of these crusaders is Harriet Tubman.

This year marks the 140th anniversary of Harriet Tubman's escape from slavery to freedom in the North. Born a slave in Dorchester County, MD, in 1821, Harriet was the granddaughter of slaves who were brought to America in chains from the mother continent of Africa. In 1849, Harriet's master died and rumors spread that her family was to be sold to a slave owner in the deep South. This news convinced Harriet Tubman that it was time for her to pursue her visions of living free in the North. Harriet escaped and made her way to Philadelphia. Not long after this time she became one of the most famous conductors of the famed Underground Railroad.

The Underground Railroad was an organized system that intentionally undermined the peculiar institution of slavery. The Underground Railroad depended heavily on the efforts of southern slaves, some southern whites, free blacks, and northern white abolitionists such as Levi Coffin and Thomas Garrett. The "conductors" of the railroad were responsible for delivering their "cargo" to prearranged destinations, while the "station masters" received, hid and fed the fugitive slaves. The Underground Railroad openly defied written statutes—particularly the harsh Fugitive Slave Act of 1850—which was designed to end the conduit of fugitive slaves escaping from the South.

Harriet Tubman is credited with guiding 300 slaves to freedom. Between 1850 and 1857 she courageously returned to Baltimore and the Eastern Shore of Maryland to spirit her brother and sister, including their families, to free States. A woman of deep spiritual conviction and devoted to serving God, Harriet was blessed with a profound depth of inner strength and vision. By far her most courageous and remarkable rescue was her dangerous excursion back into Maryland in 1857, when she hired a wagon and delivered her aging parents to the soil of the free States.

Harriet Tubman was an eager volunteer for the Union Army at the outbreak of the Civil War. Following the war Harriet continued to travel throughout the South and across the country, advocating social justice issues for African-Americans and women. Harriet Tubman attempted to organize schools for freemen in North Carolina and spent much of her time, resources and energy establishing the Harriet Tubman Home for Indigent Aged Negroes in her hometown of Auburn, NY, until her death in 1913.

Mr. Speaker, today we find many young people searching for role models and heroes, for adult guidance to help them chart their future direction. Harriet Tubman has long been one of the most positive and inspirational examples that I know. For generations American folklorists have told and retold the story of how this former slave—guided only by the North Star and the Lord—eluded unscrupulous slave trackers and bounty hunters.

I am deeply pleased that the 140th anniversary of Harriet Tubman's escape from slavery is not going unrecognized. The Black American Heritage Foundation, Inc., has declared February 7, 1989, as Harriet Tubman Appreciation Day. The commemorating ceremonies are scheduled to be held at the Brooklyn Union Gas Co. Auditorium, 89–67 162d Street, Jamaica, NY, which has been served amiably for the past 2 years by our distinguished colleague and my good friend FLOYD H. FLAKE, Democrat, 6th District.

In closing, I hope that my House colleagues will have the opportunity to participate in some of the planned Black History Month activities in their home districts and here in our Nation's Capital, to pay homage to great Americans such as Harriet Tubman.

PROTECT SOCIAL SECURITY

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation that prohibits State governments from taxing Social Securtity benefits. This bill is necessary because the 1983 Social Security Amendments enacted into law significantly reduced Social Security benefits for middle-income retirees. Without this bill, many of these same individuals are also being forced to pay additional taxes on their Social Security benefits, thus reducing their benefits even further. Although it is difficult to get exact information from the States, we know that seniors in about 16 States face the possibility of paying State taxes on their benefits.

Many States have laws that are parallel with the Federal taxation practices. Therefore they use the adjusted gross income reported on the Federal tax forms as the basis for an individual's income to compute State liability. Although some States have taken legislative action to provide a State income tax exemption for Social Security benefits included in Federal adjusted gross income, many have not. Unless specific legislation to the contrary is enacted in States adopting current Federal code provisions, Social Security benefits will automatically be included in those States' income tax bases. The incentive behind such a tax by the States is the tens of millions of dollars in potential revenues for needy State treasuries. While revenues from the Federal tax on Social Security benefits will be passed along by the Treasury to the Social Security trust fund, the revenues from a State tax on Social Security benefits do not go back into the Social Security trust fund. Instead, most State governments will use the revenues to trim their State budget deficits and finance future State programs. The States, in an effort to increase their revenues, are at the same time further penalizing those individuals who do save for their retirement. This double taxation of Social Security benefits by the Federal Government and the States creates an unjust burden on these recipients and a large disincentive for those who would otherwise want to continue working to supplement their income. Social Security recipients often live on very low incomes and cannot afford the added burden of State taxation.

When the 1983 Social Security Amendments were passed, the intention of the act was not to allow States to tax Social Security benefits. The intention was to restore solvency to the system upon which so many Americans depend. This bill will remedy this unfair burden levied on our seniors and restore justice to the system.

RESOLUTION ESTABLISHING NATIONAL TAP DANCE DAY

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, tap dancing is widely recognized as America's only original form of dance, yet for years it has been in danger of becoming a lost art. Though it was quite popular during the early part of this century, exerting considerable influence on the Broadway stage, jazz, and big band music, interest in tap dancing diminished. In recent years, however, tap has been reborn through the efforts of both professional and amateur enthusiasts. But enthusiasm alone is not enough to ensure that tap continues to flourish.

By introducing a House joint resolution designating May 25, 1989, as "National Tap Dance Day," I hope to focus widespread attention on this art form. On that day, we should celebrate tap through both performance and study. We should examine the incredible contributions made by legendary dancers such as Howard "Sandman" Simms, the Nicholas Brothers, and Honi Coles, and observe how high technology is now being applied to tap by contemporary dancers such as Gregory Hines. As the result, people the world over should be better able to appreciate tap as an important part of our Nation's heritage.

May 25 is the birthday of legendary tap dancer Bill "Bojangles" Robinson. Robinson's dancing up and down the staircase was the highlight of numerous motion pictures and musicals from the 1930's. He coined the phrase "everything is copasetic," which means it's going along just fine. Unfortunately, this phrase no longer holds true for the art form he brought to near perfection.

In 1987, Congress passed a resolution I introduced designating jazz as an "American national treasure." That official recognition of jazz's artistic legitimacy served to increase its public recognition and support. The enactment of this new resolution by the Congress should do the same for tap. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

The text of the tap resolution follows:

H. J. RES. —

Whereas the multifaceted art form of tap dancing is a manifestation of the cultural heritage of our Nation, reflecting the fusion of African and European cultures into an exemplification of the American spirit, that should be, through documentation, and archival and performance support, transmitted to succeeding generations;

Whereas tap dancing has had a historic and continuing influence on other genres of American art, including music, vaudeville, Broadway musical theater, and film, as well as other dance forms;

Whereas tap dancing is perceived by the world as a uniquely American art form;

Whereas tap dancing is a joyful and powerful aesthetic force providing a source of enjoyment and an outlet for creativity and self-expression for Americans on both the professional and amateur level;

Whereas it is in the best interest of the people of our Nation to preserve, promote, and celebrate this uniquely American art form;

Whereas Bill "Bojangles" Robinson made an outstanding contribution to the art of tap dancing on both stage and film through the unification of diverse stylistic and racial elements; and

Whereas May 25, as the anniversary of the birth of Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, is an appropriate day on which to refocus the attention of the Nation on American tap dancing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 25, 1989, is designated "National Tap Dance Day". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

TRIBUTE TO MINNESOTA'S JULIA ZEHNLE

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Ms. Julia Zehnle who, on March 15, 1989, will celebrate a continued distinguished career, spanning 50 years, with Minnesota's Seventh District Todd County's Social Services Department.

As a social worker, Ms. Zehnle has provided visionary dedication attending to the diverse needs of those less fortunate in our society—abused children, mentally retarded citizens, welfare recipients, older Americans.

After acquiring her bachelor of arts degree from an excellent Minnesota College—St. Benedict's—Julia began her service with Todd County. Through the years, welfare assigned a myriad of titles to her work—"Visitor," "Caseworker," "Social Worker,". "Child Welfare Mother." Her outstanding achievements did not go unnoticed. In 1967, Julia was promoted to social service supervisor, a position she held for about 7 years before returning to a social worker position in 1974. Again, in 1968, the regional mental health provider, Northern Pines, presented Julia with a plaque for meritorious service.

Currently, Miss Zehnle is responsible for nursing home placements and caseload. Always, competent, efficient and compassionate Julia cares for her clients and their family members with respect and dignity. Her expertise in assisting family members through the difficult process of deciding upon nursing home care for aging parents is unparalled. Her far-reaching skills and common sense have been tremendous assets to the clients she assists and the community she serves.

It is with profound gratitude and admiration that I share with my colleagues the service of Julia Zehnle to Minnesota's Todd County Social Services. With excellence such as this, citizens throughout America's communities would be better able to face their problems because someone like Julia is there who cares.

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK

HON. JOHN T. MYERS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to introduce a joint resolution to authorize and request the President to issue a proclamation designating Thanksgiving Week in 1989 and 1990 as "National Family Week."

This is the 19th consecutive year in which I have offered a National Family Week resolution. The idea of National Family Week has generated support unmatched by the other commemorative resolutions introduced in Congress. In those years, proclamations have been issued by Presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan; 678 Members of the House and 117 Senators have been cosponsors of these resolutions; and the governors of every State in the Union and each of our Territories, as well as the Mayor of the District of Columbia, have issued their own National Family Week proclamations at least four times. Moreover, numerous private organizations have sponsored National Family Week activities.

While I would not for a moment deny the symbolic nature of this resolution, we must not lose sight of substantive impact it can have. As this new Congress and a new administration take office, we are confronted with a number of challenging issues: drugs, education, child care and others, all while keeping an eye on the need for deficit reduction. Are these all not family issues?

It is my belief, for example, that the family is the institution in our society that can contribute the most to combat the drug problem. If, when armed with the facts, parents can spend more time with their children discussing the evil of drugs and creating a nurturing environment within the family, we can reduce young people's interest in drugs.

The entire child care issue is based on working parents desire to assure quality supervision for their children while they are at work, earning money to support their family.

Education is an issue because we all want the best for the next generation of America's leaders. Parents want their childern to be well prepared for the challenges that lie ahead and be equipped with the tools necessary to take advantage of every opportunity this Nation has to offer.

The family is the foundation of our society. This magnificent institution has a more positive and profound influence on the development of young Americans than any other. That is why it is fitting for us to take time during Thanksgiving Week, a period of traditional family gatherings.

The idea for National Family Week came to me from Mr. Sam Wiley, an Indiana high school administrator and basketball coach. Sam saw first hand the difference families made on young people and came to me in 1970 wanting to celebrate and emphasize the importance of the family in American life.

I urge all my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this National Family Week resolution.

READER'S DIGEST TEACHER-SCHOLAR FOR 1989

HON. LARRY J. HOPKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Lois J. Barnes of Versailles, KY, on her selection as a Reader's Digest Teacher-Scholar for 1989.

Each year only a select group of elementary and secondary teachers are awarded sabbaticals in order to learn more about literature, history, foreign language or other humanities.

Mrs. Barnes, who has been teaching history at Western Hills High School in Frankfort, KY, for the past 9 years, is one of 53 winners among 615 applicants to receive a Humanities Endowment Award which will support a year of independent study. She will take a year off to study the Soviet system of government and its relationship to Soviet society.

This revered award reflects the value of continuing education and Lois Barnes represents the best of what our educational system can be.

I am proud to join Lois' family and friends in extending best wishes for a successful and productive year of study and look forward to the resumption of her outstanding career in the classroom.

RETURN TO THE GOLD STANDARD

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, if we are to revitalize our Nation's economy, we must remove from Government the temptation and the ability to produce chronic budget deficits. Restoration of a dependable monetary standard based on a commodity with fixed value would, by making monetization impossible, accomplish this. For this reason, I have introduced a bill that will make all Federal Reserve notes and other currencies of the United States redeemable in gold.

In the constitutional debates in Philadelphia the monetary standard of the United States was a matter of central concern. Article 1, sections 8, 9, and 10 provide for a monetary standard of gold and silver. Not until 1862, in the midst of the Civil War, did our country suspend convertability and begin printing greenbacks. During the Civil War, as a result of the suspension of convertability, price levels tripled. When Congress decided to return to the gold convertible greenback in 1879 to prevent further increases, prices stabilized and inflation ceases to exist.

In the half century that has passed since President Roosevelt ordered that U.S. citizens would not be able to trade dollars for gold, the purchasing power to the dollar has declined significantly while the value of gold in real terms has remained almost constant. In 1928, one could purchase a two-door Chevrolet coupe with rumble seat for $720 or 36 ounces of gold. Thirty-six ounces of gold today at around $400 per ounce will buy two fine Ford Escorts. In 1932 one could purchase a good suit of clothes for $20 or 1 ounce of gold. One ounce of gold will buy you a fine suit today. While the gold standard is not perfect, its reinstitution in some form would be an improvement over the paper money in circulation since 1933.

Some economists argue that the gold standard should not be reinstated. Most of these economists are from the Keynesian School, and they complain that the Government would lose control of our money supply. That is precisely the point of the gold standard: to take control of the money, and correspondingly, money value out of the hands of a few Government decisionmakers. Attempts by the Government to regulate or fine-tune demand in the way that the Keynesians advocate, have caused wave after wave of inflation. Each wave eclipses the former. These failures have given impetus to the rebirth of the gold standard.

Ultimately, the question is not whether it is possible to reestablish the gold standard or whether it is too difficult to do so. But, the practical question remains: Is it harder to return to the gold standard which worked for over 150 years in America, or is it harder to live in the conditions that have resulted from a reliance on fiat currency, the highest interest rates, the worst inflation, alternating inflation and potential deflation, recessions, and so forth? Not only would a gold-backed dollar bring back monetary stabilization and lower interest rates, but it would also help balance the budget by preventing politicians from overspending and then simply monetizing the debt. It is high time that we return to the gold standard.

COMMEMORATING THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, President Lyndon B. Johnson declared an "unconditional war on poverty" in his first State of the Union Address in 1964. The Office of Economic Opportunity [OEO] was established to wage this unprecedented war through a national network of local community action agencies. The Dependency Prevention Commission [DPC] was incorporated on January 7, 1965 to carry out the mandate of the Economic Opportunity Act in the congressional district that I am privileged to represent. DPC, which was later renamed the Community Services Department of San Bernardino County, has served those who are less fortunate than ourselves.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the dedicated community leaders who have served as chairpersons of the DPC/CSD Board of Directors. They are: Harry C. Smith, O.E. Brown, Robert Carbajal, George Ashton, Salvador Rios, Richard Strong, Eloisa Zermeno, Francis T. Riley, Naomi Saylor, Frank A. Cabral, John Jimemez, Paul A. Treadway, Venny H. Newman, Dolores Kossman, and Nancy Ruth White. The work of these fine leaders throughout the past 25 years cannot be forgotten.

In addition, I would also like to recognize the executive directors who have provided administrative leadership for the San Bernardino DPC: Bill Nickolas, Eve McClain, Harold Whitehead, Robert McBay, Francis Kennedy, John Morant, Frank Budai, Ollie Liviege, C.W. Neimeyer, C.C. Vermillion, and Rodolfo H. Castro.

In celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Economic Opportunity Act, I would like to share with my colleagues an article by Quentin Foley. It was featured in the San Bernardino Sun on April 11, 1965 and discusses the exciting beginning of the War on Poverty programs in the Inland Empire.

COUNTY GIRDS FOR "WAR ON POVERTY"

(By Quentin Foley)

Millions of dollars to help the poor help themselves will be poured into San Bernardino County funded provisions of the Economic Opportunity Act—the President's "war on poverty" bill.

The whole concept is so new that no one knows for sure just how much in federal funds will be allocated for the county, since each project must be approved separately and projects may be initiated from many sources.

All that can be said for sure is that the impoverished will benefit from the far-ranging, unprecedented projects. And the taxpaying public may eventually see an end to the steady upward spiral of welfare costs if the programs accomplish their objectives.

Children from families of meager means will be helped from pre-school age through college, to help make them employable and there will be literacy training for the parents.

Community action programs will attack poverty pockets countywide.

Low-income farmers and migratory workers will benefit, and there will be help for the small businessman and the Indians.

Work-training programs now in existence will be beefed up to help those on welfare, help themselves get off the relief rolls.

The job of coordinating and supervising Economic Opportunity Act projects in the county will be carried out by the Dependency Prevention Commission, headed by president Harry C. Smith Jr. and executive director William F. Nicholas.

"I believe the (poverty program) budget for the county next year will be $6 to $8 million," Nicholas said. "Since many of the projects are now in the thinking or planning stages, it is hard to say how much the county will receive in federal funds this year."

Here are some of the projects approved, awaiting approval or in the planning stages:

SCHOOLS

The Neighborhood Youth Corps for those 16 through 21 years of age is to help students from poor families stay in school and get dropouts back in school.

The program to keep students in school is being coordinated by the office of Roy C. Hill, county superintendent of schools, under his administrative assistant, Hartley H. Hillsen.

A $195,550 program, it will be supervised by the eight high school districts participating. The districts will put up $51,160 in services and federal funds will total $144,390, Hillsen said.

It will enable 965 students to work—on school property—for $1.25 an hour for a maximum of 12½ hours a week during the remainder of this school year.

"Several of the seven high school districts that are not participating in this part of the program have indicated their desire to participate in the summer program or the in-school program the next school year," Hillsen said.

The summer program now being prepared will aid 1,000 students during the 12 summer weeks, permitting them to work a maximum of 32 hours a week if not in school and 15 hours a week if attending classes.

For students who have graduated or intend to return to high school in the fall, the program pays $1.25 an hour and again all work will be done on school property.

"A flexible set of guidelines is used to determine the eligibility of students," Hillsen said. "Mostly we ask them to maintain at least a minimum grade average and stay out of trouble."

The program to help high school dropouts and unemployed graduates will be coordinated by the Dependency Prevention Commission.

It will give the youth parttime jobs in public or nonprofit agencies.

"In no way will they supplant personnel in existing jobs," said Nicholas. "It is to give them work experience and hopefully get the drop-outs back in school.

COLLEGES

Another effort to keep students in school and get drop-outs back in school is the work-study program for the junior colleges.

"It is quite a program," said Dr. Russell M. Hackler, vice president of San Bernardino Valley College.

"We have 48 jobs available this school year, will have 40 jobs available during the summer and have asked for approval of 60 jobs for next fall."

College students carrying 12 units, in good standing and from low income families, or orphans, can work a maximum of 15 hours a week at $1.25 an hour. During the summer they can work 40 hours a week, all on campus. Federal funds totaling $18,000 have been approved for this school term.

"We want to work with local high schools, welfare agencies, public and private agencies to get recommended students," Dr. Hackler said.

Students wishing to enter college next fall can pick up their work-study applications now at the college. Other state colleges and junior colleges are planning to get up their own work-study programs, he said.

The University of California, Riverside, has 239 part-time jobs available with rates of pay for 10 to 15 hours work a week of $1.72 per hour and upward, according to Dr. Charles J.A. Halberg Jr., vice chancellor for student affairs. UCR also has 40-hour-a-week summer jobs. Deadline for applications is June 1, Dr. Halberg said.

PRESCHOOL

Operation Head Start is the program to help pre-school age children. A one-time program, it will run two months with each child receiving a minimum of 105 hours guidance.

The federal government pays $85 a month per child, with each child receiving a physical examination, day care, specially designed educational programs and such welfare services as may be indicated.

Here, again, the federal government puts up 90 per cent of the funds and the local entity puts up 10 per cent in services.

"It is a program to help children from impoverished families start school on a near equal footing with their more fortunate schoolmates," Nicholas said.

JOB CORPS

Youths, 16 through 21, from impoverished families can sign up for the Job Corps at the California Department of Employment.

This program is designed to help those lacking skills, school dropouts, those with poor school performance, selective service rejects and those with limited educational achievement.

The recruiting, screening and referral agency is the California Department of Employment whose San Bernardino office is headed by Mrs. Eve McLain.

Job Corps youth sign up for one year and are assigned to either an urban center or rural camp.

"They are allowed one trip home during the stay," Mrs. McLain said.

They receive $30 a month, room, board, clothing, medical and dental care. Their dependents get $50 a month, of which the Job Corps volunteer pays half.

During the year the Job Corps youths accumulate an additional $50 a month to be received at the end of the year.

The plan calls for nine camps to be established in California to handle about 4,000 youths the first year.

"There is no set figure on how many from this area will be enlisted in Job Corps," Mrs. McLain said.

"The purpose is to help youths get and keep a job, return to school or go into the armed services," she said, "It gives them a chance to learn a job skill and earn money while doing it."

Consent of the parent is required for a youth to join the Job Corps and he must pass mental and physical tests. No parolee or youth on probation is allowed to join without a release from the supervising agency.

The Job Corps centers for training are not to be confused with the Youth Opportunity Center to be established in Colton.

The Colton center is expected to open May 1 with a staff of 36 to handle Job Corps applications. No training will be given at the center.

OPERATION CONTACT

This program administered by the Dependency Prevention Commission will attack poverty pockets in target areas throughout the county.

"In each area an office will be established to reach out and involve the poor in programs to help them. It is open to both men and women of all ages," Nicholas said.

"Operation Contact is designed to motivate the poor to take advantage of the community action programs and will be coordinated with all other agencies involved in Economic Opportunity Act programs," he said.

Each office in a poverty pocket will be manned by a professional director and volunteers.

Under Operation Contact, one of the groups to be contacted are the families living in federal housing units. In an experimental program, the county welfare department initiated a variety of recreation, education and services in Waterman Gardens which has 256 family units.

There are a total of 941 low-income family units in federal housing projects in the county, 556 in San Bernardino, 190 in Redlands, 50 in Chino, 85 in Colton and 60 in Barstow.

FEDERAL HOUSING

The Dependency Prevention Commission hopes to get anti-poverty funds to increase the recreation, education and services for families living in these units, and to get their involvement in community action programs.

Recreational activities proposed to be added to Waterman Gardens and initiated at the other housing units include Big Brothers Association, YMCA, YWCA, Gray-Y, organized and supervised athletic programs.

Services to be added include a child care center, teen-age employment service and a home-maker service.

If other federal housing units copy Waterman Gardens they will have Boy Scouts, Cub Scouts, Girl Scouts, Brownies, model club, senior citizens club, teenage dances, parents council, sewing classes, tutoring program and a library.

It has not yet been decided just who will administer any federal anti-poverty funds acquired for the federal housing units.

SMALL BUSINESS

The Dependency Prevention Commission is proposing that an office be estimated to grant loans up to $25,000 to those small businesses which cannot get private banking funds and cannot get Small Business Administration approval.

"We hope to recruit retired businessmen to give counseling to those who apply for such loans," Nicholas said.

FARMERS AND FARM LABOR

The Commission will also make referrals to the Farmers Home Administration for low-income farmers seeking anti-poverty assistance.

The Council of Churches is planning a project to establish a regional camp for migratory labor to serve as a guide to assisting migratory labor under the anti-poverty bill.

The Dependency Prevention Commission is considering the establishment of a Traveler's Aid office to help transients.

"If we can stop these transient families that have been traveling for years, we can get the children in school and help the parents develop some job skill," Nicholas said.

INDIANS

The Economic Opportunity Act permits assistance to Indian reservations.

A pilot program is being worked out for the Indian reservation near Patton State Hospital, where 26 Indians reside.

"This will be an internal self-help program, supplying building materials, equipment and advice of carpenters and plumbers to help them build livable homes," Nicholas said.

"They have no water lines and we hope to get water piped into the homes. Some are even using candles for lighting and we hope to correct that."

Other Indian problems to be tackled include employment, job skill training and work-training programs.

VISTA

Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) is an organization of those wishing to help individually in the war against the poverty.

Under Operation Contact, the county will be divided into three areas, West End, Desert, and San Bernardino, with a VISTA worker in each area as program consultant.

"We hope to use other VISTA workers in several programs," Nicholas said.

WORK-TRAINING

The county Welfare Department, under Director Roscoe Lyda, is the leader in the state in establishing work-training programs to get welfare recipients off the welfare roles—those in the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program.

"We will ask Economic Opportunity Act funds to expand these existing programs," Lyda said. He estimates it will take approximately $100,000 the first year.

"Our problem now is to fit AFDC recipients in to the proper training program," he said. The department has about 87 different training programs.

"Our big need is vocational evaluation to fit these people to the right program, with vocational counselling, and we would use the anti-poverty funds for that staffing.

"We will only ask for funds where we can see dividends, we're not asking for money just for the sake of getting it."

A problem is motivating the recipients to help themselves, he said.

What's the idea behind this and the other anti-poverty programs?

To get people off relief rolls and other public support and eventually into self-supporting jobs. It's an ambitious, unprecedented program in many respects, and the people directing it are still feeling their way into unexplored territory.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN BRESSLER

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to bring to your attention a man who is truly a credit to the State of Pennsylvania. The man I am speaking of is John Bressler. Mr. Bressler was born and raised in Lancaster County and currently resides in Pike Township, Berks County, PA.

For many years, John Bressler has been entertaining people in all corners of the world. He has enjoyed great success and acclaim for his musical talents on both the national and international levels. However, while most entertainers are based out of Nashville, New York, or Los Angeles, Mr. Bressler chose to remain in his home State of Pennsylvania.

As a recording artist, Mr. Bressler has made and released several concept videos, all of which were filmed in Pennsylvania. Through these videos, many of Pennsylvania's finest attributes have been showcased to over 90 million households nationwide. In addition to his many appearances throughout the country, John Bressler also takes time to entertain his fellow Pennsylvanians at county fairs and other major events in the State.

Perhaps one of Mr. Bressler's greatest contributions to his fellow man, though, is the time he spends performing at school assemblies where he not only entertains students, but also gives them a strong and convincing message on the devastating effects of drugs. Through his emphasis on the positiveness of life, Mr. Bressler has become the hero of many children and the favorite of many adults.

This March, Berks County, PA will honor John Bressler for his many contributions to our community by designating the week of March 3 through March 10 as "John Bressler Week." In addition, for the attention he has brought to the local and surrounding areas, Mr. Bressler will be proclaimed as an official ambassador of Berks County.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to acknowledge John Bressler's many achievements before you, the other Members of the House of Representatives, as well as the rest of the Nation. My fellow Berks Countians and I are fortunate that we can claim Mr. Bressler as a son of Berks County. On March 3 through March 10, we will show our appreciation to John Bressler for his many talents and contributions when all of Berks County joins in celebrating "John Bressler Week."

THE INTRODUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL DESIGN PROTECTION

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation very similar to that which I introduced the last two Congresses. I also note that my good friend from New York and ranking Republican to the House Judiciary Committee, HAM FISH, who is an original cosponsor, and is also a cosponsor for this Congress. I am also pleased to note the cosponsorship and support of our minority leader, BOB MICHEL.

John Ruskin, who was probably the most influential English critic of the 1800's, once said:

There is hardly anything in the world that some man can't make a little worse and sell a little cheaper and the people who consider price only are this man's lawful prey.

In general, the Industrial Design Protection Act is aimed at those who would make things a little cheaper and a little worse. It is aimed at those who pilfer another's creation so they can deceive the man who is looking at price only.

In addressing this act, we are not talking about the pirating of goods or are we talking about an infringement of copyright on patent law. What we are talking about is the creation of designs for useful objects, designs which often reflect skill and creativity, and the expenditure of time and money. When you think of designs what comes to mind are things like telephones, luggage, furniture, tools, swimming pools, automobile parts, machinery, to mention a few of the areas affected. These designs today are not protected by patent law or copyright law.

Appropriating the appearance of a product can lead to the same abuses as appropriating its name by those motivated to palm off inferior goods on the unsuspecting or intentionally misled. The competitive posture of this country no longer permits us to ignore the plight of our creative designers and perpetuate this inequity between the effectiveness of this country's design protection compared to that provided elsewhere.

Decade after decade the litigation track record has been abysmal with three out of every four design patent struck down as invalid. This chills those who contemplate enforcing their rights and dissuades potential applicants from seeking protection. In 1986, the least available figures, only 3,546 design patents were granted in the United States to U.S. residents. By way of comparison, in Japan, which has a viable form of industrial design protection, the comparable number is 34,000 registrations or nearly 10 times ours. We cannot dismiss this disparity with the thought that it is unique to Japan. The comparable statistic for West Germany is 85,000, for France 19,000 and for Korea 8,659. Nor do we find the answer to these differences by assuming U.S. designers are intellectually bankrupt.

The answer is that the United States is the only country in the world to provide a patent type protection for industrial designs which is a particularly unsuitable form of protection for the shape of most articles as distinguished from its workings or function. It is noteworthy that while other countries have borrowed heavily from the United States in adopting features of our patent laws, none have even considered applying patent laws to the field of industrial design protection and we have stood alone with this ill conceived system for nearly a century and a half.

This legislation proposes that a copyright type of protection he provided for industrial designs through a low cost, relatively simply registration process. Such protection would both be more reliable than patent protection by avoiding high standards of invention that are impossible to apply in most shapes, but also would be a sharply focused protection aimed at the parasitic copyist while leaving original designers free to pursue new designs without fear of inadvertent violations.

Design protection should be for a reasonable term of, for example, 10 years as has been proposed in this legislation although 15 years is the internationally recommended standard for design protection. The legislation introduced today is identical to what we introduced last Congress, H.R. 1179, with one exception, and that is at the request of Mr. FISH we clarified this year's bill to include protection for typeface design.

I hope we can make this legislation a top national priority and a goal of the 101st Congress.

KEEP THE FAITH ON CAPITAL GAINS

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 42 which would put Congress on record in continued support of a key element of tax reform. During last year's Presidential campaign, then Vice President Bush proposed reinstating a preferential rate to capital gains, arguing that it would increase jobs, promote risk-taking, and raise revenue.

If such a simple change to the Tax Code would accomplish all that, why isn't everyone jumping aboard the bandwagon? The fact is that the idea would mean undoing half of the principal deal that made tax reform a reality. Moreover, a proposal of this sort, if offered, would be a significant break with the Reagan administration. Over the past 8 years, Congress and the administration improved the Tax Code by coupling changes in the marginal rate structure with the closing of loopholes.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 set marginal rates so low that the rationale for a preferential rate on capital gains no longer made sense. Recomplicating the Tax Code by reinstating the preferential rate for capital gains is truly a terrible idea.

There are sound tax policy and equity arguments for maintaining the status quo. Advocates of the preference argue that we need the lower rate to encourage investors to provide the venture capital to risky enterprises. But of course, such investment is only a tiny slice of the capital investment pie. Certainly, you could take a big risk in investing $10,000 in a new business that might fail. However, you could also put your $10,000 into IBM stock, gold coins, or land. Under the old tax law, you would get the same preferential rate upon realizing a gain from either type of investment.

In addition, there is just no getting around the fact that capital gains realizations are heavily concentrated among the highest income taxpayers. A survey of 1986 tax data by the Internal Revenue Service revealed that 77 percent of net long-term capital gains were realized by taxpayers with incomes over $75,000—only about 3 percent of all taxpayers. The same survey shows that 57 percent of net long-term capital gains were realized by taxpayers with incomes over $200,000—a miniscule 0.3 percent of all taxpayers. It is plain that any cut in the capital gains rate would directly benefit the very wealthiest of taxpayers.

Finally, we do not have the luxury of debating the merits of a new captial gains preference solely on the basis of tax policy and equity considerations. Now anything we do to the Internal Revenue Code has to be evaluated in terms of its impact on the overall Federal deficit. We can't afford to make the deficit worse.

Analyses by organizations and individuals of impeccable credentials display a wide range of opinion on the revenue impact of a preferential rate for capital gains. The only reasonable conclusion is that the revenue consequences of such a fundamental change in the current structure are unknown and unpredictable. With the Gramm-Rudman hammer hanging over the entire Government, can we afford to guess wrong?

If there were ever an instance when Congress and the President should keep their hands off, this is it. The rationale for a preferential rate for capital gains evolved during a period when the income tax system was based on a concept of high marginal rates and a multitude of adjustments, deductions, and preferences. As a result of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, which took the opposite approach, the logic of the overall effort and the events that preceded it led inexorably to the present tax treatment for capital gains.

There is no motion more central to tax reform than the idea that individuals with similar incomes ought to pay similar amounts of tax. No principle is more deeply embedded in our tax structure than that the tax burden be distributed based on the ability to pay. Our old tax system was riddled with preferences and credits which paid lip service to those concepts but allowed those who could to reduce their tax liability and required those who could not to pay higher rates than necessary in order to compensate. If we reestablish a capital gains preference, we would be right back on the path that led us to the pre-1986 tax mess.

We should not break faith with the American taxpayers by reversing the great strides that were made in cleaning up the Tax Code during the Reagan administration.

A TRIBUTE TO THE SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF COMMISSION-MANAGER GOVERNMENT IN THE CITY OF BIG RAPIDS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity today to pay tribute to the 75th anniversary of commission-manager government in Big Rapids, MI. A celebration honoring this historic occasion was held on February 2, 1989, in the city of Big Rapids.

The city was established in 1855 as a settlement called Lincolnville on the Muskegon River. Big Rapids was incorporated as a city in 1869 and formed a commission-manager government in 1914. The first city commission consisted of one mayor and two commissioners. They had the authority to appoint a general manager who would be the executive officer to carry out the orders of the commission and see that the laws and ordinances of the city were properly enforced.

Presently, there are approximately 3,000 governments that have adopted the commission-manager form of local government. The city of Big Rapids, however, is the only one that can claim to be the first to have this system. There have been only 14 managers since 1914 and each transition of power has been smooth and easy.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House, please join me in commemorating the 75th anniversary of commission-manager government in the city of Big Rapids. This is a most important event in the city's history and is a proud moment for the citizens of Big Rapids as well as all Michiganites.

DR. H. CLAUDE HUDSON: A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I join today with my colleagues JULIAN DIXON and MERVYN DYMALLY to pay tribute to our friend Dr. H. Claude Hudson who recently passed away. Dr. Hudson, was truly one of the early pioneers in the civil rights movement, and has represented a beacon of hope and strength for the minority community in Los Angeles for over half a century.

Dr. Hudson was the distinguished son of a former slave and Louisiana sharecropper and enjoyed a career as a successful dentist, civil rights leader, and president of a $50 million savings and loan institution. He was elected to the presidency of the Shreveport, LA, branch of the NAACP in 1921 at a time when president of a civil rights organization in the South was not only unfashionable, but suicidal. He worked there to protest the meetings of the Ku Klux Klan, and general policies of segregation and police abuse.

In November 1924, Dr. Hudson was elected to the presidency of the Los Angeles NAACP. During his second term as president, he faced a serious civil rights problem. At this time the Pacific Ocean was segregated: Black people, with one minor exception, could not go to the beach without being harassed. So in 1925, Dr. Hudson and seven other members of the NAACP waded in the ocean at Manhattan Beach, were arrested and fined $500 for defying the no swimming ordinance. He immediately appealed the decision, and thereupon the Manhattan Beach court called him in and wanted to throw the case out of court. He agreed, but asked what was going to be done about the parking ordinance which allowed only 15 minutes for bathers to undress, swim, and return to their cars. The court reminded him that it would take 90 days to repeal the ordinance. Dr. Hudson informed him that he was aware of that, as well as the fact that the ordinance was not being enforced against anyone else. The court responded that if he dropped the case they would not enforce the ordinance against black people. On the following day Dr. Hudson took a little black boy with him to swim on the beach to see if they would be arrested, but they were not and from that day on the beaches have been open to everyone.

Dr. Hudson served 10 consecutive years as president of the NAACP Los Angeles branch, which he developed into one of the largest and most effective in the Nation. In 1927, he enrolled in the Loyola University School of Law and was awarded the LL.B. degree in 1931. His interest in law was to broaden his education to better enable him to carry on the work of the civil rights organization.

Dr. Hudson assumed the presidency of Broadway Federal Savings & Loan Association in 1949 and developed it into a $50 million institution. The association, with Dr. Hudson as its leader, broke the stranglehold of white savings and loan associations in Los Angeles who refused to lend money on property located in neighborhoods where they felt black people should not live. Broadway made so many loans until the white associations reversed their position and began making loans to people under better terms.

In 1962, at charter day exercises, Dr. Hudson received the Distinguished Alumus Award from his alma mater, Howard University, for distinguished service as a dentist, businessman, and civil rights advocate. He served as a member of the Los Angeles County Real Estate Advisory Commission and as a member of the board of trustees of the Martin Luther King Memorial Hospital. The auditorium of the King Hospital was named in his honor. Loyola University, Los Angeles, named a scholarship in honor of Dr. H. Claude Hudson in June 1974.

When he was awarded the Humanitarian of the Year Award of the Aid United Givers of the Biltmore Bowl in Los Angeles. Upon his introduction as guest speaker, the audience gave him a standing ovation. Dr. Hudson began his speech by saying:

The ovation that you have just given me amazes me when I think of the fact that when I arrived in Los Angeles in 1923 I was not allowed to enter this hotel, and now to be the guest of honor shows me how far you have come.

The audience at his request then stood and gave themselves a big round of applause.

Dr. Hudson, referred to sometimes as "Mr. NAACP," has received numerous other awards, medals, and commendations. As a friend and longtime admirer of Dr. Claude Hudson, Congressman DIXON, Congressman DYMALLY, and I, are deeply saddened by his loss. However, our spirits are brightened by the memory of his outstanding character and achievements which live on today in the many civil liberties today enjoyed by the citizens of Los Angeles, and other parts of California. On April 19, 1986, Dr. Claude Hudson celebrated his 100th birthday with four generations of relatives, community associations, and friends from all walks of life. His closing remarks at this celebration provides an appropriate measure of Dr. Hudson's exemplary example:

The burden of carrying this struggle now belongs to our young people who must not feel that all the battles have been won. Though the problems they face may differ in number and kind from those my generation faced, the American Negro must continue to be vigilant, courageous and persistent in the fight for full freedom and dignity, courage and determination. It is the task of our young people to keep them open and forge ahead.

In closing Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the last stanza of "Lift Every Voice and Sing," by James Weldon Johnson. The quote was a favorite of Dr. Hudson and has special meaning in this tribute:

God of our weary years,
God of our silent tears,
Thou who has brought us thus far on the way;
Thou who has by Thy might
Led us into the light,
Keep us forever in the path, we pray.
Lest our feet stray from the places, our God, where we met Thee,
Lest our hearts, drunk with the wine of the word, we forget Thee,
Shadowed beneath Thy hand,
May we forever stand
True to our God
True to our native land.

SENIOR EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 30, the Senior Employment Resolution or SERvice. This resolution urges the Secretary of Labor and the director of the ACTION Agency to promote senior citizens programs as a source of employee for community based child care facilities.

I feel that this approach addresses two important issues. It seeks to tap an already knowledgeable and qualified workforce, the elderly, to help alleviate the shortage in child care workers. We are all aware of the lack of safe, affordable child care today. Parents, already juggling the demands of family and work, may feel more comfortable knowing that their child care center employs retired older Americans, many of whom have first hand knowledge of child-rearing.

In addition, the SERvice resolution encourages a bond between youth and elders which I feel this country needs to support. Intergenerational child care promotes generational understanding. The young and the old can learn from each other, and can benefit from their unique perspectives on life.

Two programs already exist which can be expanded specifically in this direction. The Older Americans Act authorizes a program called the Senior Community Service Employment Program [SCSEP]. This service places low-income seniors, aged 55 and over, into area businesses. The ACTION Agency sponsors the Retired Senior Volunteer Program [RSVP]. RSVP is active in my home State of Rhode Island. In Providence alone, 360 RSVP volunteers serve 61 area nonprofit agencies. Last year these volunteers put in 70,000 hours. Rhode Island has a network of innovative child care programs, and seniors as child care workers can reinforce this network.

In closing, let me reiterate my support of the intent and content of the SERvice resolution. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution, and to urge its rapid implementation.

CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO MSGR. STEPHEN J. PATCH AND THE MURRAY HOUSE OF PATERSON, NJ, FOR THEIR EFFORTS ON BEHALF OF THE DISABLED

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride and admiration that I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding institution and a great man in my home State of New Jersey who have dedicated themselves to helping the handicapped. I am speaking of the Murray House, which has devoted itself to helping the developmentally disabled in the Diocese of Paterson, NJ, and Msgr. Stephen J. Patch, whose ceaseless efforts have not only provided inspiration to all those involved in this great pursuit, but also the funds necessary to help keep the Murray House's vital efforts going.

In recognition of these truly humanitarian efforts, Monsignor Patch will be the guest of honor at the 19th Annual Murray House Dinner Dance to be held Sunday, February 19, 1989, at the Cotillion in Garfield, NJ.

Mr. Speaker, it is nearly two decades since Monsignor Patch extended his most diligent efforts in helping to bring about the establishment of the Murray House in Paterson. Under the auspices of Diocese of Paterson Department of Special Education, the Murray House, named for the Murray family of Paterson and the courageous Jim Murray, is a residential facility for developmentally disabled adults. These are people who, without the efforts of the Murray House and Monsignor Patch, as well as many others in the department of special education, would have nowhere else to go.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, Msgr. Stephen J. Patch was born in Morristown, NJ. He attended St. Margaret's School in Morristown and Oratory Prep in Summit, graduating Seton Hall in 1945. He then attended Immaculate Conception Seminary in Darlington, NJ, and was ordained at St. John the Baptist Cathedral on June 11, 1949.

Since that time, Monsignor Patch's assignments have included St. Monica's in Sussex, St. Vincent's in Madison, St. Theresa's in Paterson, and St. Patrick's in Chatham. Monsignor Patch was the founding pastor of Corpus Christi Parish in Chatham, NJ, in 1966. Following his assignment at St. Monica's, Monsignor Patch became chaplain and religious teacher at Bayley-Ellard High School in Madison. He was appointed dean of Southeastern Morris County in 1984.

Mr. Speaker, along with his work in helping to establish Murray House, Monsignor Patch has also been the force behind the highly successful Casey Classic Golf Tournament in New Jersey since 1975, an event through which Monsignor Patch has helped raise more than a half million dollars to support the Murray House and the department of special education's work with developmentally disabled adults in the Diocese of Paterson.

Mr. Speaker, I invite you and our colleagues to join me in paying tribute to an outstanding institution, the Murray House, and a great humanitarian, Msgr. Stephen J. Patch, whose tireless and dedicated efforts have truly made their community, State, and Nation a better place to live.

HONORING M. SGT. FERDINAND C. HARTMANN

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a truly outstanding citizen and soldier, M. Sgt. Ferdinand C. Hartmann, on his retirement from the New York Army Reserve. He will be honored at a special retirement dinner on February 10, 1989, sponsored by the New York Army Reserve, Battalion 104.

M. Sgt. Ferdinand C. Hartmann has been a dedicated member of the New York Army Reserves for 40 years, during which time he has held several important positions within the reserves. These include: Ammunition sergeant, mess sergeant, machinegun section sergeant, ammunition section chief, battalion supply operation sergeant, first sergeant of service battery 19, operations sergeant, and intelligence sergeant. He was appointed E8 on October 16, 1972.

Master Sergeant Hartmann has had the privilege of serving with many illustrious commanders such as Brigadier General Willis, Lieutenant Colonel Sarcona, Lieutenant Colonel Reed, Lieutenant Colonel Paris, Lieutenant Colonel Holtzgruber, Colonel Ford, Colonel Finn. Brigadier General Rose, Lieutenant Colonel Horvath, and his present commander, Lieutenant Colonel Alesia.

During his four decades with the reserves, Mr. Hartmann has garnered several impressive awards. These honors include the Armed Forces Reserve Medal 4th Award, Army Achievement Reserve Components Achievement Medal, National Defense Service Medal, New York State Military Commendation Medal, New York State Long And Faithful Service Award For 40 Years Duty, New York State Duty In Aid to Civil Authorities Medal, New York State Humane Service Medal, and the prestigious Meritorous Service Medal.

Master Sergeant Hartmann has been married to his wife Catherine since 1956 and has six wonderful children. His son Douglas, also a member of the Army Reserve, is carrying on his father's fine military legacy. Another son, Dean, is currently attending the New York State Merchant Marine Academy.

Master Sergeant Hartmann has been employed since 1958 by the New York Fire Department. Performing admirably, he received many honors including two commendations for heroism and a unit citation for lieutenant in command. He is also involved in several activities in the community. He is a member of the Association of Retired Persons, American Legion Fire Department Post 730, Catholic War Veterans Post 16, and the Knights of Columbus Woodhaven Council 1866.

Mr. Speaker, I would like all to my colleagues to join me in thanking M. Sgt. Ferdinand C. Hartmann for his tremendous hard work and dedication to the State of New York. I would like to wish him continued success with the New York Fire Department and the best of luck with all of his future endeavors.

A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD FOR ALL FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the American people are more than justified in their outrage with the hypocrisy of our current pay process for Members of Congress and other top Federal officials. The American people have watched Congress for nearly a month dodge and delay consideration of a 51-percent salary increase. In doing so we have delayed action on the important issues facing our Nation that we were sent here to address, such as deficit reduction, the raging drug problem, appropriate child care opportunities for families, health care insurance for our 37 million uninsured Americans, and responding to the FSLIC problem.

In an effort to return credibility and equity to this compensation process, today I am introducing legislation that, if enacted, would put an end to Members of Congress directly determining their own compensation and that of other Federal executive and judicial officials covered under the Federal Salary Act of 1967. My legislation would abolish the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, and compensate top Federal officials on a par with all other Federal employees.

In recent years this Commission, with its corporate Washington mentality, has ill served the American people in recommending an unwieldy salary increase for top Federal officials. Let's advocate equal salary increases for all Federal employees.

Using 1989 as an example, my legislation would provide all Federal employees, including those currently covered under the Federal Salary Act of 1967—executive, legislative, and judicial branch officials—with a 4.1-percent average increase in salary.

With our Federal budget deficit looming at approximately $145 billion, I find it extremely difficult to justify how one small group of 2,498 Federal employees can potentially receive a 51-percent salary increase, at a cost to the taxpayers of at least $128 million, and the majority of our 3 million Federal employees could receive only a proposed 2-percent increase, as reflected in the fiscal year 1990 budget. Let us put all Federal employees on a level playing field. The legislation I am introducing today would do just that.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to consider this legislation as a sensible and responsible way of addressing the compensation of Federal executive, legislative, and judicial officials.

The following is the text of the bill:

H.R. 891

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TERMINATION.

Section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361) is repealed.

SEC. 2. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) Sections 5312 through 5316 of title 5, United States Code, are each amended by striking out "the rate determined with respect to such level under chapter 11 of title 2," and inserting in lieu thereof "the rate in effect for such level on September 30, 1989,".

(b) Section 104 of title 3, United States Code, is amended by striking out "the rate determined for such positions under chapter 11 of title 2," and inserting in lieu thereof "the rate in effect for such position on September 30, 1989,".

(c) Section 601(a)(1) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 31(1)) is amended by striking out "the rate determined for such position under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361)," and inserting in lieu thereof "the rate in effect for such positions on September 30, 1989".

(d)(1) Sections 44(d), 135, and 252 of title 28, United States Code, and section 7456(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, are each amended by striking out "an annual rate determined under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361)," and inserting in lieu thereof "the rate in effect for such position on September 30, 1989,".

(2) Section 153(a) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out "an annual rate determined under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361)" and inserting in lieu thereof "the rate in effect for such position on September 30, 1989,".

(3) Section 5 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out "annual rates determined under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361)," and inserting in lieu thereof "the rates in effect for such positions on September 30, 1989,".

(4) Section 634(a) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out "rates determined under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351-361)" and inserting in lieu thereof "the rates in effect for such positions on September 30, 1989,".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1989.

THE INTERNATIONAL INDIGENOUS PEOPLES PROTECTION ACT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing H.R. 879, the International Indigenous Peoples Protection Act of 1989, legislation that will help prevent the further destruction and elimination of cultures and societies around the world. Most of us, regardless of our political leanings, assume that indigenous peoples and tribal societies are bound to disappear—destined to the dustbin of history. Most of us would assume that this process is as lamentable as it is inevitable.

Historical processes do not make small traditional societies disappear. Greed and a lack of understanding, however, do. Such groups are weak and tempting targets to the development programs that they are presumed to hinder or in the name of states that they are assumed to subvert.

There is no reason, however, that indigenous and tribal peoples cannot survive, both physically and culturally, the rapid changes that contact with expanding industrial societies and economic and political institutions brings.

Seen as impediments to progress and development, small societies throughout the world are facing extinction. Those that survive are often decimated by diseases introduced by outsiders and denied a political voice. Usually deprived of their lands and means of livelihood, they are forced to adapt to a national society whose language they do not speak. Without education, technical or other modern-day skills, they generally suffer permanent poverty, political marginality, and cultural alienation.

As the push to exploit the resources of the earth reaches the remaining untouched areas of the world, contact with isolated societies is inevitable—but their destruction is not. These vulnerable societies need the benefits of modern life, but to survive they need the ability to choose how much they will adapt and how long the process will take.

Their survival is important for our own; it is imperative that we prevent their extinction. They perceive us as barbaric and strange, too. Yet, not only do we share a common humanity, but we can benefit from each other's knowledge. Indigenous peoples have rich storehouses of information about nature, man, and the balanced relationship of the two. From their beliefs about the spiritual world to their traditional knowledge of rain forests, healing and agriculture, these societies provide the opportunity for new interpretations about the world and ourselves.

Toward that end, I have introduced this bill [H.R. 879] to help indigenous and tribal peoples have as much control as possible over their destinies—to retain their rights and culture as they adapt to the modern world. In this way we can ensure that progress and development are by all the people and for all the people.

This legislation asks that U.S. foreign policy and foreign assistance promote the rights of indigenous and tribal peoples and to ensure that no U.S.-funded program or project adversely affect indigenous or tribal peoples' rights or livelihood. It requires the U.S. State Department to monitor annually the situation of tribal and indigenous peoples and to report its findings in the annual country reports on human rights practices. The bill also stipulates that the Government rely extensively on U.S.-based nongovernmental organizations [NGO's] with experience in monitoring and reporting these issues.

Accordingly, I invite my colleagues to support the International Indigenous Peoples Protection Act of 1989 [H.R. 879] and I request that a full text of this measure be inserted at this point in the RECORD:

H.R. 879

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "International Indigenous Peoples Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

(a) DETERIORATING SITUATION FACING INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL PEOPLES.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The situation of indigenous and tribal peoples in developing countries is deteriorating world-wide.

(2) Many of these populations face severe discrimination, denial of human rights, loss of cultural and religious freedoms, or in the worst cases, cultural or physical destruction.

(3) If current trends in many parts of the world continue the cultural, social, and linguistic diversity of humankind will be radically and irrevocably diminished.

(4) In addition, immense, undocumented repositories of ecological, biological, and pharmacological knowledge will be lost, as well as an immeasurable wealth of cultural, social, religious, and artistic expression, which together constitute part of the collective patrimony of the human species.

(5) The pressures on indigenous and tribal peoples, about 10 percent of the world's population, include denial of political and civil rights and of opportunities for self-determination, destruction of natural resources necessary for survival, and ethnic, racial, and economic marginalization.

(6) In many cases, unsound development policy that results in destruction of natural resources seriously jeopardizes indigenous and tribal peoples' physical survival and their cultural autonomy, frequently also undermining the possibility for long-term sustainable economic development.

(7) The loss of the cultural diversity for indigenous and tribal peoples is not an inevitable or natural process.

(8) In light of United States concern and respect for human rights and basic human freedoms, including rights to express cultural and religious preferences, as well as the United States desire for sustainable economic development, it is incumbent on the United States to take a leadership role in addressing indigenous and tribal peoples' rights to physical and cultural survival.

(b) DEFINITION OF INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL PEOPLES.—Indigenous and tribal peoples in developing countries are those populations that are ethnically, culturally, or socialy distinct from the politically dominant society on the regional or national level. These peoples are often (but not invariably) minorities, and invariably have little, if any, political representation or influence in governments. Many such peoples are marginally integrated into market economies and practice traditional, partially or wholly subsistence-based forms of economic activity. Examples of indigenous or tribal peoples include lowland South American Indians, Basarwa of Botswana and Namibia, Mayan Indians in Central America, registered tribes in India, and Tibetan people in the area traditionally referred to as Tibet (which consisted of the province of U-Tsang, currently administered by the People's Republic of China as the Tibet Autonomous Region, and the provinces of Amdo and Kham, currently in the Tibetan autonomous prefectures and counties in the Chinese provinces of Sichuan, Yunnan, Ganbu, and Qinghai).

SEC. 3. PROMOTING AND PROTECTING THE RIGHTS OF INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL PEOPLES.

The Secretary of State and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall ensure—

(1) that United States foreign policy and foreign assistance vigorously promote the rights of indigenous and tribal peoples throughout the world; and

(2) that United States foreign assistance is not provided for any project or program detrimental to indigenous or tribal peoples' rights or livelihood.

SEC. 4. BASELINE REPORT ON INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL PEOPLES.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section and section 5 is to help—

(1) guide future United States foreign assistance and other actions that could affect indigenous and tribal peoples, and

(2) permit United States actions that would assist these peoples.

(b) PREPARATION OF REPORT.—The Administrator of the Agency for International Development, in consulation with the Secretary of State, shall prepare a report on indigenous and tribal peoples in developing countries. This report shall include the following:

(1) A description of the economic, political, and social situation of indigenous and tribal peoples.

(2) A discussion the effects of United States bilateral foreign assistance and United States-supported multilateral assistance on indigenous and tribal peoples, including a description of those projects and activities currently being funded by the Agency for International Development—

(A) which have a positive impact on indigenous and tribal peoples, or

(B) which have a negative impact on indigenous and tribal peoples.

(3) A comprehensive strategy for regularly monitoring and improving the situation of indigenous and tribal peoples, including—

(A) a description of the methodology and the guidelines to be used in carrying out the monitoring required by section 5, and

(B) a description of the specific actions that the Agency for International Development proposes to take to improve the situation of indigenous and tribal peoples.

(c) CONSULTATION WITH NGOs.—The Administrator shall consult with United States-based nongovernmental organizations with experience in monitoring and reporting on indigenous and tribal peoples, and with other interested persons, throughout the preparation of the report required by subsection (b), but in particular—

(1) in determining the scope of that report; and

(2) in developing the methodology to be used in preparing that report.

(d) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall submit the report prepared pursuant to subsection (b) to the Congress.

SEC. 5. MONITORING REGARDING INDIGENOUS AND TRIBAL PEOPLES.

(a) MONITORING.—The Agency for International Development (in consultation with the Department of State), on a regular basis, shall collect information concerning and shall analyze the situation of indigenous and tribal peoples in developing countries.

(b) USE OF NGOs.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Agency shall, wherever appropriate, use United States-based nongovernmental organizations with experience in monitoring and reporting on indigenous and tribal peoples.

(c) ANNUAL REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Following completion of the report required by section 4, the Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall submit to the Congress, not later than February 1 each year, a report which—

(1) presents the findings resulting from the monitoring of indigenous and tribal peoples carried out pursuant to subsection (a);

(2) updates the information provided in the report submitted pursuant to section 4; and

(3) describes the activities which the Agency for International Development proposes to fund for the coming fiscal year to address the problems facing indigenous and tribal peoples in developing countries, specifying which activities will be carried out by the Agency and which will be carried out by nongovernmental organizations.

SEC. 6. ANNUAL HUMAN RIGHTS REPORTS.

In each report submitted to the Congress pursuant to sections 116(d) and 502(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Secretary of State shall include a description of each country's practices regarding the observation of and respect for the internationally recognized human rights of indigenous and tribal peoples in that country.

EMPLOYMENT INCENTIVES ACT

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 7, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today with my colleagues GEORGE MILLER, AL GORE, and JOHN LEWIS to help working families who are nevertheless trapped in poverty. Our bill is hardly revolutionary: it will reward working families struggling to make it by letting them keep more of their salary. The proposal will accomplish this by expanding the earned income tax credit and the dependent care credit.

Of all the philosophical sea-changes that the Reagan years wrought, perhaps the most persuasive is the notion that success at work and on the stock market should not be penalized by the Federal Government. One example of this doctrine is the decline in individual and business income tax rates. The argument goes, high rates penalize higher salaries, greater profits, raises, and bonuses. Low rates help to spur the successful on to greater financial success.

However, the current system rewards only those who already have achieved financial success. Americans who work hard and yet remain poor, arguably the most vulnerable of the poor, are being left behind. Like the ancient myth of Sisyphus, the more these families toil, the higher they believe they are climbing, the further behind they actually fall.

The ranks of the working poor are growing substantially, primarily as a result of growing wage inequality and an increase in low-wage jobs. Today almost 20 million poor adults and children live in families in which someone works during the year. Data from the Census Bureau reveal that the number of working age individuals, people ages 22 to 64, who work but are still poor was 44 percent larger in 1987 than in 1978. In addition, the number of people who work full time year-round and are still poor increased more than 42 percent between 1978 and 1987.

Moreover, the hackneyed categorizations about who is poor do not apply to those who work and remain poor. Of all families that are poor despite having a full-time year-round working head of household, 71 percent are families in which two parents are present. More than 61 percent of all workers who fall into poverty despite full-time year-round work are men. In addition, 79 percent of full-time year-round workers who live in poverty are white.

These are alarming statistics and should concern all who believe that hard work should enable a family to support itself. They reveal that the returns to work are decreasing for those at the bottom. This fact may surprise those who have heard that family income has risen significantly over the past decade—there has been extremely unequal growth in family income across family types and also at different points in the income distribution. Between 1973 and 1987, families with children experienced average real income growth of 13 percent. This was slower than the growth experienced by the overall population. Further, and even more significant, the poorest 20 percent of families with children suffered an income loss of 22 percent between 1973 and 1987. This loss is significant—over $2,300 per year for families that are clearly disadvantaged. Even the next poorest 20 percent of families with children lost 2.6 percent of family income between 1973 and 1987, equal to an average income loss of close to $600.

What can we do to arrest these alarming trends? The last thing we want to do is create a system that discourages and penalizes work or that isolates and stigmatizes the very people who are struggling to become part of the economic mainstream. Instead, we want to find ways to reinforce their efforts and to indicate that their work is valued and that work will pay off. We began this last year in the Family Security Act when we connected welfare benefits to the concept of work and training. The Employment Incentives Act will bring to life the proposition that the working poor should be rewarded not punished.

The Employment Incentives Act will do three things to make work more attractive. First, expand the earned income tax credit [EITC]. The basic idea is simple: families with low earnings get tax credits for each dollar that they get paid. Only those who work get the credit, and, up to the maximum income level, the more a person works the greater the EITC benefit.

My legislation would expand the EITC and vary the size of the credit not only by income level but also by family size. In 1990, for families with one child, the credit would equal 21 percent of the first $6,810 with a maximum credit of $1,430. For families with two or more children, the bill would raise the credit to 30 percent of the first $6,810 with a maximum credit of $2,043. Currently, the credit equals 14 percent of the first $6,240 with a maximum credit of $874.

The goal of this provision is to help families of all sizes with a full-time worker escape poverty. Currently, the EITC provides much less assistance to large families relative to the poverty line than it provides families with one child. Expanding the EITC and varying it by family size would follow the common-sense notion that the extent of a family's needs is a function of its size as well as its income.

Second, we can reduce the cost of working by expanding the dependent care credit. As the largest Federal program providing child care benefits for working parents, the credit is available for up to 30 percent of a limited amount of child care expenses. However, the credit is not refundable. This penalizes families with income so low that they have no tax liability. It means that work pays less for these families than it would were they able, as wealthier families are, to offset employment-related child care expenses.

The Employment Incentives Act would make the credit refundable and increase its benefits for working parents with adjusted gross income between $10,000 and $20,000 a year. These families would be eligible for a child care credit of 30 percent. For those with income between $20,000 and $30,000, the credit would phase down from 30 percent to 20 percent, as it does under current law.

The combined effect of the EITC and dependent care provisions would be significant. A family with two or more children with adjusted gross income of $10,000 would receive $3,243 in credits under my proposal, an increase of $2,290 over current law. For a family with one child with $10,000 in adjusted gross income, the make-work-pay proposal would mean $2,030 in credits, an increase of $1,077 over current law.

Finally, the bill includes a modest increase in the title XX social services block grant to help low-income families offset their primary work-related expense: child care. Much has been made of the large gap between the number of children in need of child care and the availability of such care. Services for low-income families, and very young children, are particularly lacking and the trend is getting worse.

Although a refundable dependent care credit will provide some relief to working poor families, not all those eligible will take advantage of the credit. Increasing the title XX entitlement will mean that States have sufficient resources to fill the gaps that would occur if only a tax credit approach were used to assist the working poor.

The cost of this bill is steep—$34 billion over 5 years—but it will not increase the deficit. That is because we pay for it by correcting an inequity in the tax law. Presently, the wealthiest taxpayers in this country have a lower marginal tax rate than other more moderate income taxpayers. Our bill will eliminate this so-called bubble so that the wealthiest individuals pay the same 33-percent tax rate currently paid by more moderate income taxpayers.

The Economic Incentives Act will help working families struggling to escape the throes of poverty by rewarding them for their labor. The 100th Congress spent a great deal of time and effort reforming the Nation's welfare system to foster self-sufficiency by easing the transition from welfare to work. Our legislation is the logical and necessary next step. Without stigmatizing or degrading the working poor, this legislation will help families toiling to escape poverty. And that's the overarching goal—families that work should not be poor.

H.R. 882

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INCREASE IN EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to earned income tax credit) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the credit percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $6,810.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under this subsection for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the credit percentage of $6,810, over

"(B) the phaseout percentage of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $10,740.

"(b) PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) CREDIT PERCENTAGE.—The credit percentage is 21 percent (30 percent in the case of an eligible individual with 2 or more qualifying children).

"(2) PHASEOUT PERCENTAGE.—The phaseout percentage is 15 percent (20 percent in the case of an eligible individual with 2 or more qualifying children)."

(b) QUALIFYING CHILD DEFINED.—Subsection (c) of section 32 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'qualifying child' means any child (within the meaning of section 151(c)(3)) of the eligible individual if—

"(A) such individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151 for such child, and

"(B) such child has the same principal place of abode as such individual for more than one-half of the taxable year."

(c) ADVANCE PAYMENT PROVISIONS.—

(1) PAYMENT BASED ON NUMBER OF QUALIFYING CHILDREN.—

(A) Subsection (b) of section 3507 of such Code is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking the period at end of paragraph (3) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) states the number of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for the taxable year."

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(c) of such Code is amended—

(i) by striking "14 percent" in subparagraphs (B)(i) and (C)(i) and inserting "the credit percentage",

(ii) by striking "subsection (b)" in subparagraph (B)(ii) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(iii) by adding at the end thereof the follwing new sentence:

"For purposes of this paragraph, the credit percentage shall be determined under section 32(b) on the basis of the number of qualifying children specified in the earned income eligibility certificate and the determination of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (B)(ii) shall be made on the basis of the number of qualifying children so specified."

(C) Clause (i) of section 3507(e)(3)(A) of such Code is amended by inserting before ", or" the following: "(or changing the percentages applicable to the employee under section 32(b) for the taxable year)".

(2) EXPANDED PARTICIPATION IN ADVANCE PAYMENT PROGRAM.—Subsection (e) of section 3507 of such Code (relating to furnishing and taking effect of certificates) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) EMPLOYERS REQUIRED TO COLLECT CERTIFICATE OR STATEMENT OF INELIGIBILITY.—On or before the date of commencement of employment with an employer, the employer shall require the employee to furnish to the employer a signed earned income eligibility certificate or a signed statement that such employee does not meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b)."

(3) REPEAL OF CALENDAR YEAR LIMITATION ON EFFECTIVENESS OF CERTIFICATE.—

(A) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 3507(e)(1) of such Code are each amended by striking "had been in effect for the calendar year" and inserting "is in effect".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(e) of such Code is amended—

(i) by striking "for any calendar year", and

(ii) by striking "during such calendar year".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 32(f) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "subsection (b)" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Separate tables shall be prescribed for taxpayers with 2 or more qualifying children and for other taxpayers."

(2) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (i) of section 32 of such Code are amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 1990, each dollar amount referred to in paragraph (2) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) such dollar amount, multiplied by

"(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins.

"(2) DOLLAR AMOUNTS.—The dollar amounts referred to in this paragraph are—

"(A) the $6,810 amount contained in paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of subsection (a), and

"(B) the $10,740 amount contained in subsection (a)(2)(B)."

SEC. 2 AMENDMENTS TO DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT.

(a) CREDIT MADE REFUNDABLE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to credit for expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment) is hereby transferred to subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code, inserted after section 24 of such subpart, and redesignated as section 35.

(2) COORDINATION WITH MINIMUM TAX.—Paragraph (1) of section 55(c) of such Code is amended by inserting "and the credit allowable under section 35" before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 35(a) of such Code (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended by striking "this chapter" and inserting "this subtitle".

(B) Section 35 of such Code (as in effect before the transfer under paragraph (1)) is hereby redesignated as section 36.

(C) Section 129 of such Code is amended—

(i) by striking "21(e)" in subsection (a) and inserting "35(e)",

(ii) by striking "21(d)(2)" in subsection (b)(2) and inserting "35(d)(2)", and

(iii) by striking "21(b)(2)" in subsection (e)(1) and inserting "35(b)(2)".

(D) Subsection (e) of section 213 of such Code is amended by striking "21" and inserting "35".

(E) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 21.

(F) The table of sections for subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 35. Expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment.

"Sec. 346. Overpayments of tax."

(b) CHANGE IN PHASE-DOWN.—Paragraph (2) of section 35(a) of such Code (as so redesignated) is amended—

(1) by striking "$2,000" and inserting "$1,000" and

(2) by striking "10,000" and inserting "$20,000".

(c) DENIAL OF CREDIT FOR FEDERALLY FUNDED CARE.—Subsection (e) of section 35 of such Code (as so redesignated) is amended by adding at the end thererof the following new paragraph:

"(9) FEDERALLY FUNDED DEPENDENT CARE SERVICES.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any employment-related expenses if any federally funded payments are made with respect to such expenses."

SEC. 3. CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL ASSISTANCE NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN DETERMINING DEPENDENCY DEDUCTION, ELIGIBILITY FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT, ETC.

Section 7701 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating subsection (k) as subsection (l) and by inserting after subsection (j) the following new subsection:

"(k) CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL ASSISTANCE DISREGARDED IN DETERMINING SUPPORT, ETC.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subtitle A and section 7703, there shall not be taken into account any assistance described in paragraph (2) for purposes of determining—

"(A) the extent to which the support of an individual is provided by that individual, by a taxpayer who has the same principal place of abode as the individual (including determinations under section 152), or by the parents of the individual for purposes of section 152(e)(1)(A), or

"(B) whether a taxpayer is considered as maintaining a household.

(2) ASSISTANCE DESCRIBED.—Assistance is described in this paragraph if—

"(A) it is provided under a Federal, State, or local governmental assistance program used for the support of the individual or for the maintenance of the household, and

"(B) the eligibility for the assistance (or the amount thereof) is determined on the basis of need or income."

SEC. 4. ELIMINATIONS OF PROVISION WHICH REDUCES MARGINAL TAX RATE FOR HIGH-INCOME TAXPAYERS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to tax imposed) is amended by striking subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) and inserting the following:

"(a) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING JOINT RETURNS AND SURVIVING SPOUSES.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of—

"(1) every married individual (as defined in section 7703) who makes a single return jointly with his spouse under section 6013, and

"(2) every surviving spouse (as defined in section 2(a)), a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $32,400	15% of taxable income.
Over $32,400 but not over $78,350.	$4,860, plus 28% of the excess over $32,400.
Over $78,350	$17,726, plus 33% of the excess over $78,350.

"(b) HEADS OF HOUSEHOLDS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every head of a household (as defined in section 2(b)) a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

Over $67,150	$15,422, plus 33% of the excess over $67,150.

"(c) UNMARRIED INDIVIDUALS (OTHER THAN SURVIVING SPOUSES AND HEADS OF HOUSEHOLDS).—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every individual (other than a surviving spouse as defined in section 2(a) of the head of a household as defined in section 2(b)) who is not a married individual (as defined in section 7703) a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $19,450	15% of taxable income.
Over $19,450 but not over $47,000.	$2,917.50, plus 28% of the excess over $19,450.
Over $47,000	$10,631.50, plus 33% of the excess over $47,000.

"(d) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every married individual (as defined in section 7703) who does not make a single return jointly with his spouse under section 6013, a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $16,200	15% of taxable income.
Over $16,200 but not over $39,175.	$2,430, plus 28% of the excess over $16,200.
Over $39,175	$8,863, plus 33% of the excess over $39,175.

"(e) ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of—

"(1) every estate, and

"(2) every trust,

taxable under this subsection a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $5,400	15% of taxable income.
Over $5,400 but not over $14,150.	$810, plus 28% of the excess over $5,400.
Over $14,150	$3,260, plus 33% of the excess over $14,150.

"(b) RETENTION OF CURRENT GAINS RATE.—Subsection (j) of section 1 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(j) MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If a taxapayer has a net capital gain for any taxable year and has taxable income in excess of the amount determined under paragraph (2), then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the sum of—

"(A) a tax computed at the rates and in the same manner as if this subsection had not been enacted on the greater of—

"(i) taxable income reduced by the amount of the net capital gain, or

"(ii) the amount determined under paragraph (2), plus

"(B) a tax of 28 percent of the amount of taxable income in excess of the greater of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(2) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount determined under this paragraph is the sum of—

"(i) the applicable dollar amount, plus

"(ii) 5⅔ times the aggregate deductions for personal exemptions allowable to the taxpayer for the taxable year under section 151.

"(B) APPLICABLE DOLLAR AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable dollar amount shall be determined under the following table:

In the case of a taxpayer to which the following subsection of this section applies:	The applicable dollar amount is:
Subsection (a)	$162,590
Subsection (b)	$134,750
Subsection (c)	$ 97,570
Subsection (d)	$ 81,295
Subsection (e)	$ 28,190.

"(C) ADJUSTMENTS FOR INFLATION.—In the case of any taxable year beginning in a calendar year after 1990, each dollar amount contained in subparagraph (B) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(i) such dollar amount, multiplied by

"(ii) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under subsection (f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins.

"(D) SPECIAL RULE.—In the case of an individual taxable under subsection (d), this paragraph shall be applied as if a deduction for a personal exemption were allowable under section 151 to such individual for such individual's spouse."

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1)(A) Subsection (f) of section 1 of such Code is amended—

(i) by striking "1988" in paragraph (1) and inserting "1990",

(ii) by striking "1987" in paragraph (3)(B) and inserting "1989", and

(iii) by striking "subsection (g)(4)" in paragraph (6)(A) and inserting "subsection (j)(2)(C)".

(B) Subparagraph (B) of section 63(c)(4) of such Code is amended by inserting ", by substituting 'calendar year 1987' for 'calendar year 1989' in subparagraph (B) thereof" before the period at the end thereof.

(C) Subparagraph (B) of section 151(d)(3) of such Code is amended by striking "1987" and inserting "1989".

(2) Section 1 of such Code is amended by striking subsections (g) and (h) and redesignating subsections (i) and (j) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively.

(3) Subsection (j) of section 59 of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "section 1(i)" each place it appears and inserting "section 1(g)", and

(B) by striking "section 1(i)(3)(B)" in paragraph (2)(C) and inserting "section 1(g)(3)(b)".

(4) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) of such Code is amended by striking "1(g)" and inserting "1(j)".

(5) Clause (iv) of section 6103(e)(1)(A) of such Code is amended by striking "section 1(i)" and inserting "section 1(g)".

(6)(A) Subparagraph (A) of section 7518(g)(6) of such Code is amended by striking "1(j)" and inserting "1(h)".

(B) Subparagraph (A) of section 607(h)(6) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 is amended by striking "1(j)" and inserting "1(h)".

SEC. 5. INCREASE IN ALLOTMENTS TO STATES FOR SOCIAL SERVICES.

Section 2003(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking "and 1987, and for each succeeding fiscal year other than fiscal year 1988; and" and inserting in lieu thereof "1988, 1989, and 1990;";

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(5) $2,900,000,000 for the fiscal year 1991;

"(6) $3,100,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992; and

"(7) $3,300,000,000 for the fiscal year 1993 and for each succeeding fiscal year.".

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATES; STUDY.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989; except that the amendments made by section 1(c) shall take effect on the day 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) STUDY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall conduct a study on the feasibility of an advance payment system for the credit allowed under section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as redesignated by this Act). As a part of such study, the Secretary is authorized to conduct one or more demonstration projects under which advance payments of such credit are made by employers under rules similar to the rules of section 3507 of such Code.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than July 1, 1991, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report on the study conducted under subsection (a), together with such recommendations as he may deem advisable.

SENATE—Wednesday, February 8, 1989

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 3, 1989)

The Senate met at 12 noon, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Almighty God, we worship Thee this day with traditional Hebraic benedictions.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who created the fruit of the vine.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has created all things to Thy glory.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has made man in Thine image, after Thy likeness, and has prepared unto him, out of His very self, a perpetual fabric.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord, Creator of man. May she who was barren, be exceedingly glad and exult when her children are gathered within her in joy.

Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who makest Zion joyful through her children, O make these loved companions greatly to rejoice, even as of old Thou didst gladden Thy creatures in the garden of Eden.

Blessed are Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has created joy and gladness, bridegroom and bride, mirth and exultation, pleasure and delight, love, brotherhood, peace, and fellowship. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER PROVIDING FOR MORNING BUSINESS UNTIL 2:30 P.M. TODAY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period for morning business today extend until 2:30 p.m. under the same terms and conditions as previously ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—NOMINATION OF CLAYTON YEUTTER, TO BE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as if in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that at 2:30 p.m. today, the Senate go into executive session to consider the nomination of Clayton Yeutter, to be Secretary of Agriculture, under a time agreement of 30 minutes, equally divided between the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], or their designees; provided, that no motions be in order, and that at 3 p.m., without any intervening business, the Senate proceed to a 15-minute vote on the nomination; provided, further, that upon the disposition of the nomination, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination, and the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement as propounded by the majority leader? The Chair hears none. That will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on the nomination at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, it is my intention, following the vote on the Yeutter nomination, to seek consent to proceed to a resolution to be offered by the Senators from Montana acknowledging the distinguished service of former Senator and former Ambassador Mike Mansfield. No vote is anticipated upon that resolution. So unless the distinguished Republican leader has any information to the contrary, it is my expectation that the only vote today will be on the Yeutter nomination, and that after completion of business today, the Senate will recess until 8:30 tomorrow evening, when we will convene and assemble as a body to proceed to the House Chamber to meet in joint session to hear the President address the Nation.

Therefore, the Yeutter vote should be the only rollcall vote this week that I am now aware of. I am going to ask the distinguished Republican leader if he has any request or information to the contrary. The Senate, after completion of the joint session, will stand in recess until Tuesday, February 21, at 2:15 p.m.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. There would certainly be no request for a rollcall on the Mansfield resolution, I think we are safe to say.

But then, as I indicated yesterday, it had been my hope that we would vote on the Tower nomination this week. There has been one additional allegation made which is being checked. I think it is baseless but, in any event, I agree with the chairman, Senator NUNN, and Senator WARNER, the ranking Republican, that it should be checked out.

It would be our hope that we might have the committee vote this week, but it now appears that it will not come to the floor and, as the majority leader indicated yesterday, that we will put it over until after the recess.

I know of no other nomination that is ready. I think the other nominations have either not been heard or are not ready to come to the floor.

Again, I thank the majority leader for his expeditious handling of the nominees as they have been ready for confirmation. But, at this point, there are none.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I may just comment.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

As I indicated to the distinguished Republican leader yesterday, I do not at this moment know when the Armed Services Committee will vote on the Tower nomination. When they do, of course, in view of the importance of the position and the attention that has been focused on it, I believe it appropriate that the committee prepare a report in the ordinary procedure and that report be available to Senators who are not members of the committee and for them to review it.

This is, obviously, a very difficult time for former Senator Tower personally and I think for all of us involved in the public process. At the same time, I think it is clear, in order to properly discharge the responsibility, that the Senate would have to have at least some period of time for Senators to make such inquiry as each individual Senator wishes to make; a fair period, not one prolonging this unnecessarily. Given the time constraints and with the upcoming recess, I do not think it is possible to bring the nomination for a vote this week. I think all Senators should be aware of that.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield, I do not have any quarrel with that. I think you are exactly correct. I have just spoken with former Senator Tower, our colleague. He is upbeat about the nomination. He is aware of the new allegation. I think that has already been covered, but he certainly thinks that should be checked out again, to satisfy not only members of the committee but Members of the Senate and, more importantly, the American public.

He has indicated his intention, obviously—his hope, at least—that at the earliest possible time it will be on the Senate floor. But he has no qualms about checking out any additional allegations. He feels that his nomination should be confirmed, and he is hanging in there.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order the Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I reserve my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader reserves his time.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order previously entered there will be a period now for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 2:30 p.m. today with Senators permitted to speak not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The senior Senator from Nevada, Mr. REID, is recognized.

ILLITERACY

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we devoted a great deal of attention this past year to the problem of drugs. The daily drug-related horror and violence assaults our senses. We were moved to do something about the drug menace.

Today I would like to talk about a problem that is less visible but—equally devastating.

I am referring, Mr. President, to illiteracy.

It is time to dispel the dangerously deceptive notion that what we do not see cannot hurt us. Illiteracy is tearing away at our economy, and at our people. Its effect is not unlike that of drugs.

I recently saw an essay by a Las Vegas man who is learning to read and write.

He wrote: "Illiteracy is like being an alcoholic. The dumbness—I am ashamed to admit it. It's like making the first phone call to Alcoholics Anonymous."

We have instituted new Federal initiatives and leadership to tackle the problem of drugs. Illiteracy demands the same attention—and the same response.

I therefore plan to cosponsor a bill to be introduced in the coming weeks by my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Illinois, Mr. SIMON.

This Illiteracy Elimination Act proposes a Federal agency-wide program. The timing of this bill is ideal.

It coincides with a recently released national study on the Federal Government's role in adult literacy. The study was conducted by the Southport Institute for Policy Analysis. It was funded by corporations and foundations throughout the country.

An advisory board of literacy experts contribued their insights.

The study concludes that literacy must be a national priority.

Why the urgency? The study draws attention to our "demographic destiny." By the year 2000, adults will constitue 75 percent of our Nation's work force. A staggering number of those adults will lack basic reading and writing skills.

According to the study, a decision is imperative:

> We have a choice between a high-income high-productivity nation based on a high-quality work force, or a second-class economy based on a second-rate work force.

A major problem in addressing illiteracy stems from the widely held view that "there is no boss." This, of course, was a key missing element in the war against drugs. We have since rectified that problem with the passage of the Omnibus Drug Initiative Act and the subsequent creation of a drug czar. The challenge of illiteracy goes unresolved.

According to the study, even the best State and city initiatives now hang "by the tenuous thread of a personal interest of a Governor or first lady." I am all too familiar with this fragile structure. My wife, Landra, has devoted the past 18 months to developing a statewide literacy initiative for Nevada.

The public-private enterpise Landra envisioned is becoming a reality. With the strong support of Nevada's former Governor, Richard Bryon, and the new Governor, Bob Miller, the Governor's Literacy Advisory Council is nearing fruition. This public sector effort will be complemented by the Nevada Literacy Foundation, a nonprofit entity that will generate involvement and support from the private sector. Landra is currently completing plans for the foundation's establishment, and she will spearhead its efforts. The public-private partnership, such as that created in Nevada, is a cornerstone of the proposed legislation about which I previously spoke.

Will Rogers once said: "The fellow that can only see a week ahead is always the popular fellow, for he is looking with the crowd. But the one that can see years ahead, he has a telescope but he can't make anybody believe he has it." I am no prophet, Mr. President, but I have seen reams of evidence that cry out for Federal leadership in the fight against illiteracy. I am a little like Will Rogers' popular fellow that sees the daily street murders triggered by drugs, and does something about it.

But I am also like Mr. Rogers' fellow with the telescope. I see the less visible withering away of our economic strength, of our Nation's morale, and of our fellow Americans' well-being. I see the effects of illiteracy. And I want us to do something about it.

So, therefore, Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join with Senator SIMON and me in this battle against illiteracy.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

PUNISH THE S&L CRISIS CULPRITS

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise to, really, talk about the savings and loan crisis for a minute or two. First, I would like to congratulate our President, Mr. Bush, on stepping up to the issue, to presenting a plan on how we can solve this issue. I want to also congratulate him in assuring depositors that we will back up their deposits 100 percent.

President Bush has this absolute pledge of cooperation to make sure that we assure the depositors of the safety and soundness of their deposits. I look forward to working very closely with the executive branch and members of the appropriate committee, on solving this problem.

But, Mr. President, when we take a look at all the ideas that are being suggested by the President and his team and our own good colleagues, we cannot just focus on the technical. Mr. President, this is not just a meeting of the National Algebra Society, where we are trying to solve problems in an objective way, in which we have no emotional involvement.

Mr. President, let me say this: I think we need to express outrage. An outrageous fraud has been perpetuated on American savers by a select group of what I call go-go boys.

These go-go boys used deposits to bankroll lavish lifestyles, invest in crooked deals, and I think they must be punished.

We need to follow a two-track policy. The Federal Government must be very clear in what it undertakes. First, we must protect the depositor. But at the same time, let us punish the bad guys.

Mr. President, I would like to put them in a stockade. Remember the old-fashioned days where you put somebody in a stockade? I would like anybody that has a CD, or $100 in one of these bad S&L's, to be able to go up, whether it is a senior citizen that saved for her old age, whether it is a dad that is saving for his daughter's or son's college education, I would like them to be able to take a whack at some of these because of exactly what they have done.

As we go ahead with this bailout, or rescue, I am going to make sure the bad guys are punished and that we mandate reform. I think before we approve a single cent, we need to mandate that there will be real reforms, that this not happen again. But at the same time I would like us to go after the go-go boys. I think there has to be criminal investigation, criminal prosecution, and criminal penalties.

At the same time, I would like, right today, that the appropriate Federal authorities go out there and confiscate the personal assets of those who are under investigation. I mean real investigation.

When we talk about criminal penalties, GAO has reported that out of the 26 thrifts that they looked at, 19 had criminal misconduct. Yet FSLIC has granted immunity to some of these.

We should not treat these go-go high rollers and wheeler-dealers, who are guilty or possibly guilty of fraud, as if they were no fault.

Mr. President, whatever bailout we should do, we should not have no-fault capitalism here. If you did something wrong, you have to help pay for it.

When we catch drug smugglers, we confiscate their assets and throw them in jail. The bad guys here deserve the same.

Let us confiscate their Maseratis. Let us confiscate their yachts. Let us go after the 84 Rolls Royces that they bought from the Bhagwan. Mr. President, I do not even know what a Bhagwan is, but I know what a Rolls Royce is, and I know what a bad deal is.

They bankrolled things like Halloween parties. One Halloween party cost $300,000 where they rented elephants and disco performers. Mr. President, who went trick or treating?

We are now faced with a terrible situation. Some of our S&L's are in a crisis because they were caught between what they could pay depositors and their long-term loans. That is a tragedy, but there are these other guys who have perpetrated a travesty. Two hundred years ago we would have tarred and feathered them and run them out of town on the rail. Maybe we ought to go back to some old-fashioned justice.

I know one thing: The depositor wants to be protected, but the depositor wants the go-go crowd punished. I think the Congress ought to get back to it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

DEREGULATION

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished colleague from Maryland. She is talking sense. The real crux of the S&L crisis is the pellmell deregulation of recent years. We have made a cult of deregulation that I hope has passed. We have deregulated the FCC so people are buying and selling TV stations, minority ownership is gone, the antitrafficking rule is gone and there is total chaos in the communications world. Similarly with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

We have all read the stories in the Washington Post and elsewhere; the calls to do away with regulation. We see the consequences now in the S&L industry. The latest estimate of the bill is $127 billion.

I hope we can stop this nonsense about government not regulating and ergo government not being responsible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of West Virginia, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

THE SOVIET DOCTRINE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in this quiet moment, as we await the discussions of the nomination of Ambassador Yeutter, I would like to take the time of the Senate to take note of the extraordinary events that have been taking place in the Soviet Union. In a long lifetime, I certainly have never seen anything like it, nor do I think anything such as this has occurred before.

A notable point is the address given by the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Mr. Gorbachev, at the United Nations on December 7 when, in a little-noted passage, he stated that "We"—referring to the Soviet Union and the CPSU—"are, of course, far from claiming to be in the possession of the ultimate truth." That was an unprecedented statement, for possessing the ultimate truth is exactly what the leaders of the Soviet Union have claimed for 70 years.

Since November 1917, the Soviet claim had been not simply that the U.S.S.R. was a powerful nation with powerful interests and powerful means for pursuing them. The Soviets also claimed to represent the next stage in history, and it was this claim that distinguished the cold war from all other previous experiences of national states. There was, in effect, a conflictual essence, as someone has written, in the existence of the state and the central doctrine of class warfare.

When the Soviets spoke of class warfare, it was not fully understood. They were talking about warfare between nations representing different classes: the Soviet Union representing the working class, and the United States and others the bourgeois class. They saw the conflict as an inevitable one, with an inevitable outcome. The laws of history decreed that there would be an international triumph of Marxist-Leninist doctrine, and you could almost be good-natured about it and say, "We are sorry, but that is the way it is going to turn out."

It is now clear that that is not the way it is going to turn out. On every hand we see evidences of the cold war coming to an end, of the Soviets abandoning that doctrine. Mr. Ligachev was told he had to step down, that he must cease promulgating the doctrine of class warfare.

And, Mr. President, something else has happened. I find myself able to describe it only with some difficulty, but I would put it this way: There is reason to believe that a systematic effort has been underway for at least a year in the Soviet Union to lay a paper trail, a paper trail that would so expose the reality of the past 70 years in the Soviet Union that no one could ever imagine a return to those times. No one could ever legitimately seek to reinstate the ideological presumptions of the internationalist creed which they said would, in time, by the laws of history, prevail.

Mr. President, I spent much of my youth in New York City, at City College, listening to addresses at Union Square.

(Mr. ADAMS assumed the chair.)

Mr. MOYNIHAN. In those days, concern with Marxism and Leninism, absorbed the city. Either one was somewhere in the wide orbit of the party or was in opposition, in which event you were similarly preoccupied. When Leon Trotsky was murdered in Mexico City, New York City was rent upon the question of: "Could Stalin have done it." Of course not. "Could he have wished it?" Nonsense. "Could he have indicated he would not mind it?" No, never.

Mr. President, last month the Soviet weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta published the name of the NKVD agent who went to Mexico City to plan Trotsky's death and the name of the Spaniard who killed Trotsky. That is now all in the public record.

We have seen in the Soviet press long recreations of the life of Bukharin, and statements that here was an innocent ally of Lenin slaughtered by Stalin.

We have the great writings of the last few decades: Koestler, published; Mandelston, published; Pasternak, published.

We have a commission in Byelorussia to investigate Stalinist repression; and a proposal to raise a memorial in Moscow to Stalin's victims.

We have stories in Pravda of Soviet airmen, who after the war found two women pulling a plow at a time the Soviet Union was exporting grain. They wrote Stalin, and they were sent to the Gulag. Tales right out of Solzhenitsyn's "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich."

We have more evidence of the fundamental depravity of Stalin's regime, and I do not think it could ever return. I dare to think this is a deliberate act.

Mr. President, I expressed some thoughts pertaining to this matter in a newsletter to my constituents last December. It has recently been published by the New Leader, that eminent organ of New York political life which was founded in the main by Russian immigrants, men who were menschevits and democratic Socialists. These men had been part of the democratic faction which overthrew the czar and were in turn overthrown by Lenin and the Bolsheviks. They were a group of Democrats who for half a century preserved the memory that there was not one but two Russian revolutions, the first one a democratic one, the second a totalitarian one.

Mr. President, in that commentary I observed that our difficulty with the Soviet Union is not over by any means. A Soviet Union in decline, breaking up under nationalist pressure, could be more dangerous than the one we now know. The Soviet Union we have known could await the verdicts of history. A nation breaking up, an empire breaking up, might want to change history.

For all I know, the next ruler of the Soviet Union will be the equivalent of Vlad the Impaler. But I do not think that the Soviets can return to the claims of the past and in that respect they are a fundamentally different regime. Our policy, shaped by 70 years of encounter with the conflictual essence of the Soviet Union, can and ought now to change as well.

Not for one moment can we underestimate the dangers of an era of Soviet weakness. The Soviets still have their missiles. They still have their xenophobia. They have an empire, a 19th-century empire about to break up, and yet their claim to be the next stage of history has passed.

I think it can never be retrieved by any Soviet leader. That particular assault on the international order is over.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point certain documents, my own article in the New Leader if I may do that, and excerpts from other articles bearing on my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Leader, Jan. 23, 1989]

THINKING ALOUD: END OF THE MARXIST EPOCH

(By Daniel Patrick Moynihan)

The editorial writers at the New York Times are a careful lot, certainly not given to gushing. So it was no small event to turn to their page last December 8 and read: "Perhaps not since Woodrow Wilson presented his Fourteen Points in 1918, or since Franklin Roosevelt and Winston Churchill promulgated the Atlantic Charter in 1941, has a world figure demonstrated the vision Mikhail Gorbachev displayed yesterday at the United Nations."

I agree, but with a particular reading of the term "vision." It was a kind of rear vision. Gorbachev declared the end of the Marxist epoch, a century or more in which great nations, great movements the world over were seized by the absolute conviction that the future was foretold, and that that future was theirs. The "scientific" work of Karl Marx and Vladimir Ilyich Lenin was said to have discovered the laws of history, much as Sir Isaac Newton discovered the laws of gravity. As for the Soviet Union, as one writer observed, its claim was not so much to be a competitor with the Western nations but rather to be a step forward in history. It was what was coming next. The laws of history so decreed.

Hence the stunning moment when the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union stood before the General Assembly of the United Nations and told the world: "We are, of course, far from claiming to be in the possession of the ultimate truth." For that is exactly what Communists had claimed for a century!

Now it is all over, and the General Secretary of the CPSU so states. That is truly an event.

I am now a man in his 60s; my first political memories are of New York City in the 1930s. One almost has to have had such a personal history to take the measure of the event at the UN on December 7. I am therefore going to ask those of you who are younger, those who never went to City College, never listened to speeches in Union Square, never attended lectures at the Rand School (I still have a book Bertrand Russell autographed for me there)—I'm going to ask you to be patient with me and let me walk you through some of those times and places.

We were in the Depression in the 1930s, and in the course of that decade a vast number of both ordinary and extraordinary people came to the conclusion that Marx and Lenin were indeed correct, that capitalism was in its final, doomed stage, and that Communism was the foreordained next step in history. It was already in place in Russia; it would soon spread.

Although, as many as a million Americans belonged to the Communist Party at one time or another (there was much turnover). The center of all this was New York City, the center of political writing and thinking, much as London was when Marx scribbled away at the British Museum, the counterpart of the New York Public Library. Robert Warshow, writing in Commentary in December 1947, summed up the 1930s in New York:

"For American intellectuals, the Communist movement of the 1930s was a crucial experience. . . . There was a time when virtually all intellectual vitality was derived in one way or another from the Communist Party. If you were not somewhere within the party's wide orbit, then you were likely to be in the opposition, which meant that much of your thought and energy had to be devoted to maintaining yourself in opposition."

This was indeed true the world over. There might not have been much of a Communist Party in, say, Peru, but you may be sure there was one. And there were mass political parties in all of continental Europe. A half century ago the "future" seemed at hand. What saved us?

I have no greater claim than the next person to having figured this out. Nor is the phenomenon by any means completely over. But I have some thoughts. First of all, above all, there is the fact that the Communist state in Russia almost immediately became a totalitarian state. The first totalitarian state. No such system of total government control had ever before existed. Hitler merely copied it. Sooner or later, people came to see how hideous it was. And there were men and women who would not submit. These have been the martyrs of the 20th century; and their grace has touched us.

Then there was the United States, the Great Republic, as John F. Kennedy was fond of saying. As the conflict grew ominous at midcentury, led by the likes of Harry S. Truman, George C. Marshall and Dean Acheson, we armed ourselves and armed allies and decreed that we would not go quietly into the "dustbin of history" (a favored Communist phrase).

Yet, there was more. The basic reality is that Marxism did not predict the future, even though it claimed to do so. Take one proposition from the Communist Manifesto of 1848: "Working men of the World unite. . . . The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains." Marx predicted that under the new mode of industrial production a simple world-wide hierarchy of classes would emerge in which ethnic differences would disappear, as workers submerged their personalities into what might be described as a uniform, international mass.

A quarter century ago Nathan Glazer and I (working at the New York Public Library!) wrote Beyond the Melting Pot, a study of ethnic groups of New York City. If ever there was a place where Marx's proletariat was going to emerge, it was our town, with its hugely varied population. Many scarcely spoke the language, had no roots in the place, no attachment to the owners of capital. Nevertheless, we found nothing of the sort. Groups retained distinctive qualities that mattered to them. Some years later we edited a volume, Ethnicity: Theory and Practice. We found no support for Marxist prediction in either theory or practice. We contributed the entry on "ethnicity" to the new Harper Dictionary of Modern Thought, which reads in part:

"In the Communist Manifesto Marx and Engels forecast that all preindustrial distinctions of an ethnic character would disappear with the emergence of a world-wide industrial Proletariat united by a perceived common condition and shared interest. The Workers of the World belief, central to Marxism, is increasingly presented as central to the falsification of Marxist prediction. . . . Ethnic conflict within the Soviet empire is likely to prove a major element in 21st-century world politics."

Half a century ago in New York you'd have had a hell of an argument over so bold an assertion: Marxism falsified! No more.[1]

In his UN address, Gorbachev spoke pointedly of the urgency of "harmonizing interethnic relations" in the Soviet Union. The Baltic Republics are open, if orderly, rebellion. The Caucasus is riotous. And, of course, in the 1950s the Chinese made clear they were not about to have Russians tell them how to run a revolution. Thus the Russian Communist fell in with the Vietnamese Communists because they hated the Chinese Communists who hated the Russian Communists, and so it goes. Ethnic conflict as usual!

But the greatest failure was precisely where there was going to be the greatest success. Economics. Although it is now hard to remember, a central tenet of Marxist-Leninist belief was that "socialist" production would be more efficient than capitalist production. This was to prove momentously mistaken.

I invite the thought that there is a certain symmetry to these events. The rest of the world catches on; then the Soviets catch on.

By mid-century no one in the West had any illusions about the nature of Soviet society: There was no equality, no justice, merely horror. Then in 1956, three years after Stalin's death, in a secret speech to the 20th Party Congress of the CPSU, Nikita S. Khrushchev told of the crimes of Stalin. End the illusion of justice. Next came the break with Red China. End the illusion of proletarian unity. Next came the revelation that the Soviets couldn't even feed themselves. End the illusion of efficiency.

When you consider how fiercely the Bolsheviks believed they would win out, you have a sense of what they must feel today. In 1961, Khrushchev declared that by 1970 the USSR would "overtake and surpass" the U.S. in economic production. He wasn't faking. That is what they believed. Lars-Erik Nelson of the New York Daily News, whose commentary on that week's events was unequaled in my view, suggested I go back and read the editorial in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, following Khrushchev's ouster in October 1964. The text is triumphant. The Soviet economy is about to soar:

"Undeviatingly pursuing this Leninist line, the Party and the Soviet people are gaining victories in accomplishing the chief economic task—creating the material and technical base of communism.

". . . There is a swelling torrent of joyous tidings of new enterprises being opened, of the mastering of production of progressive types of goods, of glorious labor achievements by our working class, collective farm peasantry, State farm workers, and specialists in all branches of the national economy. Millions of Soviet people by their creative labor in plants and factories, at construction projects, on collective farm and State farm fields, in scientific institutes and laboratories and in cultural, educational and public health institutions are implementing in practice the Program of the CPSU, advancing the great cause of Communist construction, which has become the dear cause of millions, of the entire Soviet people."

At just that moment, the new leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, began 18 years in power which Pravda now refers to as "the period of stagnation." American wheat began arriving. The Pacific Rim took off. In 1987 in Moscow, officials would speak of the "widening gulf between the Soviet Union and the advanced capitalist countries." But they were not talking about Holland. Peter the Great figured out Holland. They were talking about Korea—South Korea, that is—Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore. The proverbial toiling Asian masses were suddenly sweeping world markets with electronic circuitry, whilst all the Soviets could sell abroad was fish eggs and furs, trading goods of a hunter-gatherer economy.

It seems to me that in the 1980s a good many people in Washington missed all this. There was much talk of Soviet military superiority; Soviet expansion. Granted, their military force was and is formidable; albeit Gorbachev, in his UN address, suggested they can no longer afford it. But expansion? Apart from Afghanistan, and old involvement, I could not see anything new in the Marxist-Leninist regimes that popped up here and there in the Third World. There was once an international Communist movement with great expectations. Remember New York in the 1930s. By the 1980s this had been over for years. Over in New York, in Paris, in Rome, good Lord, over in Moscow. But how were the Sandinistas to know? It takes a long time for word to reach a place like Managua, or La Paz, or Maputo. I tried to lay out this argument in the commencement speech I delivered at New York University in 1984:

"The truth is that the Soviet idea is spent. It commands some influence in the world; and fear. But it summons no loyalty. History is moving away from it with astounding speed. I would not press the image, but it is as if the whole Marxist-Leninist ethos is hurtling off into a black hole in the universe. . . .

"Are there Marxist-Leninists here and about in the world? Yes: especially when the West allows communism to identify with nationalism. But in truth, when they do succeed, how well do they do? And for how long?

"We should be less obsessed with the Soviets. If we must learn to live with military parity, let us keep all the more in mind that we have consolidated an overwhelming economic advantage. The 24 members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, known as the OECD—a quintessential initiative in world politics of the postwar United States—now produce 60 per cent of the world's GNP. The Soviet bloc produces 19 per cent. What is the rest of the world to think?

"The historical outcome is certain if we can keep the nuclear peace and attend to our own arrangements in a manner in which they continue to improve."

Well, the outcome seems beyond doubt now. We are not at the end of our problems with the Soviets. Should that society commence to break up, it could be a hugely dangerous moment. The notion of Soviet conquest, however, is surely behind us. We have to watch that the rest of the world doesn't conclude that we, too, exhausted ourselves in the "long twilight struggle" of which President Kennedy spoke in his Inaugural Address. (Will the next superpower competition be the drive to replace the United States as the world's largest debtor?) But, still, freedom prevailed.

Let's be clear. Soviet antagonism is real. Soviet missiles are real. They have hardly surrendered. But they have given up on the belief that they can live as a closed society and eventually triumph. Our defense budget has been declining for four straight years. Theirs continues to rise. But we have allies who could do much more than they are doing. The Soviet allies are economic basket cases. Paul Kennedy of Yale notes that Britain, Japan, France, and West Germany each spend more on defense than the non-Russian Warsaw Pact countries together. And then there are those thriving overseas protectorates, Cuba and Vietnam!

The Soviet Union remains the Soviet Union. Don't expect democracy. Have no fear that the "L" word will catch hold there. Even so, the vision of world ideological dominion is past. Which is the end of an epoch.

It seems to me that Jerry Hough of Duke University has it about right. "It is the end of the postwar world," he states. "We're not going to invade them and they're not going to invade us. The challenge now is that economic strength is the more important chip, and what we need is a President with an economic interest, not just a military-security interest." I might add, a Congress too.

[1] The closed nature of Soviet society obscured how much connection we have with their history and they with ours. Marx, after all, was a London correspondent of the New York Daily Tribune. A year ago I visited Lenin's study in the Kremlin. In the bookcase behind his desk, I spotted works by three men I have met in my life. In Leningrad I asked my Soviet hosts why they could find no place for a memorial to Aleksandr Kerensky, who in 1917 led the provisional democratic government that Lenin's Bolshevik's overthrow. "Kerensky," came the reply, "well that was awful long ago, and uh . . . "Not that long ago, I responded in turn: "He used to come around and talk to us when I was a student at Benjamin Franklin High School in East Harlem." Many puzzled looks.

But that will keep. For the moment, the point is that we have a prospect of peace on earth such as we've not known for most of a century.

GORBACHEV'S NATIONALITY CRISIS: THE EMPIRE BREAKS UP

(By Jacques Rupnik)

"Great Russia has forged forever the indestructible union of free republics."—from the Soviet national anthem.

From the beginning, Mikhail Gorbachev understood that his effort to restructure the Soviet economy would encounter at least two obstacles: the resistance of the Party bureaucracy and the passivity of a society kept for some 70 years under anesthesia. Hence his decision to supplement perestroika with glasnost. Greater freedom of speech was intended to expose the misdeeds of a "Brezhnevite" bureaucracy and thereby mobilize the support of a disgruntled populace. Glasnost has succeeded in bringing about a social awakening, but it is not the kind Gorbachev had in mind. It has developed on the Soviet periphery rather than in the heart of Russia, and it is committed not to a single reform program but to a variety of nationalistic movements. The last two have seen Armenians fighting with Azerbaijanis over territory; anti-Russian riots in Kazakhstan; Crimean Tatars, who were deported by Stalin to Central Asia, demonstrating in Moscow for the right to return home; and people in the Baltic republics challenging the very foundation of their allegiance to the Soviet Union. From Central Asia to Europe, the Soviet Empire is cracking at its seams.

And the worst is yet to come. For the nationalist crises that have burst most fully into view—the Baltic and the Armenian—are minor compared with those that are likely to flare up before long, involving the Ukrainians and the Muslims of Central Asia. Unless a policy can be developed to keep these movements under control, Gorbachev's perestroika—and even the Soviet empire itself—may be living on borrowed time.

The resurgence of nationalism has shattered the carefully manicured myth of the Soviet Union as a harmonious community of brotherly nations "drawn together" by the construction of socialism. Now that glasnost has rubbed off the ideological varnish, the Soviet Union appears as what it is: the last colonial empire still in existence. And it is an empire even more anachronistic than most. For demographic trends are about to turn the imperial nationality—the Russians—into a minority, and the Russians are seen by many non-Russians—especially the Balts and the Georgians—as economically and culturally backward. Can Gorbachev's reforms, designed to bring the Soviet Union into the 21st century, sustain an increasingly absurd imperial system inherited from the 19th century?

It is ironic that Gorbachev's first nationalist headache originated in Armenia. Though the Armenians now seek the preservation of their culture and language in the face of Russian influences, the basic orientation of Armenian nationalism is not separatist, or even anti-Soviet. Its strength derives, rather, from memory of the 1915 massacre of 1.5 million Armenians by the Turks. Indeed, the current Armenian campaign to reclaim the Nagorno-Karabakh province is directed less at Moscow than at Azerbaijan, which has a Turkish population. On paper the claim is a rational one: to reunite a territory populated mainly by Armenians with the rest of Armenia. But the dispute acquired an irrational, tribal character after the anti-Armenian pogrom in Azerbaijan a year ago. The depth of the enmity was seen during the Armenian earthquake in December. In Azerbaijan, news of the earthquake, according to a Western reporter, "engendered a holiday atmosphere." The tragedy was seen by young demonstrators as "Allah's punishment."

The earthquake also revealed the depth of Gorbachev's political skill. He turned the inefficiency of aid to the victims into an indictment against local officials not sympathetic to his policies. He tried to expose the triviality of tribal feuds in the face of a tragedy that called for a truly collective Soviet reconstruction effort. Most important, he decapitated the Armenian nationalist movement by putting behind bars the entire leadership of the Karabakh Committee, which tried to have the distribution of aid placed in the hands of Armenians rather than Soviet officials. It is unclear how many political prisoners there actually are in the Soviet Union today, but we know there are a dozen new ones: the 12 angry men from the Karabakh Committee.

But all of Gorbachev's savvy may not be up to the challenge. His imprisonment of Armenian nationalists has cost him popular support. And his longer term solution—a recent proposal to put Nagorno-Karabakh under a predominantly Russian "special administration" while keeping it within the borders of Azerbaijan—will not appease the nationalists. Yet he cannot afford to go further. Actually altering the borders between two Soviet republics would set a dangerous precedent in a multinational empire where ethnic and political borders often do not coincide. And, more immediately, such a move might provoke strong anti-Moscow reactions among the Shiite Muslims in Azerbaijan, which could have a spillover effect on the Sunni Muslims in Soviet Central Asia.

The rise of nationalism in the three Baltic countries is less violent and tribal and more political, channeled through existing institutions. Nonetheless, it too challenges the very basis of Moscow's relations with the Soviet republics. The subject of the forced annexation of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania in 1940 and the subsequent mass imprisonment of elites and political opponents had been taboo until glasnost. Now commemoration of the events of 1939-40 has become the occasion for national self-assertion. Stretching glasnost to the utmost, the Lithuanian publication Sajudzio Zinios last year printed the secret protocol of the Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939. Balts could read for the first time the agreement that "in the event of a territorial and political rearrangement in the areas belonging to the Baltic states (Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania), the northern boundary of Lithuania will represent the boundary of the spheres of influence of Germany and the U.S.S.R." Thus the denunciation of Stalinist crimes—a favorite theme of glasnost—led to a debunking of the official Soviet myth about the "voluntary union" of 1940, and thus to questions about the very legitimacy of Soviet rule.

Since the Balts were the last to "join" the Soviet Union, it seems only natural that they would be the most sensitive to constraints on their autonomy. Two recently proposed amendments to the Soviet Constitution raised this issue and thereby stirred political nationalism. The first strengthened the right of the Supreme Soviet in Moscow to overrule decisions by the republican parliaments. The second gave the Soviets the right to declare martial law and other "special forms of administration." The first was rejected by the Balts as negating the "right to secession" ostensibly recognized by the Soviet Constitution. The "special powers" amendment, though probably introduced with the Armenian conflict in mind, was also taken personally by Balts, who feared it could apply to them. Both amendments finally passed, although in watered-down form.

Moscow's insensitivity in pushing through the amendments transformed the hitherto primarily cultural and economic quest for the autonomy of Baltic states into an overtly political one. The popular fronts, the mass organizations that have mushroomed in the Baltic republics, are now raising the question of sovereignty. In Latvia this aim was cautiously worded by the front as "a true government by the people . . . and the settlement of the nationality problem." In Lithuania the front boldly seeks "democracy and the restoration of the political, cultural, and economic sovereignty in Lithuania." The Estonian Parliament went further, proclaiming at an extraordinary session in November its right to veto laws passed by the Supreme Soviet. The resolution also declared all Estonian land, natural resources, and industries the property of the republic.

For Gorbachev, accepting the republic's right to veto Moscow's decisions is just as unthinkable a precedent as the redrawing of boundaries demanded by the Armenians. Once again the very basis of the empire is being challenged. This explains the vehemence of Gorbachev's rebuff. In a major speech in November, he issued his strongest condemnation of nationalism yet, saying that Estonia's defiance of central power affected "the destiny of our whole union." Estonian land and property, he said, belong to all Soviet people. Nationalism was now presented as the main threat to his economic reforms: "Comrades, it would be disastrous, it would put in jeopardy our perestroika."

The solution to Gorbachev's Baltic problem may be to make a virtue of necessity and turn the Baltic republics into a laboratory for perestroika. The Balts have a long prior history of free markets and are probably the most economically advanced of the Soviet peoples. They are keen to develop closer economic ties with northern Europe and Scandinavia—whose historical links to them are as strong as Russia's. Moscow could defuse the drive for political autonomy by granting economic autonomy: let the Baltic states liberate their economies at whatever pace they see fit, and let them trade with their neighbors to the west on their own terms, free from Moscow's regulation. The Baltic countries as a showcase for perestroika and a channel for Western technology transfer to the Soviet Union—as the Hong Kong of the U.S.S.R.? It would be a daring move, but Gorbachev has shown no aversion to departures from tradition.

Compared with Gorbachev's other nationalism problems, the unrest in the Baltics is fairly manageable. There are only seven million people in the Baltic region, one-fourth of whom are ethnic Russians. Besides, the unrest is channeled through political institutions; local Communist elites have joined the popular fronts and are well positioned to moderate nationalist aspirations. The most serious nationalist threat to Gorbachev is likely to come not from the current crisis points in the Baltic or the Caucasus, but from three other sources: the Ukrainians, the Muslims of Central Asia, and ultimately the Russians themselves.

The Ukraine, with a population of 45 million, has sometimes been called the largest European nation without a state. So far it has been deceptively quiet—and uncharacteristically so. In the aftermath of the Bolshevik Revolution and of World War II (which followed a Ukrainian famine provoked by Stalin's terrorist collectivization drive), only brute force quashed Ukrainian bids for independence. Then in the 1960s and early 1970s, Ukrainian writers pioneered the revival of the national question in the Soviet Union. But after the purge of Shelest, then the local Party boss, the Ukraine was subjected to "normalization," and its dissidents were sent to the Gulag.

While Balts were seizing the new opportunities of glasnost, the Ukraine had to wait because its leader, Vlodimir Shcherbitsky, 70, the last prominent Brezhnevite still in office and head of the second largest Communist Party in the U.S.S.R., kept the lid tightly on. But it was loosened by the celebration last year of the millennial anniversary of the Christian Church in Kiev. (It had also been loosened a few years earlier by the Chernobyl disaster, which left the natives restless.) Ivan Dziuba, a prominent nationalist essayist whose work was once suppressed, has been published in the December issue of Kommunist, and writers in Kiev now openly call for Shcherbitsky's resignation. When that happens there will almost certainly be a shift from cultural to political nationalism. And in the Ukraine such a movement would be more dangerous than in the Baltics. Here, where the Communist Party was purged of reformers only a decade ago, there are few Communist officials positioned to do what Baltic officials have done: join a nationalist movement and serve as a moderating influence. The Ukraine is fertile ground for a real revolt (only last month 60 activists were arrested in Kiev), and a potentially contagious one; the Ukraine has strong historical ties to Poland. One can imagine a chain reaction that would leave Gorbachev facing full blown crises on both the inner and outer peripheries of his empire.

Khrushchev had a clever way of placating the Ukrainians: treat the Ukraine as Moscow's junior partner. Gorbachev would do well to take a leaf out of Nikita's book, and promote more Ukrainians to the Central Committee and the Politburo, which are now overwhelmingly Russian.

In Central Asia, perestroika is virtually ignored, and here Gorbachev is likely to keep facing strong resistance to his policies. Whereas the Balts embrace and exploit political and economic reforms, the Central Asians fear change. Their culture is not economically modern, and they receive large government subsidies. Both Party elites and common folk fear being left by perestroika to sink or swim. Add to this a long-standing resentment against the culture of their Russian overlords, and you have a quite natural hostility toward Gorbachev. There are three reasons this opposition could pose big problems for him: demographics, Islam, and Afghanistan.

While the Russians are about to become a minority in the U.S.S.R., the 40 million Soviet Muslims (Uzbeks, Kazaks, Azeris, Tadzhiks, Turkomans, and Kirghiz) are by far the fastest growing population in the country. Within a century, assuming present growth rates, the Soviet Union will be predominantly a Muslim country. These trends have given new self-confidence to the peoples of Central Asia, the "land bridge" between the eastern lands of the Soviet empire, where most of the natural resources are located, and its Western metropolis, where political and economic power are based.

The rise of Islam, especially of fundamentalist Islam in neighboring countries, also has long-term implications for the Soviet Union. As Milan Hauner notes in Afghanistan and the Soviet Union, the Soviets of Central Asia increasingly use Islamic forms to express their rejection of Russian culture and their misgivings about the Soviet political system. A Party leader from Tadzhikistan warned in 1986 that "Islam exercises a growing influence on our young generation. We must therefore use our legislation more energetically to halt the illegal activity of the clerics."

Although it is too early to assess the impact of the Soviet retreat from Afghanistan, it is bound to have a profound psychological effect on Central Asia's Muslims. For them the lesson is that Islam can defeat the Red Army, that the Suffi can outwit the Commissar. It is always dangerous for an imperial power to lose a war. Last time that happened to Moscow was the Russian-Japanese war of 1994. We know what followed.

The rise of unrest around Russia's periphery has so far overshadowed a no less formidable nationalist challenge, that of the imperial nation itself: the Russians. True, Russian nationalism has been politically less overt and less organized, but it can count on not only a large constituency among the silent majority of the Russian people, but also considerable influence in the Soviet bureaucracy and military.

Russian nationalism has taken on the tormented, introspective tone of an imperial nation about to become a minority. Its spokesman have been writers such as Vladimir Soloukhin and Valentin Rasputin, their mouthpieces journals such as Maladaia Guardia and Nash Sovremenik. In these pages Russia is depicted as dying under the combined effects of modernization, secularization, and Westernization, all of which are associated with communism, especially in its reformist, Gorbachevite guise. Russian nationalists abhor the resulting threat to the traditional values embodied in the Russian village and the Orthodox Church. At the same time, some Russians resent the many "ungrateful" nationalities who have become part of the Soviet empire, and may profit from it, yet complain about it.

During the Brezhnev era the emphasis of Russian nationalists was primarily on cultural nationalism and the development of associations such as Pamiat (Memory) for the preservation of the environment, of historical monuments, etc. But under Gorbachev, Pamiat has taken an increasingly strong stance in defense of an allegedly threatened Russian identity. This means identifying more clearly the nature of the threat, namely the "Judeo-Masonic conspiracy." "There exists a powerful, determined, evil, and clandestine force for the purpose of the destruction of Russia," writes Vasilii Belov in his last novel, published in 1987. He then proceeds to expose the Masonic plot and provide a personal interpretation of The Protocols of the Elders of Zion. His book was published in 2.5 million copies. According to the nationalists, Gorbachev is a tool of the conspiracy; some of the leading "Gorbachevite" intellectuals are either Jewish (the playwright Mikhail Shatrov) or non-Russian (Abel Aganbegyan, the economic adviser, who is of Armenian descent).

The resurgence of right-wing Russian nationalism, with its traditional anti-Semitic and xenophobic component, is the byproduct of the collapse of Marxist ideology and the simultaneous shock of changes associated with Gorbachev. The introduction of perestroika and glasnost revived the 19th-century debate between the Slavophiles and the Westernizers. Contemporary nationalist essayists should be read in parallel with the most articulate of the great Russian Slavophiles, Dostoyevsky. In his 1881 essay "What is Asia to us?" he advocates that Russia turn inward, to the vast, unspoiled northeast: Siberia as the salvation of Russia. In contrast to this long-standing school stand Gorbachevites such as Alexander Yakovlev and even liberal dissidents such as Andrei Sakharov, who see all nationalisms as a threat to Soviet modernization and Westernization.

The issue of Russian nationalism has helped crystallize the two main coalitions in Soviet politics today. The anti-perestroika coalition consists of Russian nationalists and neo-Stalinists (only last month a letter in Pravda signed by Russian nationalists and Party conservatives criticized the excesses of glasnost). The pro-perestroika coalition consists of Gorbachevites (or neo-Leninists) and liberal intellectuals (such as Sakharov), both committed to a supranational ideology. However, the contest may ultimately be decided by a third party: the various other nationalist movements on the Soviet periphery, which often profess to support glasnost but in fact play into the hands of reactionaries by vividly illustrating its dangers.

Gorbachev is now squeezed between the simultaneous rise of two nationalisms; that of the Russians and that of their subjects. To make concesisons to the demands of either side is to strengthen both sides. And glasnost, an integral part of perestroika, ensures the growth of such demands. After four years in office, Gorbachev has discovered that the reform of the Soviet system and the stability of the Soviet empire are incompatible. Faced with that dilemma, he will doubtless be aware that (to paraphrase Churchill) he has not been appointed Soviet leader to preside over the liquidation of the empire.

CANDLES IN THE WIND

(By Liz Hasse)

TALLINN, ESTONIA.—"Estigeel, eestimaal, eestirahvas" (Estonian language, Estonian land, Estonian people) was the refrain. Everyone moved briskly and quietly in the direction of the singing. It was dark, and as we rounded the last curve of the cobblestone street, we saw thousands of Estonian faces lit by candle and torch light. The town square could not hold another soul, yet more and more Estonians arrived and folded into the crowd—mothers and young children, fathers carrying babies, couples, groups of teens—many dressed in blue, black, and white, the colors of the striped Estonian flag that here and there fluttered above the crowd.

The celebration was the culmination of Estonian language week. This gathering was not as big as that of the 300,000 supporters who had convened in September on Tallinn's festival grounds to celebrate the newly voiced support by Estonian leaders in the Communist Party for the Popular Front movement. Nonetheless, this demonstration resembled the larger one in many ways:

again, song was the expression; the mood, a spirited calm; sovereignty was again the theme—this time the emphasis was on preserving an Estonian language and cultural heritage. One of the speakers was Heins Valk, artist, political cartoonist, and Popular Front activist. Standing on the steps of Tallinn's 13th-century city hall, he reminded the group that theirs was a 5,000-year-old language, a 5,000-year-old culture." Anyone who kills a culture kills himself," he said.

Estonia, like its Baltic neighbors, Latvia and Lithuania, has been occupied by the Soviet Union since the notorious 1939 Hitler-Stalin (Ribbentrop-Molotov) pact. Its population was about 95 percent Estonian when it was "given" to the Soviets. Now the country is about 40 percent Russian, with some cities and industrial regions reaching 80 percent. The massive migration has been due both to the high standard of living here and the Soviet government's concerted efforts to make the most of the region's resources. Estonia has the largest phosphorus mines in all of the Soviet Union and extensive brown coal deposits. All this mineral wealth led the central government to build block after block of uniform, styleless concrete apartment buildings to entice Russians to move and work here. It was hard for me to believe that this massive development of dreary structures had such drawing power. But, I was told, because of the shortage of apartments in the central Soviet Union and the fact that those in Estonia are equipped with relatively modern fixtures, the migration continues.

Tallinn, the Estonian capital, is an example. The population is over 300,000. The center is a lovely, largely unaltered medieval city of narrow cobblestone streets, red-tiled roofs, and distinctive Gothic, Romanesque, and Eastern Orthodox spires. Beyond lies the port on the Finnish gulf. About 100,000 people live within and around the old city walls in medieval houses and studios, in Stalinesque columned buildings, in apartment buildings ranging from the plain to the stately. Just 20 minutes away by public transportation lies the Lasmanäe, where the other 200,000 inhabitants live in workers' apartment blocks built (and still being built) over the remnants of Estonian settlements that are thousands of years old. The apartment blocks stand uninterrupted—no grass, no parks. One food store services the entire 200,000.

MAJOR SOVIET PAPER SAYS 20 MILLION DIED AS VICTIMS OF STALIN

(By Bill Keller)

Moscow, February 3.—A Soviet weekly newspaper today published the most detailed accounting of Stalin's victims yet presented to a mass audience here, indicating that about 20 million died in labor camps, forced collectivization, famine and executions.

The estimates, by the historian Roy Medvedev, were printed in the weekly tabloid Argumenti i Fakti, a newspaper with a circulation of more than 20 million.

The estimated number of deaths is about equal to the number of Soviet soldiers and civilians believed killed in World War II.

Mr. Medvedev's grim arithmetic was reported in a less detailed version last November in Moscow News, a limited-circulation weekly, which sells about 200,000 copies in Russian, but today's article marked the first time the numbers have been disclosed to a nationwide audience.

In all, Mr. Medvedev calculated about 40 million victims of Stalin's repressions, including those arrested, driven from their land or blacklisted.

Although the bookkeeping of Stalin's terror is an inexact and contentious science, Mr. Medvedev's estimates are generally in line with Western calculations that have long been disparaged by more official Soviet historians.

"It's important that they published it, although the numbers themselves are horrible," Mr. Medvedev said in an interview tonight. "Those numbers include my father."

Mr. Medvedev, a dissident Marxist who has recently been rescued from official obscurity and honored as a leading authority on dark corners of Soviet history, said the weekly newspaper solicited the article and presumably showed the contents to officials before publishing it.

Mr. Medvedev said he had no special access to official archives, but relied on his own compilations of material over the years and recent publications in the Soviet press.

Under a headline proclaiming "The Number of Victims of Stalinism Is About 40 Million People," in a terse, question-and answer format, Mr. Medvedev cited the human cost of Stalin's leadership year by year, leaving it to the reader to complete the arithmetic.

Mr. Medevedev's accounting included these victims:

One million imprisoned or exiled from 1927 to 1929, falsely accused of being saboteurs or members of opposition parties.

Nine million to 11 million of the more prosperous peasants driven from their lands and another two million to three million arrested or exiled in the early 1930's campaign of forced farm collectivization. Many of these were believed to have been killed.

Six million to seven million killed in the punitive famine inflicted on peasants in 1932 and 1933.

One million exiled from Moscow and Leningrad in 1935 for belonging to families of former nobility, merchants, capitalists and officials.

About one million executed in the "great terror" of 1937-38, and another four million to six million sent to forced labor camps from which most, including Mr. Medvedev's father, did not return.

Two million to three million sent to camps for violating absurdly strict labor laws imposed in 1940.

At least 10 million to 12 million "repressed" in World War II, including millions of Soviet-Germans and other ethnic minorities forcibly relocated.

More than one million arrested on political grounds from 1946 to Stalin's death in 1953.

Mr. Medvedev acknowledged in Argumenti i Fakti, and repeated tonight, that many periods of repression will never be fully measured because records have been lost or never existed.

NIKOLAY BUKHARIN; EPISODES OF A POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY

(18020001m Moscow Kommunist in Russian No 13, Sep 88 (signed to press 25 Aug 88))

[Article by Gennadiy Arkadyevich Bordyugov, senior scientific associate, CPSU Central Committee Institute of Marxism-Leninism, candidate of historical sciences; and Vladimir Aleksandrovich Kozlov, head of sector at the same institute, candidate of historical sciences]

[Text] We are going through unforgettable times. Step by step, historical truth is being restored and justice is triumphing. Real possibilities have appeared now for the truly scientific, objective and comprehensive and, therefore, profoundly party-oriented study of the Soviet past and the restoration of our recollection of people who had been forgotten for so many years, but who had actively influenced the course of social development.

It so happened that when historians began to study the paradoxes and dramas of the prewar past, they turned to the "critical points" in the transitional period from capitalism to socialism and raised the question of alternatives in the historical development of the country, the personality of Nikolay Ivanovich Bukharin emerged literally from non-existence, as the figure of a political personality who was sentenced half a century ago and, it seemed, firmly forgotten. For decades his name was not included in referential works and encyclopedias and he himself appeared in research works only as a negative personage, as just about the "evil genius" in Soviet history. Such a surgical "extraction" of a noted party leader from the past (a fate which afflicted many other people) inevitably distorted the overall picture and scale of perception of a number of historical events and personalities.

In his time Stalin not only achieved the physical destruction of Bukharin but, as it seemed to many, deleted him from history forever. It is obvious now that this was a temporary victory. Once again in contemporary social awareness, as was the case 50 years ago, the two opposites of the end of the 1920s-1930s—Bukharin and Stalin—actively oppose each other. Discussions about these two personalities clearly depict today's political views held by the opponents and their assessments not only of the past but also of the present. Hiding behind these debates is, above all, a debate about the future, about what will socialism become tomorrow. What is important for the present, however, may be not simply to pit Stalin against Bukharin but to understand what it is that brought them together in the mid-1920s and what separated them by the turn of the 1930s. These problems affect not only the biographies of two major leaders of that time. Their study leads us to a fuller understanding of the destinies of the country and the people at crucial moments of prewar Soviet history.

What do we learn from Bukharin's bright and tragic life? One of the lessons is Bukharin's way of tackling problems of theoretical forecasting and theoretical study of crisis situations in the development of a society and the standard applied in solving them. Unlike Stalin, in this respect Bukharin went quite far. He was not only able to change his viewpoint at the turn of 1929, under the influence of the logic of life, but also tried to provide a theoretical assessment of this turn and to formulate the concept of further progress. Unfortunately, since the end of the 1920s he was deprived of the possibility to influence practical policy and his theoretical work was not properly considered in the political practices of the 1930s. Actually, it is only now that we are returning to the questions raised by Bukharin. The fact that in its time the party failed to make a critical analysis of the "revolution from above" led to the retention of the negative aspects of Stalin's policies throughout the 1930s, at a time when it was necessary to think about other, gentler, more flexible and more refined methods of social management and of normalizing the country's social life.

Since Stalin's time Bukharin had been accused of drifting into the path of factional struggle and the creation of an opposition. We see today that it was precisely that which he had not done but, conversely, that he had maximally restrained himself and his supporters. As a result of abandoning the struggle, however, and efforts to keep differences within the Politburo, without appealing to the party, the party mass, obviously the last opportunity of preserving the principles of collective management bequeathed by Lenin was lost. Underlining the problem of abandoning the struggle is also that of principle-mindedness in politics. In 1929 Bukharin realized that many of his ideas were unworkable and that he had to change his views under the influence of the logic of reality and not the pressure of opposing political forces. Realizing this, he took the position of the majority of the Central Committee on virtually all basic problems. His principle-mindedness in politics was manifested in the fact that he firmly stood on the grounds of Lenin's understanding of the main question from which, in the final account, developed the tragedy of the 1930s, that of "extraordinariness." On this score he was unbending. Bukharin did not violate his own principles because of a readiness to balance interests, coordinate positions and aspiration to remain in power. In this respect he understood to the end, regardless of the personal danger to which he exposed himself.

Bukharin's strong side as a political leader was his aspiration to a constructive approach, readiness constantly to update his theoretical arsenal and openness of the mind. Despite his defeat, he continued to interpret the contradictions in life and tried not to yield to politicking. Although we come across in his speeches echoes of the by then ordained praising of Stalin, their main content is found elsewhere: defense of the idea of normalizing social life and establishing legality in society, a humanistic criterion in evaluating reality and orientation toward cost accounting. To the very end, Bukharin sought the possibility of closely interacting with the majority of Central Committee members on a constructive basis, and work, in the ways accessible to him, for the good of the party and the people. It was precisely for this reason that the party and the Central Committee listened to his views. The mark of Bukharin's ideas can be clearly seen in the resolutions passed during the first half of the 1930s.

Nonetheless, characteristic of Bukharin's positions was a peculiar theoretical impatience. He proclaimed the results of his work all too rapidly and frequently failed to think them through. He found dialectical analysis difficult as well as exceeding the framework of the established system of concepts, evaluations and programs, as was the case with the "classical" NEP and the elaboration of political decisions in 1925. However, whenever he reassessed his former positions, he did this on a principled and truly profound basis.

Bukharin was one of the party leaders of the end of the 1920s and beginning of the 1930s to whom the concept of morality and legality had not a pragmatic but a profound human sense. It was precisely this stance that became the political counterbalance to Stalinist "extraordinariness." In 1929 Bukharin was defending not only his own views but also the right of the collective party authorities to criticize and analyze all aspects of social reality, without "dead areas," and "nonpersons." He realized that if the fault for the difficulties was shifted to the people who were outside the party—the class enemies, saboteurs or unconscious people, or the opposition within the party itself—and if the subjective errors of the authorities were ascribed in full to the class struggle, such a partial, halfway indication of the reasons for errors and difficulties would make it impossible to learn lessons from them, to make the necessary corrections on policies and that the halfway nature of admissions would result in a dangerous inconsistency of decisions.

Bukharin, with all his qualities and shortcomings and unquestionable merits and major errors, belongs to the history of our party and our state. His theoretical legacy covers the broadest possible range of problems. It demands a reinterpretation in the light of the experience acquired by the party in recent decades. This would enable us to include everything that is truly valuable, that has withstood the test of time, in our scientific and political arsenal. The study of Bukharin's legacy must be objective, truthful and critical, i.e., as it was bequeathed by Lenin to the present generations of communists.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair for his courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO addressed the Chair.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the honorable Senator yield for one last point 1 minute.

Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. If I can go on, I meant to say one other thing, Mr. President.

In the aftermath of this change of the Soviet regime there is one fundamental message to send to the rest of the world as they contemplate their attitudes toward the United States and the Soviet Union. As they commence that old pattern of seeing whether if they flirted with the Soviet Union they might find attention and concern from our part would they, would they please commence to understand this simple proposition. The United States has not only a different relationship with the Soviet Union, but with those nations who would make themselves clients of the Soviet Union. They may wish to avail themselves of Soviet aid, and all we can say is, We are sorry but we do not have to care any more.

I thank the Chair, and I thank my distinguished friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from New York, Mr. D'AMATO.

JAPANESE FSX FIGHTER

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, when are we ever going to learn to look out for our own—America's—interests in dealing with our trading partners, particularly those for whose protection the American taxpayer pays?

Congress may soon have to consider an agreement between American and Japanese companies to develop the so called FSX plane, a version of our F-16.

In this proposed deal, the Japanese—typically—want it all—and our State and Defense Departments—again, all too typically—appear willing to give it to them.

An American company, General Dynamics, has signed a leasing agreement with Mitsubishi of Japan to develop the FSX. The Japanese will be provided the F-16 technology developed at a cost to United States taxpayers of roughly $7 billion. In return, the American company will get subcontracting work for about $440 million, plus some royalties amounting at the most to about $120 million. General Dynamics may get to do some further production work, and possibly get some technology back from Japan; but this is not guaranteed in the agreement, so even these small gains are far from certain.

We are told that Japanese development of their own version of the F-16 will help ease the burden on the American taxpayer of defending the Pacific rim. The truth is just the opposite.

If this deal goes through, the Japanese will get, at low cost, the benefit of technology that cost this Nation's taxpayers $7 billion and be free to use it to develop not only a competing airplane but to expand a competing aviation industry, while all the time the United States continues to bear the full burden of providing for Japan's national security.

The veil of burden-sharing becomes even thinner, Mr. President, when you consider that planes purchased directly "off the shelf" from the United States are available to help meet Japan's defense needs now. A Japanese-developed FSX is unlikely to be ready for almost 5 years, during which, of course, we would still be providing their defense. It is clear that Japan is in no hurry to get "rubber on the runway" now.

The Japanese will pay three times as much to develop their own planes as it would cost to buy them from America.

They could buy these 140 planes for a cost of approximately $3 billion and it will cost as much as $9 billion to develop the FSX.

Is this the kind of "free trade" that the Japanese would have us support? American consumers have been free to buy fuel-efficient, high-performing Japanese cars, and fine Japanese electronics goods—and have been buying them, making Japan the economic wonder of the world. And yet, when a cheaper, high performance American plane is available now, they will not buy it. Is that free trade?

While more and more of America's workers and production capacity become idle; while Japan is running a current annual trade surplus with the United States in excess of $55 billion; while America provides, as it has for 43 years, for Japan's freedom and security, the Japanese are willing to pay a 300-percent premium to avoid buying American and to worsen the atrocious trade imbalance.

Mr. President, that is not cost effective. It is not fair. It simply is not right.

If Japan wants to increase its level of self-defense spending significantly that would be progress. But the Japanese are not willing to do that, Mr. President, because they are smart—apparently a lot smarter than we are. As long as we shoulder their defense burden, Japan is able to apply a much greater proportion of its gross national product toward research, development, and support of its economic dominance.

If the Japanese are really into burden-sharing, then why not purchase the F-16's and do it now to help pick up some of that burden now, instead of leaving the full burden on us while they develop a competing industry?

I might take this opportunity to note, Mr. President, that it is not unique with the Japanese. They did this in the area of fiber optics. Not too long ago, they rejected American companies' bids to help build the national fiber optic system that they put out to bid and accepted Japanese companies at a premium of 300 percent. Deja vu once again. And when they overdeveloped that capacity in terms of fiber optics as it related to their own internal needs, what did they do? They flooded the market, the world market. They dumped. Mr. President, we should learn.

During the confirmation hearings of Secretary of State Baker and Secretary-designate of Defense Tower, Secretary Baker promised to look into it and Mr. Tower admitted he has "some apprehension" about the deal. I sure hope so.

I am pleased that the administration has indicated it will review this transaction before sending it to the Congress, with input from the Commerce Department and Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, not just from the Defense and State Department. I hope this will be a complete review, Mr. President, and not just a charade to placate those pointing out the emperor's lack of clothing in this matter.

Without such a review, the new administration will bear its share of the blame for this bad, lopsided deal.

Mr. President, any review must begin and end with the same question: Is this arrangement in our best interest, in our mutual best interest? I do not believe it is in our interest or that of the Japanese.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator yield for a brief statement and a question?

Mr. D'AMATO. Certainly.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I ask for 2 minutes so that we might continue this exchange?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection, the time of the Senator from New York, Senator D'AMATO, is extended for 2 minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I would like to thank my colleague for his statement, which was unusual in the sense—and the Senate might wish to know this—that, as far as I am aware, the F-16, the fighter aircraft, is not in any way produced anywhere near the State of New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. That is correct.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. And you are speaking to a national interest and in no sense a parochial one and you spoke very well.

I would note that fiber optics was invented and developed at Corning in New York State, and you are very absolutely dead right in what you just said.

Question: Will the Congress have a chance to review the decision? The Federal Government itself must make the decision, is that not so? Will we have a chance to review it?

Mr. D'AMATO. We will have an opportunity upon notification, official notification, to submit a resolution in opposition if the administration chooses to go forward. As a matter of fact, on February 2, 15 Senators—and I will ask unanimous consent to have this letter printed in the RECORD—ask the President directly to take at least 60 days to review this matter before there is a final decision.

But we do have 30 days under the Arms Export Control Act by which to raise a resolution. I would intend to do exactly that and I know that the Senator shares that sentiment.

I hope it does not come down to that. I hope it would come down to our sitting down with the Japanese and saying, "Here is $3 billion worth of purchases that you can make over a period of time saving yourself $6 billion, helping our balance of trade deficit, doing what is right, doing what is correct, and not continuing business as usual."

But I think this administration should be held accountable for this program. I really believe that the Congress has to let the administration know just how strongly we feel about this matter.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator and would like to share his sentiment.

Mr. D'AMATO. I thank my colleague from New York.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD—and it is worthwhile reading—an editorial which appeared on December 17, 1988, entitled "The Losing Fighter Deal With Japan"—this article appeared in the New York Times—along with the letter which we sent to the President on February 2, 1989.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 17, 1988]

THE LOSING FIGHTER DEAL WITH JAPAN

An American negotiating team trying to sell F-16 fighters to Japan was defeated last month and is now in Tokyo to receive its second humiliation.

Japan wants to buy 140 new fighter planes. General Dynamics makes the world's best fighter, the F-16, in numbers that assure unmatchable economy. Furthermore, by buying American, Japan could reduce the trade surplus that so aggravates its major trading partner and help alleviate the burden America bears in defending, among other countries, Japan.

Surely in this case, Japan will buy American, no? No. Japan prefers to develop the FSX, loosely patterned on the F-16, at more than twice the cost. In an agreement signed last month in Tokyo by the retiring Ambassador, Mike Mansfield, General Dynamics has been designated a subcontractor, with a promise of 35 to 45 percent of the development work. In gratitude, the company will hand over all the necessary F-16 technology.

Has the Defense Department given away the store? Its negotiators worked harder than it looks. At first the Japanese insisted on developing a wholly new fighter. The Pentagon finally induced Japan to base the plane on the F-16. New technology developed for the FSX will be made available to the U.S., for military though not commercial use.

Still, the deal is one-sided and unfair. Japan shuts out American companies when it wishes to develop a new industry. Japan's insistence on developing the FSX may not relate to its effort to build up its aviation industry. Even so, the rejection of a superior American product seems familiar, and unfair.

Japan argues that defense is in a special category, and it is quite true that many countries like to build their own major weapons systems. But Japan and Amercia have a special relationship. They are major trading partners; America shoulders the heavier part of their mutual defense, spending 6.5 percent of its gross national product on defense compared with Japan's 1 percent. The resources America diverts to defense have a lot to do with the trade imbalance that so benefits Japan.

The Defense Department, having agreed that Japan will develop most of the FSX, has now sent a team to Tokyo to plead for a share of the production contract. Agreeing to that seems the least Japan could do.

In the case of the F-16, the United States had every reason to expect that Japan would want to buy American, and every reason to be disappointed at the grudging concessions Japan has made to the two countries' common interests.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, February 2, 1989.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are writing in regard to the proposed sale of U.S. F-16 fighter technology to the Japanese for incorporation into their FSX aircraft. There are complex issues involved in this program, including defense burden-sharing and the larger question of its long-term impact on the health and competitiveness of the American aerospace industry, the only high technology area in which the United States remains the undisputed world leader.

It is this latter question that we believe in particular has been ignored in the FSX negotiations, which have been conducted by the Departments of State and Defense to the exclusion of USTR and the Department of Commerce. Executive Branch proponents of the FSX deal cite it as the model for the future. However, before the United States goes a step further down this road, we think that the FSX program should be fully considered by all cognizant Cabinet departments and that all relevant issues should be thoroughly reviewed.

Therefore, in the spirit of the bipartisanship in foreign policy and the close consultation with the Congress that you proposed in your inaugural address, we are requesting that you order a complete review of the FSX program within the Administration, including the Departments of Commerce, Labor, and Energy, as well as the Office of the Trade Representative and the White House Science Office. We hope that your Administration will refrain from any further commitments on the FSX until that review has been completed and the Congress has been fully consulted.

We realize that during the upcoming visit of Japanese Prime Minister Takeshita, there will be intense pressure from the Japanese, and perhaps from those within DoD and State who negotiated the FSX deal, to give the full commitment of the President to the program. However, to do so without a full assessment of the program's long-term impact would not be in the best interests of the United States.

It is our hope that the proposed review will establish guidelines for programs like the FSX which may be considered in the future and that all concerned Executive Branch agencies will be included both in internal Administration discussions and in negotiations with foreign governments from the very inception of consideration of a proposed program.

We would like to thank you for your consideration of this critical issue and we look forward to receiving your reply.

Sincerely,

Jeff Bingaman, Alan J. Dixon, Wendell H. Ford, Alfonse D'Amato, Jesse Helms, Frank H. Murkowski, Albert Gore, Jr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska, Mr. MURKOWSKI, is recognized.

FSX FIGHTER NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I have two matters.

First of all, on behalf of my colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, I would like to join in the spirit of his statement. I am one who is on that particular letter to the State Department with regard to the development of an aircraft that Japan anticipates as the next generation of aircraft that would be equal or surpassing our F-16.

I think it important to note that this is not to be construed by any means as an effort to so-called bash our good friends. It is simply a matter of a business proposal that needs the examination of the Congress. Because the Senator from New York is quite correct when he says that the taxpayer has some $7 billion in the technology that the Japanese are prepared to pay about $440 million for. It does not take a very astute businessman to recognize that we can negotiate a position that is in our best interest from the standpoint of having the assurances that we are going to participate in various production capabilities of that aircraft prior to making the deal, Mr. President, as opposed to afterward. We have no negotiation power afterward. We have no leverage afterward.

But it is clearly an opportunity for the Congress to remind the State Department that there are ways of negotiating positions. The Japanese have seen fit to negotiate participations with various United States aircraft companies, such as Boeing. When Japan Air Lines wants to make a large purchase, often segments of the aircraft are manufactured in Japan. This is good business.

But to advance this technology, Mr. President, without mandating a position for U.S. manufacturers, I think needs to be examined and it is most appropriate. As a consequence, I am pleased to go on the communique.

But I do not want to be misunderstood. It is simply a matter of communicating our business sensitivities to our friends in Japan, that we, too, feel we should participate in this advanced technology.

(The remarks of Mr. MURKOWSKI pertaining to the introduction of legislation are found in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

RESTORING THE CAPITAL GAINS TAX BREAK

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this Thursday evening, when President Bush addresses a joint session of Congress, many of us are going to be listening with great interest for more than a vague statement of the new administration's budgetary views. We are going to be looking for a detailed expression of the President's fiscal priorities.

I say that because a budget is more than an accounting sheet. A budget is a blueprint of a nation's values.

On Thursday, we are going to be listening intently for a candid, realistic assessment of the dimensions of this country's deficit problems.

But just as importantly, we are going to be looking closely at the disposition of benefits and responsibilities in the President's budget message. We will be looking for where the financial resources will be concentrated and where the financial burdens will fall.

In short, we are going to be looking at this President's first budget proposal in terms of the simple question of equity.

It's with that question in mind Mr. President that I want to urge President Bush not to come before the Congress on Thursday night with a proposal for reducing the tax on capital gains from 28 percent to 15 percent.

At a time when virtually every segment of our country is being asked to sustain a sacrifice of one form or another—whether you call them taxes or user fees, whether you call them program cuts or program freezes it is simply unacceptable to be considering tax breaks for the very wealthiest segment of the American population.

At a time when the country is divided by a sometimes bitter debate about whether we should seek increased taxes to deal with our pressing deficit problems, there is a measure of irony in a proposal that would cut taxes for the most privileged among us.

Now Mr. President, we can argue about whether a capital gains tax reduction is a revenue loser or a revenue raiser. The President can trot out his analysts, and those of us who oppose the capital gains break can trot out ours.

We can argue about whether such a tax cut promotes investment and growth or whether it simply stimulates unproductive shelters and counterproductive speculation of which we have heard too much of late. Once again, it is a case of you wheel out your experts and I will wheel out mine.

I submit that much about this debate is simply moot. Even presuming the administration carefully limits the kind of capital gains that would get special treatment, there is still considerable skepticism about the impact of such an action on the Treasury and on the economy as a whole.

Using highly doubtful revenue from a tax cut to offset additional tax break proposals for oil and gas exploration only compounds the deficit uncertainties just as it compounds the questions about equity.

Equity, in my judgment, is the crux of this question. And I submit that, on that point alone, the issue is clear. No matter how sharply defined, a reduction in the capital gains tax would be a windfall for that class of taxpayers who have benefited most from the failed tax policies of the Reagan years.

According to a March 1988 Congressional Budget Office study the top one-tenth of 1 percent of taxpayers—with $1 million or more in annual gross income—accounted for more than 20 percent in net long-term capital gains in 1984. Individuals with incomes above $100,000 in adjusted gross income accounted for more than 40 percent of all capital gains.

What is happening on the other end of the spectrum? Americans with incomes between zero and $20,000 accounted for less than 10 percent of all capital gains.

The conclusion is obvious. A capital gains tax cut is not equitable. It is a return to the kind of trickle-down sophistry that was decisively discredited when the supply-side experiment failed earlier in this decade.

Perhaps worst of all, a capital gains tax cut is a direct violation of the promise of the 1986 tax reform bill which was passed by this body under the firm conviction that we were closing the loopholes and eliminating the tax shelters in return for a reduction in the upper level tax brackets.

In short, reinstating the capital gains differential is a very bad idea. There could not be a worse moment for it than during this first, indepth message to the American people and the Congress by the new President.

Mr. President, I said at the outset that a budget is a blueprint of a nation's values and principles.

That is what makes the President's address Thursday so important.

If, in that address, President Bush establishes reducing the capital gains tax as a cornerstone of his budgetary philosophy, he is sending a message of potential disregard for the deficit crisis.

And he is sending a message that we will once again tolerate manipulation, and inequity in our Tax Code. And he is sending a message that we are going to continue to accept policies that favor the privileged in this country—that favor the economic elite over the working men and women of this Nation.

I hope, Mr. President, that the United States will not make the first halting step down the long and difficult road ahead; that we must all travel together by advancing what is generally considered to be an inequitable tax that benefits only the wealthy elite of this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has yielded the floor.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

HAS THE PLO RENOUNCED TERRORISM?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in one of his first acts on Middle East policy as Secretary of State, James Baker successfully prevented an attempt by the Palestinian Liberation Organization to secure passage by the United Nations Security Council of a resolution harshly critical of Israel.

As reported in the New York Times of February 2, passage of this resolution would have been unprecedented. I will ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PLO resolution would have been the first Security Council resolution condemning Israel's handling of the uprising in its territories without also calling for restraint by Palestinians. U.S. acceptance of this resolution would have also sent a clear signal to the members of the United Nations that the Bush administration would sanction the use of the Security Council for indiscriminate bashing of those anti-Communist countries most commonly subject to U.N. condemnation.

Mr. President, fortunately, Secretary Baker saw to it that this resolution was derailed. For this, the Secretary deserves commendation. I hope he will continue along this line, and appreciate the PLO for what it truly is: a terrorist organization interested not in peace, but rather dedicated to the ultimate destruction of Israel, the displacement of American influence in the Middle East and the spread of radical, Marxist ideology throughout the world.

Yasser Arafat and the PLO simply cannot—nor should not—be trusted. President Reagan stated many times that the Palestine Liberation Organization is one of the world's most notorious terrorist operations. He is absolutely right.

Former Secretary of State Shultz stated that there is "convincing evidence that Yasser Arafat knows of, condones, and lends support to terror against Americans." He, too, is absolutely correct.

And the fact remains, Mr. President, that the United States simply cannot expect to wage an effective war against terrorism by negotiating with terrorists like those of the PLO.

The PLO has been responsible for the deaths of literally dozens of totally innocent Americans. And I find it hard to believe that they are serious about their commitment to forswear terrorism.

In fact, the PLO has made statements in the past which have been heralded as renunciations of terror. But of course, terrorism just continued after these pronouncements. Arafat provided the Western media with pledges of peace and flexibility, only to continue a campaign of terror aimed at innocent civilians.

A most striking illustration of Arafat's skillful attempts at duplicity is contained in a speech he gave in Cairo on November 7, 1985, following talks with President Mubarak. After declaring the Palestinians' right to their own independent state, and after calling for an international conference for peace in the Middle East—including the Soviet Union and the PLO—Arafat pledged:

> In an attempt to give momentum to the ongoing efforts to convene an international peace conference, the PLO announces its condemnation and denunciation of all acts of terrorism involving countries or carried out by individuals or groups against innocent and defenseless people anywhere. The PLO reiterates its 1974 decision condemning operations conducted abroad and all forms of terrorism. It reaffirms that all its factions and institutions abide by this decision. The PLO will henceforth take all possible measures to deter violators.

This statement was in 1985. Since this "denunciation of all acts of terrorism," the PLO has carried out numerous terrorist operations. Many of these operations were targeted against American citizens. According to a compilation prepared by my staff from published news and other reports, the PLO has killed at least four innocent Americans, and has otherwise victimized many others since Arafat's 1985 renunciation of terrorism.

On April 2, 1986, four Americans were killed and five Americans were wounded when a bomb exploded aboard a TWA flight going from Rome to Athens. It is widely suspected that this bomb was planted by the "Hawari group," otherwise known as the Special Operations Group of Fatah's Central Security and Intelligence Apparatus. The Fatah—according the recent report of the Vice President's Task Force on Combating Terrorism, is chaired by Yasser Arafat.

This "Hawari group," according to the State Department, controls terrorist cells in the Middle East, Western Europe, and the Eastern bloc. (Department of State; Office of the Ambassador at Large for Counterterrorism; October 31, 1988; Fact Sheet: The Hawari Group, pg 1).

Explosives belonging to Arafat's "Hawari group" have been discovered in Belgium, Morocco, and Paris. The Ha'wari group also planted a bomb in a car belonging to the United States Embassy in Lisbon on February 18, 1986. ("Terrorist Acts by Selected PLO Groups Since the Cairo Declaration" compiled by CRS from a variety of U.S. sources).

In October 1986, a handgrenade was thrown near the Western Wall in Jerusalem, injuring an American. According to a Washington Times article of October 16, 1986, a PLO representative claimed responsibility saying that "the decision to escalate operations inside Israel was taken by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat."

Other PLO terrorist activities since the "Cairo Declaration" have been undertaken by Force 17, which is an elite, highly professional terror group. It also functions as an intelligence operation for Arafat. They both have claimed the murders and woundings of many innocent people, both in and out of Israel.

In a ruthlessness difficult to imagine, Force 17 carried out the cold-blooded assassination of a famous Palestinian cartoonist in London on July 22, 1987. The cartoonist evidently did not exhibit sufficient loyalty to Arafat, and was killed for it.

Force 17 is especially active in Israel, where it targets innocent civilians. In fact, over just 2 years—1986-88—this terrorist operation killed 8 people and wounded 36 people. (State Dept. Fact Sheet: Fatah's Force 17)

Of great concern to all Americans should be the PLO's recent attempt on the life of Secretary of State Shultz. In March 1988, the PLO planted a car bomb. The bomb was planted outside the Jerusalem hotel at which the Secretary was staying. Fortunately, this PLO terrorist attack was foiled.

Mr. President, all of these PLO terrorist activities took place after Arafat's Cairo declaration denouncing terrorism. In fact, early last month the Vice President's Task Force on Combatting Terrorism officially confirmed Arafat's propensity for ignoring previous pledges to refrain from terrorism. According to the report of this task force:

> In an effort to improve Fatah's image with the United States and the West, Arafat decided to limit the employment of terrorist operations to Israel, Lebanon, and the occupied territories. The Fatah has not always adhered to this pledge. * * *

Mr. President, what should concern Americans is that Arafat's failure to abide by past pledges to refrain from terrorism appears not to be the result of any accident, but rather from a calculated plan to deceive the Western world.

My colleagues may well be advised to review Red Horizons, a book written by Lt. Gen. Ion Pecepa, former chief of the Romanian secret service and trusted aide to Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu. In this book, General Pecepa recounts conversations between Arafat and Ceausescu in which Arafat admits that he takes on the role of a moderate or pacifist from time to time in order to placate the West and bait the State Department.

This charade apparently includes arranging for more radical Palestinian groups—actually under PLO control—to attack Arafat for his moderation. As a chief Arafat aide, Hani Hassan, told General Pecepa:

> We want to mount some spectacular operations against the PLO, making it look as if they had been organized by Palestinian extremist groups that accuse the Chairman (Arafat) of becoming too conciliatory and moderate . . . [t]he Chairman is now really hooked on influence. It won't be long before I'll be able to create a positive image for him in the West.

Mr. President, what reason do we have to believe that Arafat will abide by his newest pledge to refrain from terrorism? Very little. He has flouted past pledges to refrain from terrorism and has carried out a deliberate campaign to deceive Americans. He will no doubt flout the pledges he was instructed to make by the State Department.

In fact, just last month, Arafat announced over the radio that: "Whoever thinks of stopping the inifadah before it achieves its goals, I will give him 10 bullets in the chest." Within hours, the mayor of Bethlehem dropped his proposal for a cease fire in the territories.

Mr. President, terrorism is fed by the belief that tangible political objectives can be achieved through sustained campaigns of violence against innocent men, women, and children.

To the extent that the State Department conducts negotiations with PLO terrorists without proof that the PLO and all its factions have forsworn terrorism in theory and practice, our Government's efforts to prevent and combat international terrorism are severely compromised.

Arafat's propensity for issuing pledges he totally intends to ignore requires that before talks proceed any further with the PLO, the State Department should insist that Arafat's latest pledge to renounce terrorism be ratified formally by his organization and carried out in practice.

I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article to which I earlier referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BAKER'S DECISION-MAKING PROCESS: AN EARLY TEST FROM THE PLO

(By Thomas L. Friedman)

WASHINGTON, February 1.—On his first day of work last week, Secretary of State James A. Baker 3d found himself faced with conflicting advice from within the State Department on how to vote on a draft United Nations statement slightly critical of Israel. Administration officials say the new Secretary decided on a firm stand against the proposed document, prompting its sponsors, Palestinians and nonaligned nations, to withdraw it for now.

While the officials cautioned against reading too much into the Baker decision, which had the approval of President Bush, they noted that it seemed to indicate certain basic attitudes that will guide the new Administration in its approach both to the United Nations and the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The proposed Security Council statement was viewed by the State Department as a test inspired by the Palestine Liberation Organization. They said the P.L.O. wanted to see whether, in light of the contacts with Washington begun in December, the Bush Administration would support a declaration that was harshly critical of Israel's treatment of Palestinian demonstrators in the occupied territories while failing to call for restraint by Palestinians.

"Bush and Baker were sending out two messages," a senior State Department official said. "They were telling the P.L.O. not to have any illusions that there has been a dramatic shift in America's approach to the Arab-Israeli conflict, simply because we have begun a dialogue, and they were sending a message to the United Nations that this Administration does not want to see the Security Council debased as a club for beating this or that country over the head every Monday, Wednesday and Friday."

The maneuvering over the statement began on Jan. 18, when the P.L.O. proposed that a declaration be issued by the Security Council president, Ismail Razali of Malaysia, condemning Israel's handling of the Palestinian uprising. Security Council presidential statements are frequently used to express the sentiment of members, but unlike resolutions they are not binding. According to United Nations regulations, only member states are formally allowed to introduce such motions. Since the P.L.O. did not qualify, the seven nonaligned nations on the council agreed to sponsor their own draft.

AT FIRST, A STRONG INDICTMENT

The initial version put forward by the nonaligned group included what State Department officials described as very harsh language: references to Israel's "killing and wounding of innocent civilians including children," identification of the West Bank and Jerusalem as "Palestinian territory," and an assessment that Israel's treatment of the Palestinians was having "serious consequences on the prospects of achieving a settlement."

The United States informed the nonaligned nations that it would oppose such a statement. After further consultations, the group came back on Jan. 23 with a new version, consisting of somewhat toned-down language. But this too was rejected by the State Department as unacceptable.

On Jan. 25, the nonaligned group produced still another draft, with even more muted language, urging "all parties to recognize the need for mutual understanding and respect as a contribution toward the peace process."

At this point, a difference of opinion developed within the State Department. The Assistant Secretary for International Organizations, Richard S. Williamson, insisted that the statement call on all sides for "mutual restraint" and not just "mutual understanding," on the ground that this has been the United States position and even the slightest shift in language could be subject to misinterpretation at this moment of transition.

The Bush Administration's choice as United Nations delegate, Thomas R. Pickering, also advised Secretary Baker not to give in on the language.

REGIONAL SPECIALISTS' VIEW

The Bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, which oversees relations between Washington and the Arab states and Israel, argued that it would make more sense to accept the revised draft.

The Near East bureau, headed by an acting Assistant Secretary, Paul Hare reasoned that the language did not really constitute a condemnation of Israel and that if it were adopted, it would be quickly forgotten. It expressed concern that Washington's opposition might prompt the nonaligned nations to turn the statement into a formal Security Council resolution, which would then require a United States veto to kill it, "giving the whole problem much more visibility and the P.L.O. a bigger soapbox to stand on," a State Department official said.

The conflicting positions were forwarded in writing to Secretary of State Baker last Thursday, his first full day on the job. Administration officials said Mr. Baker concluded that the language being proposed in the final draft was still "unbalanced" and that the alternative phrasing the State Department had demanded should have been acceptable to all sides. When he informed President Bush of this position, the President gave his support, a senior State Department official said.

On Monday, Mr. Baker instructed the United States Mission to hold firm and insist on a reference to "mutual restraint." The nonaligned nations decided that they were not ready to compromise any further. On Tuesday night they announced that they were halting their efforts, for the time being, to get the statement adopted.

"We considered the draft relatively mild and never thought that there would be any opposition from the Administration," said the P.L.O.'s United Nations spokesman, Riyad H. Mansour.

YEAR OF THE SAC WARRIOR, 1989

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Strategic Air Command is a vital component of our military forces and is charged with deterring nuclear war as well as assisting in conventional military operations.

Each day, the men and women of SAC execute their mission in a highly commendable manner. As the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Subcommittee on Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence, I have personally witnessed this on numerous occasions. My home State of Nebraska also proudly serves as the headquarters for SAC.

Many Americans take peace for granted and view it as the normal order of life, as indeed it should be. Unfortunately, there are many others around the world who do not share this view and, given the opportunity, would do harm to our Nation and our way of life. We must always be on guard against this threat.

Deterring war, however, is a complex challenge. Measuring success through the absence of something, in this case nuclear war, is not something everyone can easily understand or appreciate. Furthermore, our success in maintaining deterrence is in the eye of the ones we seek to deter. It is they who must be dissuaded from making an aggressive act. Thus, Americans who look at this situation can easily disagree among themselves as to what is needed to deter.

Regardless of our differences on what types of weapons to buy or how many to buy, all Americans should be united in one thing. That is in paying tribute to the men and women of SAC who work so hard, make such great sacrifice, and remain committed to maintaining the deterrent which protects this great land.

The men and women of SAC are warriors committed to maintaining the peace. Their commander, Gen. Jack Chain, one of our most gifted military leaders and my good friend, has declared the year 1989 to be the "Year of the SAC Warrior." At his request, I ask that an article entitled "1989—The Year of the SAC Warrior," be printed in the RECORD so that all Americans may better understand the important mission of the Strategic Air Command.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Combat Crew magazine, January 1989]

1989—YEAR OF THE SAC WARRIOR

(By Gen. John T. Chain, Jr., Commander in Chief, Strategic Air Command)

Warriors know they must always be prepared to go to war—at a moment's notice. They realize keeping an edge on their warfighting skills during peacetime is more important with today's advanced technology than ever before. Each of the over 130,000 people in Strategic Air Command is a warrior. From the cook to the aircraft commander, from the secretary to the security policeman, SAC warriors take pride in being the best and in being ready.

I have declared 1989 as the "Year of the SAC Warrior." This year we will celebrate our warrior heritage and engage in activities designed to instill a deeper appreciation for warrior ideals. These activities will recognize the service and commitment of all SAC warriors, expand the knowledge of our warrior heritage, promote interaction between past and present SAC warriors, and examine avenues for expanding SAC's warfighting capabilities.

SAC warriors have been tasked with an awesome responsibility. Maintaining both strategic deterrence and conventional readiness engenders a sense of pride and a sobering sense of duty. We must squeeze all the combat capability from our weapons systems that we can. We must prepare for war, fight if necessary, and above all, win if war is thrust upon us. Our mission carries with it the ultimate trust of our nation.

Historically we have proven that we are worthy of this trust. Our warrior heritage extends back to the days when strategic bombing was first shown to be a viable tactic. It continued through World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to the present. SAC warriors who served before us chose their professions willingly and served this nation with pride. Likewise, SAC warriors on duty today stand tall, because of pride in their mission and because of pride in their heritage.

PEACE AND RELIEF IN THE SUDAN

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, for many months newspapers around the world have carried the story of the extraordinary tragedy that has besieged the people of southern Sudan. The haunting images of masses of starving people have once again filled our television screens.

Certainly, famine is no stranger to the Sudan. But in this case, unlike the great famine of 1984–85, the shortages are not due to natural disaster, but are man made. This time food shortages are primarily the result of the ongoing civil war in southern Sudan. Elements in southern Sudan—from Sudanese military officers and local militias to the rebel Sudanese Peoples Liberation Army [SPLA]—have sought to block food convoys, have fired upon airborne relief supplies, and have prevented the passage of food barges on the Nile.

Mr. President, Secretary of State James Baker today issued an important statement which underscores the interests of the United States in peace and relief in beleaguered Sudan. The Secretary states that the sad reality is that starvation will almost certainly not end until the fighting ends and calls upon authorities at all levels on both sides to do everything possible to provide emergency relief to victims caught in garrison towns and other areas of the war zone.

Secretary Baker's statement is most timely. In December, the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs sent a special study mission to the Horn of Africa specifically to look into questions of peace and relief in the Sudan. What the mission witnessed, Mr. President, was a tragedy of tremendous proportions requiring the urgent attention of Congress and the new administration, as well as the international community at large.

A recent article by Ambassador Frances M. Deng describes the recent tragic chain of events in his country in terms which no other report has to date. Mr. Deng, a former Sudanese Ambassador to the United States, notes the need to work for peace with a sense of urgency. He eloquently cautions us that we cannot afford to be silent or equivocal about a tragedy of such magnitude.

Mr. President, I am heartened by the Secretary's most helpful statement. As Ambassador Deng has so poignantly stated, "It is not the dead who suffer, it is those who cause their death and those who watch them die." And I am hopeful that the Secretary's remarks can be the beginning of major new diplomatic and humanitarian initiatives by the United States and the international community—that we will not just watch the people of southern Sudan die.

It is time we engaged the world community regarding the Sudanese tragedy, talk frankly with our friends in Sudan about the steps which must be taken, and redouble our efforts to get the urgently needed relief into both Government-held and rebel-held areas of the South. And the Secretary's statement lays the basis for such initiatives.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary's statement, along with Ambassador Deng's important article, be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 1989.

STATEMENT ON PEACE AND RELIEF IN SUDAN

The United States Government remains profoundly concerned about massive human suffering in Sudan. The cause is the civil war, now in its sixth year. Most of the war's victims are civilians who are displaced and impoverished or who starve to death for lack of delivery of available food. The death toll from starvation in 1988 alone is estimated to range in the hundreds of thousands.

Many Sudanese and expatriates are laboring tirelessly to ensure food deliveries, and the cooperation with these efforts by both the Sudanese Government and the Sudanese Peoples' Liberation Army (SPLA) has improved in recent months. But much more needs to be done. We call on authorities at all levels on both sides to remove remaining obstacles and do everything possible to provide emergency relief to victims caught in garrison towns and other areas of the war zone. Failure to do so will mean that thousands more will die in the coming rainy season. The United States will do all it can to support this effort. We call on other donors also to undertake or expand relief efforts.

The sad reality, however, is that starvation will almost certainly not end until the fighting ends. As friends of Sudan we urge the Sudanese Government and the SPLA to put peace first and to agree to an early ceasefire which would promote that goal and allow relief to reach those in need.

JAMES A. BAKER III,
Secretary of State.

IN SUDAN, MASSES DIE AS REBELS, GOVERNMENT USE FOOD AS A WEAPON

(By Francis M. Deng)

WASHINGTON.—No one whose conscience is alive can be insensitive to the current news of the tragic war raging in the Sudan between the government and the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Movement. Although labels tend to oversimplify a complex configuration, the war is essentially a continuation and an intensification of a chronic conflict that has intermittently raged for more than three decades between the dominant Arab Muslim north and the African Christian and so-called animist south.

Particularly shocking from a moral standpoint is the way food has been used as a weapon by both sides. The rebels prevent relief from reaching southern towns under government control, on the grounds that relief supplies would be used for the army, may provide a cover for weapons and would attract people to the towns. The government prevents food from reaching the areas held by the rebels for reasons of sovereignty and pride and also to deplete what they regard as the popular base of support for the guerrilla movement.

Whatever the justification of the respective positions of the parties, their policies and actions have left the starving people of the south in a vacuum of moral leadership, unprotected and uncared for. For Sudanese, the reaction must be one of embarrassment and shame, if not outright indignation and outrage, at the plight of masses of men, women and children silently dying.

For me the tragedy is also personal. I come from Abyei, the Ngok Dinka area which—though geographically, racially and culturally part of the southern complex—has for historical reasons been administered as part of Kordofan in the north. It is an area which, under the leadership of my family, dating back to the pre-colonial period, has played a bridging role between the Arab tribes to the north and the Dinka tribes to the south. My father, the late Chief Deng Majok, whose exceptional contribution has been nationally acknowledged, used to describe himself as the needle and thread that bound the two parts of the country together. Since my father's death in 1969, I have invested a great deal of effort in continuing this challenging family tradition. Today, Abyei has been spotlighted in the international news media as a symbol of the tragedy and the inhumanity that has so sharply divided our country.

As the war intensified, most of the indigenous population of Abyei fled to the north in search of security. Other Dinkas from further south moved into the area, hoping for relief. What they found instead was the deadly weapon of deliberate starvation. According to U.N. sources, deaths in Abyei averaged 150 a day last June. By November, 8,000 had starved to death. Virtually no children under 2 years old were left alive. What agony it would cause my father to witness what has become of the peaceful haven he had so skillfully constructed.

Much of the destruction in rural areas does not come directly from the warring factions, but from the southern and northern tribal militias, the so-called "friendly forces" that are recruited, trained, armed and supported to help fight the war against the rebels. And since the Dinka are recognized as the main source of recruitment and support for the rebel movement—partly because they are the majority in the south and presumably because John Garang, the leader of the movement, is a Dinka—the tribal militias have been unleashed against them.

There have been documented accounts of women and children being captured and taken away in bondage to labor for their captors in the north or be exchanged or ransomed for cash. Destitute parents have been known to give their children away for little or no reward in the desperate hope that the children will at least survive and lead a better life.

The extreme factionalization of national identity and the degree to which it has affected moral standards can explain the suffering inflicted upon innocent civilians by the withholding of food. In 1988 alone, as many as 260,000 people may have fallen victim to this deadly unconventional weapon.

But there is more to the human cost of war than starvation. The displacement is so intense that in some areas communities have been decimated, shattered and obliterated as cohesive social entities. Close to half a million southern Sudanese refugees, most of them Dinka, are reported to have fled into neighboring Ethiopia. An estimated 2 million have moved to the north, where they live under appalling social conditions and physical insecurity. In March, 1987, allegedly in retaliation for attacks by the rebels against Arab militias, more than 1,000 Dinkas were massacred by Arabs in the town of El Daien, as authorities watched approvingly or helplessly. About a million southerners have been turned into squatters, rimming the outskirts of Khartoum, living under conditions of severe deprivation and degradation. Although the Dinka number several million in population, some people are beginning to wonder about their long-term survival as a people.

There are also costs for the nation other than the loss of lives. Although economic stagnation and deterioration in most African countries is usually attributed to bad policies, the chronic conflict in the Sudan largely explains why a country of such immense natural wealth—in land, livestock, minerals and oil reserves—has remained one of the poorest in the world. The war costs the government an estimated $1 million a day which, for a country with an external debt of $12 billion and in desperate need of essential commodities, the Sudan certainly cannot afford.

The people of the Sudan yearn for peace. Its leaders have consistently voiced their commitment to a peaceful resolution of the conflict. And yet peace has continued to elude the country for reasons that are partly obvious and partly mysterious.

Most of the contested issues are recognized as meriting consideration. They include problems of national identity—how to manage the Arab-African dualism of the nation—and the need for regional equity in the sharing of power and national wealth. But the most divisive is the issue of religion and the controversial September (Islamic) Laws, decreed in 1983 by former President Jaffar Nimeiri. Some argue that Islam does not separate religion and the state, and insist on maintaining Nimeiri's laws or enacting some other form of Islamic laws. Some favor secularism. Even the north is divided on the issue. But while Muslim secularists are loath to voice their position openly for fear of public opinion, southerners are unequivocally opposed to an Islamic state that is bound to discriminate on religious grounds. Indeed, the stated goal of SPLM's liberation struggle is the creation of "a new Sudan," free of all vestiges of racial, tribal, religious and other forms of discrimination.

What the Sudan needs is a creative and constructive solution that would remove the divisive issues from the national debate and give the regions full control over their own affairs while enabling them to participate in national power and economic processes on equitable bases. Inequities may not be easy to eradicate by the stroke of the pen, but fundamental principles and ground rules can be laid down to guide action toward the creation of a just and equitable society.

While we and our friends must all work for peace with a sense of urgency, the international community should spare no time or effort in bringing immediate relief to the starving masses. To be silent or equivocal about a human tragedy of such magnitude would not only add an international dimension to the national vaccum of moral leadership but would indeed be a shortsighted diplomatic miscalculation. To quote words I used some 16 years ago under similar but less tragic cirumstances, "It is not the dead who suffer, it is those who cause their death and those who watch them die."

SIEMANS IN LIBYA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, Chancellor Kohl's Chief of Staff is meeting with Members of the Senate today. I hope that Senators are informing him of our concern for the recent actions by the German industrial firm Siemans, in Libya.

In mid-January 1989 the Belgian police arrested Mr. Jozef Gedopt, the owner of the Antwerp transport firm Cross Link. Mr. Gedopt is "assisting the police with their inquiries" into the Libyan poison gas plant at Rabta. Since he was the transporter for much of the equipment for the Rabta plant, he had all the shipping documents and an excellent seat from which to know what was going on.

According to the January 23 issue of Der Spiegel, Mr. Gedopt reports that on the 16th of December 1986, the freighter Roundini sailed from Antwerp. Onboard was 9,561 kilograms—21,034 pounds or 10.5 tons—of Siemans products. The Siemans products were labeled the "Teleperm M System" and ordered for Hong Kong. The real destination of the shipment was Tripoli, the capital of Libya. The equipment shipped on the Roundini was "measuring and controlling instruments for the automation of a chemical plant."

This was not the only Siemans shipment to Libya. According to the January 26 issue of Der Stern, in the summer of 1988, after complaints by the American, British, and Israeli officials, Siemans delivered more electrical control panels and computers worth about $500,000, including six "field multiplexers."

The purpose of the two shipments is clear. These are the critical elements to control the chemicals and operate the poison gas plant. Der Stern comments:

> These are measuring devices with which the inflow of chemicals is electronically controlled and monitored. The strange thing is that exactly six of such measuring devices are needed for the production of the nerve poison Tabun, which is made of six chemicals.

In early January of this year Colonel Qadhafi invited a busload of journalists to the Rabta plant. However, they were not permitted within a mile and a half of the actual plant. What they did see at the plant was a shipping container labeled "Siemans." At the same time Siemans claimed that the container was a "mobile telephone container" or "mattresses for construction workers" or a container from another construction project which was being recycled.

If Der Stern and Der Spiegel are correct, the facts are established: The wrong Siemans equipment got to the wrong place. The question then becomes one of culpability: What did Siemans know and when did it know it?

Der Stern claims access to a document showing Siemans met with managers and engineers of the Imhausen-Chemie firm and its subsidiary on February 12, 1986, to discuss the "Teleperm M System." Der Spiegel claims Siemans "met with leading staff members of Imhausen-Chemie—its subsidiary—time and again for talks and demonstrations."

Der Spiegel also claims a curious lack of precision in Siemans' shipping documents. First the customer was listed as a firm in Hong Kong, then Gedopt's firm in Antwerp, finally, the Imhausen subsidiary.

Siemans denies culpability. They claim they were duped by the Imhausen firm. They claim they just sold the equipment, did not install it and thought it all went to Hong Kong.

That, however, is not how major international construction projects are handled. The Libyan project manager of an important project like this, knowing his life is on the line if the project does not perform as specified, is extremely unlikely to have purchased 10½ tons of sophisticated electronics equipment without installation by the seller. This is particularly true in a low-technology, Third World country like Libya. The Soviets, it will be remembered, demanded and got Toshiba engineers to install the famous propeller milling machines in Leningrad.

Der Stern believes that the equipment was installed by engineers from the Imhausen subsidiary. That too, is unlikely, given the complexity of this equipment operating in harsh desert conditions. Imhausen would not have taken the chance of failure and would have demanded supervision by Siemans personnel.

It is also worth noting that a chemical plant is not a fungible item. Each plant is a special order. The suppliers of such vital equipment would have to know their function.

If Siemans engineers designed and installed the equipment, it is pretty hard to claim they thought it was for a pharmaceutical plant in Hong Kong.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the translations of two articles from Der Stern and Der Spiegel be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Der Stern, Jan. 26, 1989]

STERN ON FEDERAL COMPANIES' DELIVERIES TO LIBYA

[Report by Karl Guenther Barth, Karl-Ludwig Guensche, and Thomas Osterkorn: "Not the Slightest Evidence"].

[Excerpts] Even though the FRG Government knew about the participation by the federally owned Salzgitter AG and by Siemens in the construction of the poison gas plant in Libya, it delayed investigations for weeks.

The finance minister played the matter down at a news conference. Gerhard Stoltenberg considered the assurances of the federally owned Salzgitter AG that its subsidiary "Salzgitter Industriebau GmbH" (SIG) is not involved in the construction of the poison gas plant in Al-Rabitah in Libya "conclusive." The company has "never had the slightest evidence" of involvement in Libya.

At the same time, when Stoltenberg played down the involvement of the state company on Monday last week [16 January], the SIG was severely incriminated: A manager of Imbausen—Chemie revealed his knowledge as a witness at the Offenburg public prosecutor's office. According to him, not only pipelines and electronic parts for the "Pharma 150" Imhausen project were drawn on the SIG drawing boards but a complete chemical plant. This would also explain why SIG filled more than 200 looseleaf binders with drawings and received about DM8 million for this.

The Imhausen employee told Chief Public Prosecutor Werner Both in Offenburg that SIG was given the order in 1984. The plans were delivered in 1986. Imhausen and SIG, however, cooperated until the most recent past, because details had to be continually changed, for instance after test runs in the chemical plant. For this purpose, there were several meetings—sometimes in Lahr, sometimes in Salzgitter. At these meetings it was always an "open secret" that the ominous "Pharma 150" was not on the other side of the globe in Hong Kong, as the SIG order book said, but only 3 to 4 hours away by plane—in Libya.

The Imhausen witness said that the SIG experts also knew that the factory was not a pharmaceutical plant but a large chemical facility able to produce highly toxic substances, such as combat agents. Imhausen gave precise requirements to the SIG planners, according to which pipes and valves had to be extremely resistant to acid and heat—because of the temperatures in the desert.

Imhausen also told the SIG people exactly how wide the pipes and how strong the pressure reactors for the chemical mixtures would have to be. Another piece of circumstantial evidence that SIG knew what was going on: The plans do not bear the usual author's designation.

Chief Public Prosecutor Botz sent the explosive witness' statement to the Bonn Finance Ministry via FAX and, since the investigation is classified as a "criminal matter with the obligation to report," also to the Justice Ministry in Stuttgart.

In the Finance Ministry all reports landed on the desk of Dr. Hahn. That was it—time enough for companies to invest excuses or to remove incriminating material, as did Imhausen.

The Preussag company siad that it "only" delivered "water recycling facilities to Gharyan" valued at of DM15.5 million. According to documents that are available to STERN, these facilities from Preussag, its Darmstadt branch enterprise, were definitely addressed to the "Tripoli Technology Center" in Al-Rabitah. According to findings of the U.S. secret intelligence service, the CIA, a military-industrial complex for the production of bombs and grenades is being built there.

The Preussag documents even show that the company knew about the construction of a chemical plant. Item 15 of the offer for the order is a "Pharma pump station" for DM240,770. This station supplies the chemical plant, which is being built under the cover name of "Pharma 150," with water.

The electrical multinational company Siemens was also not short of excuses after 200 journalists had discovered and photographed a container labeled "Siemens" during a visit to the factory complex in Al-Rabitah. It must have been a "mobile telephone container" or "mattresses for construction workers," the company headquarters said.

What Siemens really delivered to Libya is proved by numerous documents that are available to STERN: At 1000 on 12 February 1986 in Karlsruhe, Siemens salesman Preuss, Department E 815, received managers Eugne Lang and Ruediger Berndt of Imhausen—Chemie in Lahr, and engineers of the Imhausen subsidiary "Society for Automation" (GfA) from Bochum. The reason for the visit: "Presentation of the Teleperm M system." This computer-controlled facility makes it possible to run a chemical plant completely automatically.

The people from Imhausen were obviously satisfied. On 16 December 1986, the cargo ship "Roubini II" left the port of Antwerp. According to the freight documents, the cargo included the "Teleperm M system" from Siemens, weighing 9.561 kg and costing DM2.5 million, according to the attached bill. Officially, the delivery was addressed to the "Pen Tsao Material Medica" company in Hong Kong, for which—a perfect camouflage—Imhausen is building a chemical plant under the name of "Pharma 150," too. However, the ship's papers clearly show that the Siemens computers landed in Libya. Port of designation: Tripoli.

Previously, Siemens had inquired at the "Federal Office for Industry and Trade" in Eschborn, Hessen, whether they need permission to export such a facility. The Office did not ask where the control system was sent and which purpose it would serve. On 12 May 1986, it issued a "negative certification" for "Teleperm M and spare parts especially constructed for it."

The certification was valid for 1 year. However, in summer 1988—that is, more than 2 years later—Siemens delivered more electrical control panels and computers worth DM887,581 for "Pharma 150," including six "field multiplexers." These are measuring devices with which the inflow of chemicals is electronically controlled and monitored. The strange thing is that exactly six of such measuring devices are needed for the production of the nerve poison Tabun, which is made of six chemicals.

According to witnesses' reports, the Siemens facility was set up and put into operation in Al-Rabitah in Libya by engineers of the Imhausen subsidiary GFA. [passage omitted].

[From Der Spiegel, Jan. 23, 1989]

DER SPIEGEL EXAMINES EXPORT OF WEAPONS

[Unattributed report: "Doing Business With the Misery of Others?"].

[Excerpt] [Passage omitted] The Federal Republic is an export nation. It exports television sets, printing machinery, and computers—fabulous. But German exporters also offer other good quality products: tanks and guns, missiles and submarines, militarily usable nuclear technology and chemical factories. If not before, certainly since Krupp's "Big Bertha", German military products have a frighteningly good reputation throughout the world.

Thus the Federal Republic is not just a world champion in exports as such. It also is one of the leading traders of death, arms producers, and military profiteers. German military gear is in demand, and its industry can supply—it always has death on sale.

Among the sellers of the murderous hardware, the Federal Republic holds a remarkable fifth place. Of course, the superpowers take the lead, and of course, war-tested nations like France and Britain are also present wherever people are killed. The quantity of weapons exported is astounding for a country whose fathers of the Constitution did not want arms to be produced in Germany again.

According to statistics of the Swedish peace research institute SIPRI, German military hardware worth $1.4 billion was exported in 1987. However, this sum only covers a minor part of the war materiel that was really exported.

The Federal Economics Office granted export permits worth more than DM28.4 billion in the same year. According to these permits, German firms were permitted to sell military goods in a broader sense (arms, ammunition, trucks) worth DM6.3 billion abroad, and "other strategic goods" (computers, machine-tools) worth DM19.4 billion, as well as goods of the nuclear energy industry worth DM2.7 billion. Thus the export of military gear to 157 countries in the world accounts for 5.4 percent of German total exports.

Not everything has been supplied overtly. Tanks and helicopters are shipped to crisis areas by roundabout ways, blueprints for military gear and military-technical facilities are covered up, experts and trainers convey their knowledge discreetly. A lot of hypocrisy is involved, a lot of pretended naivete, a lot of secret approval of allegedly harmless deals.

Turning-lathes for Iran? Why not. Nobody asks what for. A pharmaceutical plant for Hong Kong? Of course. Nobody wants to know where the blueprints go.

Just as some people in Bonn get used to the facts of the Imhausen case only hesitantly, part of industry also receives the truth only reluctantly. When arms and weapons exports are at stake, the facts are obscured and covered up, and many people just pretend they do not know.

Some recent examples clearly demonstrate the way this is done. The most obvious and most gross case: the reconstruction of Libyan fighter aircraft with the help of German firms.

Less than 70 km from the site of the controversial chemical plant at Al-Rabitah, German engineers have for 3 years been busy converting Libyan Air Force "Hercules" transport planes as well as a Boeing 707 into flying gasoline stations. They also reconstruct Libyan "Mirages" and MiG 23's for the same purpose; the fighter aircraft will then be able to fly to Israel and back.

The engineers have come via the Intec firm with its place of business in Grasbrunn, near Munich, which has a technical office in Vaterstetten. Intec chief Eberhard Moehring personally hired the specialists and arranged for them to go to Libya. Intec reconstructed the jets, procured aircraft parts and equipment, and placed orders.

In contrast, Ingo Moehring, the son of owner Eberhard, claims that the company has "nothing to do" with the construction of aircraft in Libya. He says that Intec is doing business "with screws."

That is a slight understatement. On 12 February last year, not only the name of Intec Technical Trade and Logistics GmbH was changed into Intec-CTTL [Consulting Technical Trade and Logistics GmbH]. The purpose of business was also reformulated: Since then, it has included "the development of aircraft systems, aircraft components, as well as maintenance, repair, and modification of aircraft."

Staff for Libya was hired by an Intec company in Liechtenstein. As they were told in writing, they flew via Zurich where they had an opportunity "to open a giro account with Schweizerische Kreditanstalt." For continuing their flight to Islamic Libya, "taking alcohol was strictly prohibited." The company chief is not the only one trying to play down his performance for sabrerattling dictator Al-Qadhdhafi. Early last week, Bonn's government spokesman Friedhelm Ost defended Intec. He said that the equipment suppled can only be used for "refuelling on the ground." A video film obtained by DER SPIEGEL proves clearly how Libyan Mirages and MiG 23's try to refuel in flight.

The Imhausen case has already shown how secretly and how hypocritically German entrepreneurs act when they are doing business with dubious partners such as Al-Qadhdhafi. Even the Federal Government has realized now that with German help Al-Qadhdhafi obviously intends to construct a poison gas plant—Pharma 150—in Al-Rabitah. But everyone pretends they did not know about it—including even Juergen Hippenstiel-Imhausen, the chief of the firm organizing it all.

However, they must have known how hot the deal was. That is proved by the careful way in which the false track was laid. In Lahr, Hippenstiel had informed just a handful of his closest aides about the dual business. In Hong Kong, a plant is being built which is also called Pharma 150 and apparently serves to conceal the Libyan project.

Other companies that are involved in the Al-Rabitah project with supplies were by no means as harmless as they would like to appear. Suddenly well-known firms such as Siemens, Preussag, or Salzgitter see themselves publicly exposed. They only supplied insignificant parts for a harmless plant, did they not? Poison gas? Never heard about it.

Preussag AG (turnover DM10.4 billion, 29,000 employed) says that it supplied a drinking water processing plant for the Libyan town of Garian, 5 km from the chemical plant in Al-Rabitah.

However, the Preussag offer of 31 January 1987 is by no means intended for the town of Garian. It is clearly intended for the Tripoli Technology Center. The alleged Technology Center, located between Tripoli and Garian, including the adjacent war gas plant, is a pure arms complex. Could the suppliers know? Did they want to know that at all?

The government-owned Salzgitter AG also claims that it was totally unsuspecting. A witness has said that on the Al-Rabitah construction site, people worked according to plans of Salzgitter Industriebau GmbH (SIG), a subsidiary of Salzgitter AG (37,000 employed, turnover DM9.9 billion). The witness is Horst Koerbler, former manager of the IBI company which carried out the project for Imhausen.

In fact, SIG received an order by Imhausen worth DM8 billion. The Salzgitter concern says that these are partial plans for a pharmaceutical plant in Hong Kong. Libya had never been mentioned, the concern says.

Since Koerbler's testimony became known, the Salzgitter people have been nervous. SIG manager Andreas Boehm had talks with concern chief Ernst Pieper every day. The auditors of the concern appeared repeatedly at "Waldhaus," the company seat of SIG in Salzgitter-Druette, to search the Pharma files.

The company management declared solemnly that everything was closely examined, but the word Libya had never come to light. The auditors protectively removed all documents, about 200 files, and the staff was enjoined to be silent.

New rumors emerged about the order which kept about 45 SIG staff members busy for 2 years. Long before Koerbler made his testimony, the staff talked about the "plant for the Libyans." The staff also knew that the site is 3 and ½ flight hours away from Zurich.

A SIG engineer recalls that in the beginning, the company management was trying hard to keep the customer and the site secret. All relevant indications on the photocopies of the plans were covered.

Later, the SIG staff member says, the address of Pen Tsao in Hong Kong was given. The man claims that on the basis of joint meetings with Imhausen, sometimes in Lahr, sometimes in Druette, it gradually dawned on him that the real site is in Libya.

Just rumors? The concern management never even heard about these rumors.

Siemens (359,000 employed, turnover DM51 billion) has furnished additional proof of the alleged credulity of German managers. When the United States intensified pressure, Al-Qadhdhafi invited a busload of journalists to visit Al-Rabitah. A lonesome container with a clearly visible label, Siemens, got into the focus of television cameras.

The "telephone booth in the desert" (Frankfurter Allgemeine) made the headlines. Siemens assumed publicly that this must be a mobile telephone container. Later, the company said that the vehicle was a material container going from one construction site to the next, as is customary in such countries. Anyway, Siemens said, the concern has nothing to do with the Libyan chemical plant.

As we know today, this statement is in fact wrong. Siemens supplied "measuring and controlling instruments for the automation of a chemical plant" worth roughly DM2.5 million to the Imhausen subsidiary company, Gesellschaft fuer Automation (GfA), in Bochum. The official destination: Hong Kong.

The Belgian firm Cross Link, a company of carrier Jozef Gedopt, who has meanwhile been arrested, notified IBI of a shipment of freighter "Roubini" on 16 December 1986. What was also on board were 9,561 kg of Siemens products, the "Teleperm M System" ordered for Hong Kong. According to an additional cable of 18 December, the destination of the freighter was Tripoli.

Siemens continued supplying more material; its correspondence with GfA dates until the end of last year. The company asserts that all supplies were intended for Hong Kong.

But the data given in the documents were increasingly imprecise. Originally the customer was Pen Tsao in Hong Kong, then it was Gedopt J.G. Trading in Antwerp, then it was Imhausen's GfA. The original address finally developed into an ambiguous "Marking: Pen Tsao." The responsible Siemens people had more than enough opportunities to request clarification of such mysteries. They met with leading staff members of Imhausen Chemie and GfA time and again for talks and demonstrations.

How unsuspecting can a manager be, before he becomes an accomplice in criminal productions? Hippie Hippenstiel is not the first one to pretend that he did not hear or see anything, when dubious facilities are at issue.

For example, the German construction firm WTB Walter Thosti Boswau built an industrial complex of three large factories in Iraq, near Baghdad. The Cologne Infraplan company hired suppliers for "Project 9230."

The customer for the industrial complex in Falludscha [spelling of name as published] was the Iraqi State Establishment for Pesticide Production (SEPP), a department in the Industrial Ministry, which also built the Samarra industrial complex north of Baghdad. According to the findings of U.S. intelligence services, four different types of poison gas were produced in Samarra last year.

One of the subcontractors who wanted to know what the Iraqi factories were supposed to produce, was told that the supplies were intended for a detergent factory.

It would have been the best guarded detergent factory in the world. A barbed-wire fence about 2.50 m high surrounds the entire complex which is about 1 km long and 600 m wide. The vacant ground on the other side of the fence and every point of the factory site can be seen from watchtowers. At night, the guards can check the ground with remote-controlled headlights.

What is really produced in Falludscha, was indicated by a WTB man who was asked about the purpose of the giant underground tanks on the site: "Detergents for two-legged flies are stored there," the construction man said.

German firms are pushing their way to the front not only regarding the construction of facilities, but also regarding everything that forms part of chemical warfare. During the Gulf war, the Kaufbeuren entrepreneur Anton Eyerle, a former NPD [National Party of Germany] politician, supplied equipment for mobile toxicological laboratories to Iraq.

The vehicles came from Magirus Deutz. A chemical engineer of Karl Kolb GmbH, which according to U.S. reports helped set up a poison gas plant in Samarra, Iraq, helped install the laboratories. Bundeswehr experts visited the fully equipped laboratories.

Were they "laboratories for agricultural chemistry," as the suppliers claimed? Or vehicles for military use? The Darmstadt public prosecution did not even bother to start investigations. As a public prosecutor said, only firms exporting facilities for the production of chemical or biological weapons are of interest.

Nor were there any objections in March last year when the Eschborn Chemical Marketing and Machinery Agency ordered 19 tonnes of Dichlorethane from the Merck chemical concern. The material is used for the production of synthetics, but it can also be used for the production of mustard gas or yellow cross.

Following the reports on Imhausen, the firm Merck and the public prosecution suddenly showed an interest in the Eschborn firm. But the owner, a Libyan, has disappeared.

It is always the same game. Deliveries are quick, but controls are hesitant and liberal. Anything can be sold, if it is properly packed.

It is too easy to overcome the barriers to war gear and military equipment. Export permits are granted under the Foreign Trade and Payments Law. In an "export list" those goods are detailed which can only be exported with the approval of the Federal Economics Institute in Eschborn: Weapons, nuclear technical and chemical facilities, as well as computer technology. The Federal Government puts this list of goods together on the basis of the Cocom list by which 16 Western countries intend to prevent the export of military goods and technology into the East Bloc.

The personnel situation of the Federal Economics Institute alone prevents the employees of this institute from carrying out detailed checks. Every year, some 75,000 applications for export permits are received. Seventy people are available to deal with them.

The Foreign Trade and Payments Law gives clear instructions about the way the work has to be done. The authors of the commentary on the law write that "in case of doubt," the provisions must be interpreted "for the freedom principle"—for industry.

The Eschborn people can hardly prevent exports of so-called dual-use goods, meaning goods that can be used for military as well as civilian purposes. Formerly, it was said that they only have to be approved if "they are specially designed for military purposes."

That was, for instance, not the case when Gildemeister AG in Bielefeld supplied several hundred automatic machine-tools to the Soviet Union years ago. The then economics minister, Otto Graf Lambsdorff, said that "with such a lathe you can produce fountain pens as well as cartridge cases." However, because the machines were not "specially designed" for arms production, the export did not require a permit.

Now the provision is more tightly formulated: If a product is "suitable" for military use, an export permit is required.

Nothing can be supplied to crisis areas. However, it is easy to bypass this regulation: The goods are first supplied to a NATO partner.

Where they go from there, can hardly be checked. In December 1984, the firm Dynamit Nobel AG in Troisdorf shipped millions of igniting charges to Belgium which were sent to Iranian weapons factories via firms in Sweden and Greece.

Some firms take the direct way. They do not bother to apply for a permit in Eschborn, but ship their goods directly to the receiver. The Gelnhausen Neue Technologien GmbH and Co KG supplied parts of the production of fuel elements, furnaces for melting uranium, and a tritium plant to Pakistan which thus obtained nuclear weapons technology.

The Swiss weekly WELTWOCHE was wondering: "God knows how Iraq got those 20-mm air-cannons of Oerlikon-Buehrle, which are mounted in Baghdad in BO-105 helicopters." The cannons which were used in the Gulf war were made in Switzerland. The helicopters were produced by Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm (MBB). God knows how they got to Iraq: from a MBB subsidiary in Spain.

German war gear everywhere, always according to the motto: If we do not supply, others will. In the Gulf war, German helicopters were in the air, Mercedes trucks on the battlefield, grenades exploded which the firm Fritz Werner Ausruestungen GmbH had helped produce. In Nicaragua the rightist Contras use automatic rifles of the firm Heckler and Koch. In the Falklands war, "Exocet" rockets with German technology hit British ships [passage omitted].

DEATH OF BARBARA TUCHMAN

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, it was with profound sadness that I learned of the death Monday of one of America's greatest historians and a dear friend of mine, Barbara Tuchman.

Mrs. Tuchman was best known for her work "The Guns of August," a study of the beginnings of World War I for which she won a Pulitzer Prize. The book traced the missteps and diplomatic errors which resulted in the calamitous war. President John F. Kennedy was said to have considered the book an important lesson about the need for caution in the nuclear age.

Mrs. Tuchman won another Pulitzer for the biography of Gen. Joseph W. Stillwell, "Stillwell and the American Experience in China, 1911-45." In a half-century of writing she published a total of 11 books, her most recent of which, "The First Salute," is on best seller lists today.

This most eminent writer always believed that history must be accessible to all, and wrote with an exciting style that we all could appreciate. Mrs. Tuchman strove not to fashion dry academic tomes, but rather to create lively and absorbing books. She was proud that she had never earned an advanced degree, feeling that such degrees could compromise her ability to write for the general public.

Persons of her great concern and insight are rare, indeed. Our Nation lost a great thinker this week with the death of Barbara Tuchman.

DEATH OF VERNON M. METCALFE

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, it is with a deep sense of sadness that I rise today to mark the death of Vernon M. Metcalfe.

Vern was a well-known personality in Alaska. Born in Wenatchee, WA, he moved to Juneau in 1941. After serving in the U.S. Army during World War II, he joined his father in the sheet metal business. But Vern's love of people soon had him working in the communications field. He was best known as a radio announcer for high school and gold medal tournament basketball games. Vern was inducted into the Gold Medal Hall of Fame by the Juneau Lions Club in 1987.

Vern served two terms in the Alaska Territorial Legislature and served under Gov. Bill Egan as Alaska's first director of civil defense.

Vern was a member of the Juneau Alaska Native Brotherhood Camp No. 2 and a member of the Pioneers of Alaska. He was adopted into the Coho/Raven Clan and given an honored Tlingit name which translated into English means "voice of the raven."

Vern was preceded in death by his wife Patricia in July 1983. His survivors include his children Peter, Kathleen, James, John, Kimberly, Heather and foster daughter Laurie Otto, all of Juneau; Mark of Santa Barbara, CA; Vernon M., Jr., of Hollis, AK, and Patrice Parker, of Anchorage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that articles honoring Vern Metcalfe which appeared in the Ketchikan Daily News and the Juneau Empire be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I want to extend my deepest sympathies to Vern's family and many friends. I know he will live in their hearts always.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VERN METCALFE

(By Lew M. Williams, Jr.)

Funeral services were held in Juneau Monday for Vern Metcalfe, 65, whose byline appeared occasionally on the editorial pages of this newspaper.

Metcalfe died in Juneau the previous Wedneday after a half-dozen years fighting heart disease.

It's our opinion that he gave too much of his heart to others and just ran out.

When this writer first met him shortly after World War II, both of us were veterans planning to save the home front after saving the world.

Vern began working in his dad's sheet metal business. This writer ran his parents' newspaper in Wrangell. Vern found tin bending too confining. He had strong opinions on how he thought the territory of Alaska should be run. It featured a concern for people regardless of race, something not universally popular in Alaska in the 1940s and '50s.

With his strong opinions and his writing and speaking ability, it was natural for Vern to leave the tin shop and go into newspaper and radio. He worked for several Juneau radio stations and newspapers and wrote columns and letters for the rest of us. He is most famous in radio for broadcasting basketball, especially the Gold Medal Tournament, although he covered other sports and news. His columns and stories were unique in that most featured people, not dry statistics.

He was a strong proponent of statehood. He wan't bashful about telling business and pressure groups that they had a responsibility to pay taxes to support public services. It is said he was the biggest community booster outside of the chamber of commerce. He was a practicing Democrat all of his life.

His opinions were definite, no waffling. He respected those who disagreed. He wasn't vindictive. It was impossible for anyone to be vindictive toward him.

He served two terms in the territorial legislature. He ran unsuccessfully several other times. When Alaska was a terrritory, Southeast was one election district. Candidates campaigned throughout the Panhandle. As the result of that and his writing and broadcasting, he knew people throughout Southeast. In after years, he capitalized on that to write some moving articles on well known Alaskans.

Dollarwise, he probably left the world with little more than he brought with him. (We've always said that the successful person is the one whose hearse runs out of gas as it arrives at the cemetery.) But Vern left much, much more to everyone with whom he came in contact. He impressed on us that it's not only proper but an obligation to express an opinion (that got us started in column writing), to listen to others and to be concerned for people and our community. He proved we can do that without being vindictive.

He and his wife Pat, who died in 1983, successfully raised nine children in a world where successfully raising two to four is challenging enough for most—a real measure of the man.

VERN METCALFE

There won't ever be another Vern Metcalfe. A purveyor of local history, philosophy and other bits of wisdom, his death Wednesday has left a huge, cold gap where once there was a warm spot in this community's heart.

Why? Because Vern was, well, himself. Whether you were a long-time resident or just off the jet from down south, he was friendly, open and helpful. And he wouldn't forget your name. A month or a year later, he would greet you on the street with a cheerful wave, calling out your name.

I met Vern through his wife, Pat, who worked for years as a typesetter at the Empire. (The truth be known, she was more than a typesetter, having provided valuable factual and grammatical "help" to more than a few young reporters'—and editors'—copy).

He would periodically wander through the newsroom on his way to see Pat in the production department downstairs, dropping off a few newsy tidbits and a letter to the editor—or two—often accompanied by the happy chatter for which he was renown at the old City Cafe and other gathering places.

As a letter writer, Vern was in his element. He did not beat around the bush on any topic. He presented his opinion up front, and if anyone disagreed, well, that wasn't his problem. More than once, he took the Empire and its editor to task for one transgression or another. On the rare occasions that I disagreed with him, I still respected his opinions, which were always based on the facts and never negative.

In a very real sense he was a walking almanac of Juneau and Southeast Alaska. I've not met anyone before or since who knew more about people than he.

This knowledge proved invaluable on numerous occasions. One was the tragic afternoon of April 17, 1979, when Juneau police officers Jim Kennedy and Rick Adair were shot to death by a mentally ill man named Louis Sorensen, who then killed himself. As our reporters began to piece together the story for the "extra" we would publish about the shooting, we had to figure out who Sorensen was—where he had worked and other information. At that point, little was known other than his name and address.

Vern wandered through the newsroom on one of his trips to the production department to see his wife and one of our reporters asked if he knew who Sorensen was. Not only did he know who he was, he knew where the man worked and just about everything except his Social Security number. Given a few minutes, he probably could have come up with that, too.

In short, he helped save the day for us by allowing us to do a better job of informing the public.

That wasn't the only time we referred to his encyclopedic knowledge of Southeast Alaska and Juneau. Just last year, he covered the Gold Medal Basketball Tournament for us. But he did it with the Metcalfe flair. He wrote the only basketball stories I've ever seen with no scores. I had to get them from the stat sheets and insert them in his stories, which focused on the lives and times of every basketball player—and virtually every spectator.

But there was a method to what he was doing. By concentrating on the tournament as an event instead of a series of basketball games, he told our readers in a very human way how the Gold Medal is a combined reunion and celebration of Southeast Alaska.

He also had his quirks. One of them was slamming the newsroom door when he left. Not in an ill-tempered way, he just slammed it, probably to make sure he had our attention. Invariably, after dropping off a letter, he would stride out the door and WHAM! fling it closed. It got so we would all wince at once in anticipation of each slam. When we moved to our Channel Drive building and no longer had a newsroom door, we joked that we should build a special one just for him to slam.

One of the many very touching things he did for people was volunteer to write a fitting farewell for pioneers he knew who had died. Those pieces were examples of the rich, textured fabric he could weave from a person's life. And they always had just the right "touch." To this day, they are some of the finest examples of his writing.

I don't know if this column is up to his level, but I hope it will suffice.

The many people who counted Vern Metcalfe as a friend will miss him dearly. Sincere condolences go to his family and friends.

STUDY ON TERRORIST GROUPS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, during the congressional recess, we suffered yet another horrible act of international terrorism—the attack on Pan Am flight 103. That terrible tragedy points up once again that we have no greater international priority than eliminating the scourge of terrorism from the Earth.

I am pleased to take note today of a new and useful study of the international terrorist network, put together by the Defense Department and now publicly available to everyone—both the "front line" soldier in the fight against terrorism, and the concerned private citizen.

The study, titled "Terrorist Group Profiles," is a virtual "who's who" of terrorist groups around the world, bringing together in the latest, unclassified and declassified information on their leadership, membership, plans and activities.

These scum operate in the dark. The more we expose the light of public knowledge to their activities, the more difficult it will be for them to carry out their terrible acts.

I would like to include in the RECORD at this point the foreword for the study, written by President Bush, in his previous capacity as head of the Vice President's Task Force on Combating Terrorism. It is a clarion call for the kind of tough, intelligent, consistent policy against terrorism that this country needs, and President Bush is determined to provide.

I would also commend to the attention of every Senator—and every citizen who is concerned about this critical problem—the entire study. It will be a must reference work for us all.

There being no objection, the foreword was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON,
November 1988.

FELLOW AMERICANS: In February 1986, The Vice President's Task Force on Combating Terrorism released its public report, which contained a number of policy recommendations. These recommendations became the cornerstone of US counterterrorism policy. One key proposal was to launch a public awareness effort to better inform the American people about the nature of terrorism and the threat it represents to our national security interests and to the freedoms we so deeply cherish.

I strongly favor providing the public such information because it sharpens awareness as to the individual agendas of terrorist groups, the role of nations that support their depredations, and the necessity for tailoring multiple strategies to effectively combat this scourge.

As a result of the findings of my Task Force, we have markedly improved the coordinating machinery that enables the American Government to more rapidly and effectively resolve terrorist crises. We have put in place new procedures to enhance the response capabilities of our intelligence, law enforcement, and security forces. We have spent millions to recruit, train, and equip our personnel engaged in combatting terrorism and to enhance the security of our embassies and overseas military bases.

My Task Force outlined a clear and concise counterterrorism policy—the toughest in the Free World.

First, the United States will be firm with terrorists. We will not make concessions. We will continue to urge other countries not to make concessions. Rewarding terrorists only encourages more terrorism. Second, we will apply pressure to states which sponsor terrorism. We will work with friendly nations to apply diplomatic, economic, political, and, if necessary, military pressure on states which sponsor terrorism. If we find states supplying money, weapons, training, identification documents, travel, or safehaven for terrorists, we will respond. Our aim is to demonstrate to these countries that supporting terrorism is not cost-free.

Third, we will bring terrorists to justice. We will continue to cooperate with friendly nations to identify, track, apprehend, prosecute, and punish terrorists. Our efforts include exchanging intelligence information on terrorists and their movements, developing "watch lists" for use by border police, and tightening extradition treaties. Terrorism is crime, and terrorists must be treated as criminals.

In addition, the United States will help friendly nations resist terrorist pressures through an ambitious program of antiterrorism training which, since 1984, has trained more than 6,000 police officers and security personnel from some 50 nations.

Our policy has been effective. From 1986–1987, the number of anti-US terrorist attacks dropped 25 percent. International terrorist operations in Western Europe over the past 2 years decreased 31 percent, and last year in Latin America dropped 32 percent. Only two international terrorist skyjackings occurred in 1986 and only one in 1987. Particularly gratifying have been the increasingly successful prosecutions of international terrorists. Last year alone, there were 30 convictions in 9 different countries—the majority of terrorists received sentences of death, or life imprisonment.

Although progress has been made, terrorism remains a serious threat. In 1987, international terrorists carried out 832 operations, attacking the citizens and property of 84 nations. More than 2,000 persons were wounded. More than 600 died. This was greater than any year since the US Government began keeping records some 20 years ago.

The surge in the level of international terrorist activity worldwide in 1987 and 1988 resulted from a wave of high-casualty bombings in Pakistan carried out by agents of the Afghan intelligence service known as WAD. The WAD is Soviet trained and organized. The terrorist campaign is designed to deter the Government of Pakistan from aiding resistance fighters in Afghanistan. Fully one-third of all deaths and one-half of all injuries in 1987 that resulted worldwide from international terrorist operations were attributable to this campaign of terror—a campaign that left in its wake more than 220 dead and 1,000 wounded. When these numbers are subtracted, the number of incidents in the rest of the world declined by almost 10 percent from the 1986 statistics.

Many other states have adopted terrorism as a tool of foreign policy. Incidents attributable to state sponsorship rose from 70 attacks in 1986 to 189 in 1987, an increase of more than 170 percent. Governments sponsoring terrorism include North Korea, Iran, Libya, Syria, and South Yemen. This past year, only Syria took steps to lessen its support of terrorism by expelling the Abu Nidal Organization from the country.

For many, terrorism represents a cheap and effective way to project power. It is a tactic that enables terrorists to shoot their way onto the world stage and, in effect, hijack the international media. Terrorism, as common street crime, may never be totally eradicated, but we can reduce it to a more tolerable level. In our fight against terrorism we are going to suffer casualties. And, as in any conflict, the innocent suffer. Our aim is to minimize the price the American people and other innocents pay, and assure that those states and groups that resort to terrorism find the cost prohibitive and their actions counterproductive.

The difference between terrorists and freedom fighters is sometimes clouded. Some would say one man's freedom fighter is another man's terrorist. I reject this notion. The philosophical differences are stark and fundamental. It should be clear to all those who read this book that terrorists are criminals who attack our cherished institutions and profane our values.

In seeking to destroy freedom and democracy, terrorists deliberately target noncombatants for their own cynical purposes. They kill and maim defenseless men, women, and children. They murder judges, newspaper reporters, elected officials, government administrators, labor leaders, policemen, priests, and others who defend the values of civilized society. Freedom fighters, in contrast, seek to adhere to international law and civilized standards of conduct. They attack military targets, not defenseless civilians. Noncombatant casualties in this context are an aberration or attributable to the fortunes of war. They are not the result of deliberate policy designed to terrorize the opposition.

The difference between the terrorists and the freedom fighters is as profound as it is obvious. To permit this distinction to become blurred is to play into terrorists' hands.

The American public needs to understand terrorism, what it is and is not, and how the United States Government takes action against the terrorist threat.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

TERRENCE E. SAUVAIN

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the Senate today approved the nomination of Terrence E. Sauvain to serve as captain in the U.S. Coast Guard Reserve. Mr. Sauvain, or Terry as he is known to his many friends and colleagues, has served for many years in the Coast Guard Reserve, in the enlisted ranks prior to his commissioning and for 16 of the past 18 years in Reserve leadership positions in both field and headquarters Reserve units. Since 1973 Terry has also served with distinction in the Senate as special assistant to the majority leader and professional staff member of the Committee on Appropriations. Indeed, Terry has brought to his Coast Guard duties his very considerable experience with military construction and defense issues as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee staff.

Reserve duty in the Coast Guard carries with it significant and demanding responsibilities; and Terry has always committed himself, in his own words, "to use whatever talent I may possess to vigorously discharge whatever responsibilities to which I may be assigned." To this end he has actively participated over the years in a wide range of mobilization and mobilization planning programs in the Coast Guard Reserve, most recently in the strategy and policy course at the Naval War College in Newport, RI. In addition to his Senate and Coast Guard Reserve duties, he has carried out successfully an impressive list of correspondence courses ranging from Navy Admiralty law practice to boating safety, and since 1986 he has served as president of the Washington, DC, chapter of the Reserve Officers Association. It is not surprising, in view of all he has accomplished, that he should be the recipient of numerous medals and letters of commendation.

In the Coast Guard Reserve as in the U.S. Senate, Terry Sauvain has served his country tirelessly and effectively. He will now carry on that tradition of service as captain in the Reserve. His promotion is both an honor and a responsibility well earned.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations met on Thursday, January 26, 1989, and approved committee rules for the 101st Congress.

Pursuant to rule XXVI, paragraph 2, which states that the rules of each committee shall be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD not later than March 1 of each year, I ask unanimous consent that said committee rules be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the rules were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE, APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE RULES [1]

I. Meetings—

The Committee will meet at the call of the Chairman.

II. Quorums—

1. Reporting a bill. A majority of the members must be present for the reporting of a bill.

2. Other business. For the purpose of transacting business other than reporting a bill or taking testimony, one-third of the members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum.

3. Taking testimony. For the purpose of taking testimony, other than sworn testimony, by the Committee or any subcommittee, one member of the Committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum. For the purpose of taking sworn testimony by the Committee, three members shall constitute a quorum, and for the taking of sworn testimony by any subcommittee, one member shall constitute a quorum.

III. Proxies—

Except for the reporting of a bill, votes may be cast by proxy when any member so requests.

IV. Attendance of staff members at closed sessions—

Attendance of Staff Members at closed sessions of the Committee shall be limited to those members of the Committee Staff that have a responsibility associated with the matter being considered at such meeting. This rule may be waived by unanimous consent.

V. Broadcasting and photographing of Committee hearing—

The Committee or any of its subcommittees may permit the photographing and broadcast of open hearings by television and/or radio. However, if any member of a subcommittee objects to the photographing or broadcasting of an open hearing, the question shall be referred to the Full Committee for its decision.

VI. Availability of subcommittee reports—

To the extent possible, when the bill and report of any subcommittee are available, they shall be furnished to each member of the Committee thirty-six hours prior to the Committee's consideration of said bill and report.

VII. Amendments and report language—

To the extent possible, amendments and report language intended to be proposed by Senators at Full Committee markups shall be provided in writing to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member and the appropriate subcommittee Chairman and Ranking Minority Member twenty-four hours prior to such markups.

VIII. Points of order—

Any member of the Committee who is floor manager of an appropriation bill, is hereby authorized to make points of order against any amendment offered in violation of the Senate Rules on the floor of the Senate to such appropriation bill.

[1] Adopted pursuant to rule XXVI, par. 2, of the "Standing Rules of the Senate."

LARRY GIBBS, COMMISSIONER, INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, Larry Gibbs will be stepping down as Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service in March. As chairman of the Finance Committee, I have had the opportunity to work especially closely with Commissioner Gibbs over the last 2 years, and I have been impressed by the kind of job he has done.

At this confirmation hearing, I said that the key to Larry Gibbs' success as Commissioner would be public acceptance and confidence. Those words are equally appropriate now. Larry Gibbs has been a first-rate Commissioner because his primary goal has been to win the public's acceptance and confidence. He recognized that our voluntary compliance system is not served well when IRS agents view taxpayers as enemies and vice versa. Thus he instituted a quality improvement program designed to ensure that taxpayers are treated fairly and courteously, and to promote a more cooperative rather than adversarial relationship between taxpayers and the IRS.

Needless to say, the Commissioner of the IRS comes in for a lot of criticism, and Larry Gibbs always responded to criticism gracefully. On numerous occasions, Senator PRYOR, the chairman of the Finance Committee's Subcommittee on Oversight, brought Commissioner Gibbs before the subcommittee to answer hard questions about IRS activities. Larry Gibbs always handled himself in these situations with tact, good humor and intelligence. I also remember the public outcry over the wage withholding form introduced at the beginning of 1987. Larry Gibbs listened to those complaints, and brought out a new and simpler form, one which both served the IRS's purposes and met the public's concerns. He also presided over the implementation of the 1986 Tax Reform Act, and I think that it is to his credit that last year's tax return filing season, the first under the act, proceeded uneventfully.

Commissioner Gibbs brought great ability and experience to the job, and he's put them both to use effectively. We have not always agreed, but that is as it should be, and even when we didn't agree, I knew that he was listening. He has done an excellent job for the IRS and for the country, and I am sure that my colleagues join me in wishing him well in his new endeavors.

RECESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2:30 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, at 1:55 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:30 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. KOHL].

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now go into executive session.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

NOMINATION OF CLAYTON YEUTTER, OF NEBRASKA, TO BE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now consider the nomination of Clayton Yeutter to be Secretary of Agriculture, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Clayton Yeutter, of Nebraska, to be Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we are considering today the nomination of President Bush of the Honorable Clayton Yeutter to serve as Secretary of Agriculture of the United States. After a day of questioning and receiving responses to individual Senators' written requests, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry voted unanimously yesterday to approve Ambassador Yeutter's nomination.

Many of my colleagues here in the Senate have come to know Mr. Yeutter professionally and as a friend—most recently in his capacity as U.S. Trade Representative. He is an outstanding individual, well qualified for one of the most difficult jobs in the Cabinet.

Clayton Yeutter is a Nebraskan through and through; he received his college and law degrees—with high distinction and cum laude, respectively—and a doctorate in agricultural economics—all from the University of Nebraska, and all while seeing to management of a 2,500 acre farming operation.

Ambassador Yeutter served in the U.S. Air Force, and he taught part time while attending graduate school. He worked for the Governor of Nebraska and later served as director of the University of Nebraska's agriculture mission in Colombia.

In 1970, Washington beckoned, and Clayton Yeutter became the Administrator of the Agriculture Department's Consumer and Marketing Service. Subsequently, he served as Assistant Secretary for Marketing and Consumer Services and as Assistant Secretary for International Affairs and Commodity Programs, moving on in 1975 to be Deputy Special Trade Representative.

During the Carter Presidency, Clayton Yeutter practiced law in Lincoln, NE, and then served from 1978 to 1985 as the president and chief executive officer of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Most recently, of course, he has served as the U.S. Trade Representative.

With a résumé like that, I wish we could claim him for our side, but then George Bush would probably not be asking him to be the Secretary of Agriculture.

In my opening remarks at the committee session last week, I stressed some of the issues which will be of the utmost importance to us and, I hope, to the new Secretary of Agriculture as we move into the 1990's.

We asked Mr. Yeutter about how he would implement President Bush's commitment to a "kinder nation and a gentler world," and how he would lead the agricultural community—and the good people of the Agriculture Department—to realize it.

President Bush indicated when he announced Clayton Yeutter's nomination that he would not balance the Federal budget on the backs of America's farmers. That is an important commitment. We have seen 270,000 farmers leave the land permanently in just the past 8 years. We must stem that tide, and assure that we retain a viable, productive farm community in this Nation.

Mr. Yeutter's most important job of all will be to preserve American farming, to help reduce the deficit and, at the same time to retain our tough bargaining position with our trading partners. It will not be easy for him. But we must not take any actions which would devastate our farmers or have the effect of unilaterally disarming in the face of important trade negotiations.

I stressed to the Secretary-designate that we must work together to craft long-lasting, flexible programs—for all agricultural commodities—to retain our farms and restore the confidence of our farmers in their Government. I know those concerns are shared by all Senators.

In addition to our commodity programs and the many other USDA activities that sustain our agricultural sector as the most productive in the world, we reminded Mr. Yeutter that he will have significant further responsibilities.

Providing nutritious foods to children and the elderly on a regular, reliable basis through school lunches and breakfasts, the Women, Infants and Children [WIC] Program, and food stamps are important public policies. We on the committee and in the Senate at large will expect Mr. Yeutter to see that these programs operate well to serve those they are designed to reach. Hunger is a moral issue. In the richest nation on Earth no one—no child, no adult, no senior—should be hungry or malnourished.

As most of my colleagues here know, I believe that rural development—improving the rural economy, providing jobs, health care, housing and opportunity for nonfarm rural Americans—is an issue too long ignored. It is extremely important to me, and I am committed to working for passage of legislation this year. Clayton Yeutter indicated that rural development will be a priority of the Bush administration; I hope he will join the effort enthusiastically, and that he will enlist the President.

We also reminded Mr. Yeutter that the Department of Agriculture has a central, critical role to play on environmental issues. The Agriculture Committee is deeply concerned about the potential adverse effects of global warming and climate change, and we stressed to the Secretary-designate that this concern is pervasive throughout the Senate. The impact of agricultural practices on ground water will be a major issue of the 1990's. The Department must redouble its efforts to use the myriad of programs available to it to make ground water safer for the 95 percent of rural Americans who depend on it for their supplies.

The Department of Agriculture is responsible not only for overseeing the production of food and fiber. It is also responsible for our forests, which produce timber, provide wildlife habitats, protect unique biosystems through the National Wilderness Preservation System and give scores of Americans recreational spaces to enjoy. The prevention of soil erosion the Department's conservation programs will be critical to the sustainability of agriculture in the coming decades; the Conservation Reserve Program is central to that effort.

I think Ambassador Yeutter heard our messages last week, and he responded to the questions we raised. We may not all agree with him philosophically, but in urging all of you to vote in favor of this confirmation, I want to stress that it would have been difficult, if not impossible, for President Bush to find a more highly qualified individual to serve as Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise in support of the immediate consideration and confirmation by the Senate of the nomination of Clayton K. Yeutter to be the next Secretary of Agriculture.

Clayton Yeutter's credentials for this position are impressive. I will elaborate on this point in a moment. I ask unanimous consent that a brief summary of Ambassador Yeutter's experience be printed in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

Mr. LUGAR. Clayton Yeutter's nomination enjoys widespread support across the breadth of our diverse American agricultural industries. He is known as a person with the highest personal integrity. In my opinion it is unlikely that President Bush could find a candidate for this position who is more qualified and more dedicated to American agriculture than Clayton Yeutter.

The 101st Congress will be faced with a number of complex and controversial agricultural issues as the next few months unfold. It is clear that the members of the Agriculture Committee and the Senate as a whole will have to work together with the Department of Agriculture in order to sustain the economic recovery occurring on American farms today. In this respect, Clayton Yeutter has not only pledged to work with Congress, but has proven during his recent tenure as the U.S. Trade Representative that he will do so.

I want to point out for the record that the Committee on Agriculture held a hearing last Thursday, February 2, to consider the qualifications of Clayton Yeutter to be the next Secretary of Agriculture. Ambassador Yeutter inspired confidence as he responded to all of the questions put to him with substantive answers. He impressed even the casual observer with his knowledge and understanding of some of the most important issues confronting American agriculture. I know Clayton Yeutter as a man of the highest moral character and integrity, and I am convinced of his ability to successfully carry out the difficult task of being Secretary of Agriculture. The unanimous vote of the committee, yesterday, to favorably report this nomination to the full Senate for confirmation attests to the fact that I am not alone in my assessment among the members of the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. President, I would pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of the committee for expeditiously holding a hearing and for the bipartisan spirit that attended that hearing and the markup of the nomination.

The most significant issues affecting agriculture that we will be dealing with during the next 2 years are at least the following:

First, progress and implementation of the international negotiations and agreement in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT]. The current round of trade negotiations is the first time in the history of the GATT that agriculture has been identified for separate negotiation. The success or failure of the Uruguay Round of the GATT could very well hinge on the outcome of the agricultural discussions.

Second, agricultural trade generally and the use of export tools such as the EEP.

Third, reauthorization of commodity stabilization programs as part of the farm bill and budgetary considerations associated with the operation of these programs.

Fourth, reauthorization of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, which although not directly the responsibility of the Secretary of Agriculture certainly has a direct impact on agriculture and the conduct of agricultural programs.

Fifth, we will be discussing agricultural research.

Sixth, we certainly will be taking up ground water contamination in the aftermath of our successful legislative efforts during last year.

Given these as a few of the critical issues, Clayton Yeutter's experience and accomplishments are astoundingly relevant.

In the area of trade, he has served as the U.S. Trade Representative since 1985. Before that he had experience as the Deputy Trade Representative and as the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for International Affairs and Commodity Programs. His support for agriculture during his recent tenure as Trade Representative has been strong and unbending.

He is a farmer with extensive experience running a 2,500-acre operation. Through that experience and by serving as the Assistant Secretary responsible for commodity programs and as an attorney with an agricultural law practice he is intimately familiar with commodity programs.

Clayton Yeutter has served as the president and chief executive officer of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the second largest futures trading exchange in the world. He taught for several years at a land grant university—the University of Nebraska—focussing on agricultural research and extension.

I know that he will work closely and harmoniously with all Members of the Senate. I congratulate him on his nomination. Mr. President, I urge the immediate confirmation of this nominee.

CLAYTON K. YEUTTER—EMPLOYMENT HISTORY

July 1985—present: U.S. Trade Representative, Executive Office of the President. This is a Cabinet post, reporting directly to the President of the United States on all trade matters. The primary responsibility of this position is to develop an overall trade policy for the Nation, and then coordinate the development of a U.S. position on all individual trade isues of importance to our country. The U.S. Trade Representative is also responsible for the strategy and tactics that are followed in the conduct of both bilateral and multilateral trade negotiations.

July 1978—June 1985: President and Chief Executive Officer, Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the world's second largest futures market. The CME conducts futures trading in (1) all the major international currencies; (2) interest rate contracts for Treasury bills, bank certificates of deposit, and Eurodollars; (3) stock indices, such as the S&P 500; and (4) agricultural contracts, such as fat cattle, feeder cattle, and hogs. The Exchange also offers options trading in several of these products. It has been the fastest growing futures exchange in the world in recent years, and probably has a larger dollar turnover (many billions each day) than any other private sector entity in the world.

April 1977—June 1978: Senior partner of the law firm Nelson, Harding, Yeutter & Leonard in Lincoln, Nebraska. The firm had additional offices in several other cities. Responsible for the firm's agriculturally related practice, and for coordinating all elements of the practice where Washington, D.C. or international interests were involved.

June 1975-February 1977: Deputy Special Trade Representative, Executive Office of the President. This was an Ambassadorial post with responsibility for conducting trade negotiations on behalf of the President and the U.S. Government. It involved contacts and negotiations with the representatives of many foreign governments, as well as coordination of U.S. policy positions with other Federal departments, the Congress, and numerous private sector advisory committees.

March 1974-June 1975: Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for International Affairs and Commodity Programs. Responsible for all activities of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in the following agencies: Agricultural Stabilization & Conservation Services; Foreign Agriculture Service; Federal Crop Insurance Corporation; Commodity Credit Corporation.

January 1973-March 1974: Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Consumer Services. Responsible for essentially all regulatory and domestic market service functions in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Agencies included: Animal & Plant Health Inspection Service; Agricultural Marketing Service; Commodity Exchange Authority; Food & Nutrition Services; Packers & Stockyards Administration.

January 1972-December 1972: Regional Director, Committee for the Reelection of the President. Responsible for all facets of the President's campaign in seven midwestern states. Also served as Director for Agriculture with responsibility for the agricultural portion of the campaign in all 50 states.

October 1970-December 1971: Administrator, Consumer & Marketing Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture. Responsible for such programs as meat and poultry inspection, the grading of agricultural products, development of product standards, market news, the administration of market orders, procurement of food for commodity distribution, school lunch programs, etc.

September 1968-October 1970: Director, University of Nebraska Mission in Colombia. The largest agricultural technical assistance program in the world at that time. Involved the participation of six midwestern land grant universities, with funding by AID, the Kellogg Foundation, and the Ford Foundation. Assistance was provided at the graduate and undergraduate level in teaching, research, and extension in all major agricultural fields. Recipient agencies were the Colombian Agricultural Institute (which somewhat approximates USDA) and the National University.

January 1966—September 1968: Executive Assistant to the Governor of Nebraska. Responsible for coordination between the Governor and numerous agencies of state government—including the Department of Agriculture and all state educational institutions. Handled all legislative liaison work, including drafting of legislation to broaden the state tax base and to provide for state aid to education. Other major legislation enacted included: creation of a state department of economic development, establishment of a minimum wage, merger of the University of Nebraska and the University of Omaha, establishment of a state telecommunications commission, etc.

January 1960—January 1966: Faculty member, Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Nebraska. Combination teaching, research and extension responsibilities in agricultural economics and agricultural law. Major professional area was resource economics, i.e., land and water. Taught only part time while completing requirements for the Ph.D. and J.D. degrees. Served full time in 1965 and 1966.

1957-1975: Operator of a 2,500 acre farming-ranching-cattle feeding enterprise in central Nebraska. This unit is now operated by a tenant on a cash lease basis.

1952-1957: United States Air Force. Enlisted as a Basic Airman upon graduation from the University of Nebraska. Later received a direct commission in Medical Administration. Ranked first in graduating class in Basic Course in Medical Administration, Gunter AFB, Alabama. Recipient of numerous military awards. Continued in the active reserve until 1977. Now a retired reserve Lt. Colonel.

1963-1968: To the extent permitted by time and other obligations, active in the practice of law in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes of time to the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I agree with the comments of the distinguished chairman and distinguished ranking member of the Agriculture Committee. Clayton Yeutter is well qualified to be the next Secretary of Agriculture.

I wish to add my name to the list of Senators who are commending President Bush for choosing this very fine, capable, confident man. I think he is the right person for the job at this time, and I wish him the very best in all his endeavors.

As Senator LUGAR pointed out, Mr. Yeutter has a long background in agriculture. Not only has he previously worked for Department of Agriculture, he has served the industry's interests in the private sector as an attorney, an economist, and a former trade Ambassador. I believe he is one of the best qualified individuals we have had there in quite some time.

I have known him since I was a member of the House Agriculture Committee, and I am glad he has been chosen by the President for this job.

I thank the Chair and Senator LUGAR for the time. I want to add my name to the list of those who also wish Secretary Yeutter success in the job.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, Senator COCHRAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I strongly support the confirmation of Clayton Yeutter as Secretary of Agriculture. Over the years, he has won respect throughout the agriculture community and here in Congress because he is an intelligent, forceful, and effective negotiator and administrator.

He was born on a Nebraska farm and has had a lifelong interest in agriculture. At the University of Nebraska, he won an award as the Nation's outstanding student in animal husbandry. He earned a law degree and a doctorate in agricultural economics.

While working on a project in Latin America, he developed an interest in international trade and an appreciation of its importance to our agriculture economy. He served as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Consumer Services in the Nixon administration, and he served as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for International Affairs and Commodity Programs in the Ford administration. He has had experience as Deputy U.S. Trade Representative in 1975 and 1976.

More recently, as U.S. Trade Representative, he has distinguished himself as the principal enforcer of a more aggressive American trade policy. He made fair trade in agriculture one of the major goals in multilateral trade negotiations.

As our Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter's efforts to support agriculture are well documented and very much appreciated. His confirmation will show solid support for President Bush's goal of market development for our agricultural products. President Bush and Clayton Yeutter are strong supporters and advocates of opening foreign markets and expanding them to U.S. agricultural products.

As Secretary of Agriculture, his personal experience and his knowledge of international trade issues will be great assets for our Nation's farmers and agricultural businesses. More than many others, they understand the vital link between international trade and a growing and successful American agriculture.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I look forward to working with Secretary Yeutter. I encourage him to use all available tools to bring about improved international trade in agriculture and profitability among our agricultural producers. I congratulate President Bush on this excellent Cabinet nomination.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Senate Agriculture Committee had a unanimous vote on Clayton Yeutter yesterday and I believe that is indicative of the support he has generally within the agriculture community.

QUALIFICATIONS

The committee hearing last week reinforced the soundness of President Bush's choice for Secretary of Agriculture. First, he has the background and experience necessary.

He grew up on a farm in rural Nebraska, he's been involved in agriculture all of his life and he has worked hard to promote the interests of American farmers in his positions at USDA during the Nixon and Ford administrations and more recently as the U.S. Trade Representative.

Second, he understands that the agriculture sector has been through a tough time during the 1980's and he will work with Congress in balancing the need to reduce our budget deficit with the need to maintain farm income. He understands that good farm policies are only a part of the solution and that macroeconomic factors such as inflation, interest rates, the value of the dollar, and that the debt problems of developing countries also have a significant impact on the livelihood of the American farmer.

Third, he knows that agriculture is involved in a world marketplace and that agricultural exports are the lifeblood of American agriculture. Our farmers need to be able to sell what they produce at a profit, and it can only happen if we have markets. Clayton has indicated he will be aggressive in export promotion and will work to reduce unfair trade barriers worldwide.

Mr. President, I would just reiterate what I stated in the committee last week. Clayton is well qualified to be the administration's leading advocate for agriculture and I believe the American farmer will find him a strong and intelligent voice for their concerns.

In summary, for all the reasons that have already been stated on both sides of the aisle, I think it is clear Clayton Yeutter has a lot of support, not just on the Agriculture Committee but across the country in all segments of agriculture for three basic reasons: First of all, he is qualified; he has the experience; he has the background. And as Senator COCHRAN just pointed out, he was born and raised on a farm. He knows how tough it is.

Second, he understands that we have been through some tough times in the late seventies and the early eighties, and still we have a lot of work to do to keep farmers on the farm which, in turn, gives consumers the benefit of a stable food supply.

I think probably just as important, he knows the value of international trade to agriculture. As our former trade representative, he knows that if there is a future for the American producer, it is in being competitive, being able to export, and in breaking down some of the trade barriers around the world.

For all those reasons, I think his leadership will be good for rural America, good for the consumers in urban areas, and I believe it is an indication that President Bush means what he said when he said he had an interest in agriculture.

The appointment of Clayton Yeutter underscores that interest. I certainly am pleased to support his nomination and look forward to working with him on upcoming farm legislation.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I thank the chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. President, I suspect that there is no one in this body who has known Clayton Yeutter as long as this Senator. Over that long period of time, Clayton Yeutter has performed every duty he has ever been assigned with great dedication and great ability. I first knew him when he was a professor at the University of Nebraska School of Agriculture. Believe it or not, we used to argue agriculture policy back then. That is almost 25, 26 years ago. We have been arguing agriculture policy ever since as friends, as individuals fundamentally interested in agriculture and the family-sized farmer. Clayton Yeutter and I do not agree on some particular phases of how to help agriculture, but there is no one that has greater dedication. I have always found him one that you could talk to, one who was understanding, one who was certainly highly intelligent and one who would listen to your point of view. I believe essentially that is what we expect in the Secretary of Agriculture as well as others who serve at other important posts in the Government of the United States. Therefore, I am pleased to add my name to the list in strong support of Clayton Yeutter. I hope and would expect that the vote we are about to take is unanimous. I highly recommend him as one who will make a good Secretary of Agriculture.

I wish to put in the caveat that I suspect there will be times when our differences on agriculture policy might break out into the open; it might break out on the floor of this Senate. Nevertheless, I have the highest respect for him and his ability, and I salute and thank the President for making the selection of this great Nebraskan.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would like to add my support to the nomination of Clayton Yeutter to serve as Secretary of Agriculture.

I am pleased that President Bush has chosen a Midwesterner to help guide agriculture's agenda within this administration.

More importantly, I am glad to see a fellow agriculture producer occupying the position of Secretary.

Clayton Yeutter is a former cattle rancher. He understands how our domestic farm programs can effect the livestock industry. His insight and guidance in this area will be important as Congress works to revise the current farm program authorization.

With Clayton Yeutter at the helm of the USDA, we will also have a strong voice for free trade and the elimination of unfair trade barriers. His selection will provide continuity to U.S. agriculture's international trade negotiations.

American farmers need a Secretary who will get tough with our foreign competitors and demand a level playing field. Clayton proved as U.S. Trade Representative that he is tough enough to handle the job.

He is also tough enough to handle the job of protecting agriculture's interests within the realm of Cabinet discussions.

There are a number of domestic issues—including the farm program reauthorization—that will require the energies of the Department of Agriculture.

The development of domestic markets is critical to providing long-term stability to agriculture. We must continue to look for new ways to produce industrial goods from agriculture commodities.

We must also continue the Department of Agriculture's work on the conservation and protection of our natural resources.

Finally, rural economic development must be a priority if we hope to maintain the infrastructure within our rural communities.

I look forward to working with Mr. Yeutter's to develop and pursue an agenda for resolving these problems facing rural America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes, fifty-six seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that be doubled to 6 minutes and 36 seconds, with an extra 3 minutes and 36 seconds to the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Alabama and then 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Illinois and 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Dr. Clayton Yeutter on his confirmation as Secretary of the Department of Agriculture which I predict will soon occur. Dr. Yeutter's long and distinguished career in the field of Agriculture renders him exceptionally qualified to be the Secretary of Agriculture.

I recently met with Dr. Yeutter in my office. I found him to be responsive to seeking ways in which the Department of Agriculture could aid in the revitalization of rural America. I was also encouraged to find Dr. Yeutter receptive to pursuing avenues in which the USDA could help rural areas with water and wastewater management. Water management is of great importance to many of my rural constituents in Alabama.

I believe that Dr. Yeutter will work very closely with Members of Congress in trying to resolve the problems facing the agricultural community. Mr. Yeutter's practical knowledge of production agriculture as well as his rural background will aid him tremendously in dealing with the problems faced by our Nation's declining rural areas and our fragile farm economy.

I was pleased to support Dr. Yeutter's confirmation in the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, and I am delighted to have done so today before the full Senate. I am congratulating him and wish him well.

I thank the chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Illinois. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

I also rise in support of Clayton Yeutter. I had the chance to get to know him when he was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Then I saw him on the scene in Illinois as a business executive. Then we got to know him as Trade Representative. I know him, as do those who have worked with him, as competent, tough, dedicated. I think that is the kind of job he will do as Secretary of Agriculture. He knows farming. He understands the importance of smalltown America to this country. He knows the trade field. Of equal importance, he knows the Members of the House and Senate. He can work with us. Mr. President, I think you will find he is someone who is going to fight for family farmers.

I am sure there are going to be some areas where I will differ with Clayton Yeutter as Secretary of Agriculture, but there is no question that he is going to be a fair, honest, dedicated public servant. The President has made an excellent appointment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the chairman for yielding me this time.

Mr. President, I rise also in support of the nomination of Clayton Yeutter to be our next Secretary of Agriculture. Last Thursday, when he appeared before the Agriculture Committee, I was unavoidably absent with stomach flu, which is going around this town a lot lately. So I was unable at that time to tell Clayton I was pleased with his nomination and pleased to support it and give him my best wishes as he assumes this new position.

As has been said many times today, he has had a long and distinguished career in agriculture. There is no doubt in my mind that he is a highly intelligent individual, holding both a law degree and Ph.D., and yet he has always maintained that kind of downhome attitude and ability to talk to grassroots people, whether it is in Nebraska, Illinois, Iowa, or anywhere else.

So this ability that he has is going to serve him very well as Secretary of Agriculture.

I want to say two things: Clayton has always been in the forefront of the fight to make sure that we are able to produce and sell. That really is the key to success in agriculture, to make sure that our system is producing and selling. He has been in the forefront of the fight to open up markets overseas, to break down these unfair trade barriers so our farmers can sell their products overseas.

Second, as he assumes this new position, I know in conversations with him that he is interested in making sure we get more research into finding new products from those things that we grow, whether it is corn and beans or cotton—whatever it is, but get more research in there so we can have new products from those crops.

So in those two areas I believe we are going to have a great working relationship. I am sure we are going to disagree on policy and different things like that. But, again, I think we will do it with the best interests of American agriculture at heart.

So I commend him for this appointment, and I look forward to working with a very bright, very capable, and very engaging person, someone I know who is going to perform his job very well as Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I am pleased to have this opportunity to state my support for the nomination of my friend Clayton Yeutter to serve our Nation as its next Secretary of Agriculture. I offer him my sincere congratulations and best wishes as he assumes this position; perhaps the latter is more appropriate since the job of Secretary of Agriculture is indeed a difficult one.

We are, of course, well aware of the outstanding academic and professional credentials that Clayton will bring to this position. His nomination as Secretary of Agriculture is only the latest accomplishment in an exemplary career in agriculture. Equally important in my view, though, is the comfort that farmers in my State and across the Nation can take in the fact that Clayton is a Nebraska farm boy who has never lost his keen interest in and attachment to the family farm where he grew up and learned his earliest lessons.

We face many challenges in agriculture. We have lingering effects of last year's drought and uncertainty about what this year's weather will be. We will deal with very difficult issues regarding the budget and levels of spending on agricultural programs. But at the same time we must work to ensure that farm income is maintained at adequate levels and that our family farm system of agriculture is preserved. Critical conservation and environmental issues in agriculture must be addressed in a way that does not place unmanageable or disproportionate burdens on our agricultural producers. Nevertheless, this is also an exciting time holding promising opportunities for revitalizing agriculture and rural America.

With the notable exception of short crop years, we face a perennial challenge in U.S. agriculture of finding uses and markets for the abundance of agricultural commodities produced by our fertile soils and efficient family farm system of agriculture. Keeping that system producing and selling is the key to economic health for our farms and rural communities.

Clayton Yeutter has of course been at the forefront of working to gain access to foreign markets for U.S. agricultural commodities. I commend him for the vigorous effort he has led to eliminate unfair barriers to agricultural trade. Our American farmers are highly efficient and productive; they deserve the opportunity to compete and market their commodities in the world marketplace.

In another area, we are now only in the beginning stages of very important research into new products that can be produced from agricultural commodities. We are familiar with the use of corn, for example, to produce biodegradable plastics, ethanol, noncorrosive road deicer and various other products. Soybeans are used to make inks. With additional research I believe we can make much progress in developing new uses and markets for our agricultural commodities and in doing so boost the economies of rural areas. I am very pleased that Clayton is also interested in pursuing this kind of research.

In addition to farm programs, the Department of Agriculture is responsible for administering various programs designed to help our rural communities create a better economic future. For a number of reasons rural areas of our Nation have experienced some very tough economic problems in the past few years. Frankly, for the past 8 years these problems and the programs addressing them have been neglected. I hope that under Clayton's leadership the Department of Agriculture will rededicate itself to effective and substantial action in the area of rural economic development.

It is also very important that we not forget that the Secretary of Agriculture serves all the citizens of our Nation. The Secretary has important responsibilities for ensuring the wholesomeness of our food supply and educating our citizens about sound nutrition. The Secretary also is responsible for carrying out several important programs designed to address the basic need for adequate food and sustenance for all of our citizens, including the school lunch, food stamp, and commodity distribution programs. I am pleased that as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Consumer Services in the Nixon administration, Clayton oversaw the implementation of the Special Supplemental Feeding Program for Women, Infants and Children, or WIC, which is widely viewed as one of the most cost-effective Federal programs of any type.

I sincerely look forward to working with Secretary Yeutter in the coming years. I am sure that we will have some disagreements on policy; that is the way our system works. I am confident, though, that we will have a productive working relationship based on cooperation, respect, and forthright and fair debate on the issues.

Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND, and 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Mr. BOND.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Mr. Clayton Yeutter for Secretary of Agriculture. Mr. Yeutter possesses excellent qualifications for this position. He is a member of a hard working family that has distinguished itself through service to its community, State, and country.

While attending graduate school, Mr. Yeutter, simultaneously worked toward degrees in law and agriculture, and ran the 2,500-acre family farm operation in Nebraska. He graduated with distinction from the University of Nebraska. From high school through his Ph.D., he never made a course grade below an "A."

Mr. Yeutter's career in public service began in Nebraska where he was executive assistant to the Governor. His service with the Department of Agriculture began in 1970, with several sub-Cabinet posts. He has served as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Consumer Services, where he was in charge of such programs as meat inspection, animal health, and food programs. He then served as Assistant Secretary for International Affairs and Commodity Programs, and was involved in the dramatic expansion of farm exports during the mid-1970's. During the Ford administration he served as Deputy Special Trade Representative handling many bilateral negotiations.

Mr. Yeutter left public service for 7 years to become president and chief executive officer of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the second largest futures market in the world. Under his direction, this organization was one of the fastest growing in the United States private sector with billions of dollars of contracts traded in both agricultural and financial instruments each day.

As U.S. Trade Representative, Mr. Yeutter has been responsible for the development and execution of American trade policy. This job requires coordinating a United States negotiating position on all trade issues of importance to this country. Furthermore, he has had the difficult task of devising the strategy and tactics that will accomplish successful negotiations.

Mr. President, Mr. Yeutter has exhibited those traits of character and intellect which will serve him well as Secretary of Agriculture. I am certain, in this post, as in all of the others that he has held, he will serve the country and the President with the utmost distinction.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support his confirmation.

Mr. BOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOWLER). The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise in support, of President Bush's nomination of Ambassador Clayton Yeutter to be the 23d Secretary of Agriculture. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that he will do an excellent job in this vital position. Programs and policies administered by the Secretary of Agriculture are paramount of millions of people throughout the world—whether it be a soybean farmer in Missouri, and exporter in New Orleans, or a consumer in Europe.

I have had the privilege of working with Ambassador Yeutter during his tenure as U.S. Trade Representative. Throughout this period, I was continually impressed with his knowledge of agriculture and commitment to America's farmers and ranchers. Time and time again, Ambassador Yeutter was able to develop a U.S. negotiating position based on good policy—not just good politics. Maybe the best sign of his success is the constant complaining of our competitors—whether it be the Japanese, the Koreans, or the European Community.

As USTR, Ambassador Yeutter recognized the importance of eliminating unfair subsidies and barriers to trade and worked hard to make trade in the world market both free and fair. Although he became a master of the formal GATT process, Ambassador Yeutter was not afraid to implement retaliatory actions when necessary. Through GATT, he was successful in opening new markets in Japan for agricultural products. Through retaliation, he has forced the European Community to reconsider it thinly disguised prohibition on beef treated with growth hormones. Through compromise, Ambassador Yeutter reached an accord with the Soviet Union on another grain agreement. These same abilities—consensus, strength, and flexibility—will ensure his success as Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that American agriculture remains on the long road of recovery. Of immediate concern, the drought that devastated much of the Nation last summer remains with us. Much of my State is in desperate need of moisture for not only crops and livestock—but rural communities. Secretary Lyng did a fine job of working with Congress on ways to mitigate the effects of the drought and I believe Ambassador Yeutter will maintain this close working relationship.

I am afraid the Nation's tremendous budget deficit will lead some to come calling once again on Agriculture's money tree. While I believe the agriculture budget has already absorbed enough cuts, history indicates we could be forced to find further reductions. If this is necessary, I am encouraged by Ambassador Yeutter's willingness to work with Congress to identify cuts which are the least detrimental to farmers but remain consistent with the objectives of the Food Security Act of 1985.

Finally, Congress will soon begin consideration of the next farm bill. This comes at a time when the United States remains steadfast in its goal of reforming world trade in agricultural commodities throughout the GATT negotiations. Ambassador Yeutter is uniquely qualified to work with Ambassador Hills on this issue while at the same time formulating policies which allow the United States to take full advantage of any trade liberalization.

Mr. President, I went into last Thursday's confirmation hearing knowing full well I would vote in favor of Ambassador Yeutter's nomination. Aside from his stellar credentials, I have been very impressed with his thoughts on where American agriculture is headed and what needs to be done to pave the way. Also, I can say that Ambassador Yeutter displayed unbelievable diligence by answering the Agriculture Committee's 147 written questions over the weekend. In my book that is dedication beyond the 5 o'clock quitting hour.

An old sage once said, people don't care what you know—until they know that you care. In Clayton Yeutter, Americans have found someone who fits this bill. I applaud President Bush's appointment of Ambassador Yeutter and encourage my colleagues to vote in support of his nomination.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield whatever remaining time I have to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

I thank Senator LUGAR for yielding.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of Ambassador Clayton Yeutter to be the next Secretary of Agriculture. I believe that President Bush has made an excellent choice in selecting Clayton Yeutter to head the Department of Agriculture.

Clayton Yeutter's credentials for this office are exceptional. Clayton owns and makes the management decisions on the family farm in Eustis, NE. He is a producer and knows the problems farmers face from the production side of the equation.

In a addition, Clayton has a Ph.D. in agricultural economics from Nebraska State University in Lincoln, NE. He understands the macroeconomic and microeconomic factors that push and pull on the agricultural sector.

Clayton is past president of the Chicago Merchantile Exchange where the free enterprise system that made the country what it is today is practiced with every trade. Clayton understands the marketplace and what makes it work.

Clayton also served in the Department of Agriculture as Under Secretary for International Affairs and Commodity programs. He has worked in the Department of Agriculture and understands the intricacies of that important agency.

Most recently Clayton ably served the administration as U.S. Trade Representative. During this tenure, Clayton has elevated the problems faced by agriculture to true international importance.

There may be no person in America more able to serve as Secretary of Agriculture. I commend President Bush for selecting Clayton Yeutter and I urge all my Senate colleagues to vote in favor of his confirmation. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, it is a great honor for this Senator to speak on behalf of President Bush's nominee for Secretary of Agriculture, Clayton Yeutter. His career, spanning three decades, is an enviable combination of business and entrepreneurial experience coupled with public sector responsibilities, most recently serving as the President's Special Trade Representative. We are, indeed, fortunate that President Bush was able to prevail upon Clayton Yeutter to lend his talents to yet another task of service to his country.

We are at a crossroads in agricultural policy as we approach the final decade of the 20th century. My farmers and rural constituents tell me time after time during my travels through my home State that the 1985 farm bill has worked well in stabilizing American agriculture, but that important needs still exist. Critical decisions must be made, and actions taken in the areas of international trade, domestic programs, and resource management and conservation.

Clayton Yeutter's efforts as Special Trade Representative have brought agricultural trade issues to the forefront in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations. After decades of avoiding substantive discussions of trade distorting domestic agricultural policies by GATT member nations, we finally have the opportunity to resolve some policy disputes which have had the effect of stifling growth, discouraging innovation, and suppressing economic opportunity in each member countries' respective agricultural sectors. Despite the volume of rhetoric in the current dispute with the EC over the meat issue, opportunity exists for meaningful reform in trade policy. A good example of what can occur with patience and persistence is the beef and citrus agreement which then Ambassador Yeutter concluded with Japan. The beef and citrus agreement could allow beef sales to Japan to increase by as much as $1 billion in the next 4 years, and substantial increases in citrus sales as well.

Mr. President, with the research recently reported by reputable scientists concerning the greenhouse effect, even greater need exists to revamp our international and domestic policies. Our domestic agricultural policies encourage the destruction and burning of South American forests. Many countries' supply management policies, which, Mr. President, would be more aptly named supply mismanagement, encourage high levels of production inputs on sometimes fragile or vulnerable lands leading to concerns about ground water quality.

With these important international trade and policy issues facing us, Mr. President, Clayton Yeutter's background and experience will be valuable for us in his new role as Secretary of Agriculture.

As the 1985 farm bill expires, and the debate begins on a new comprehensive farm bill, again the experience of Clayton Yeutter will prove valuable as we craft the next farm bill. Here too we must be aware of how results of GATT negotiations affect how we lay the foundation of future farm legislation. Ambassador Yeutter, in his statement to the Senate Agriculture Committee during the confirmation hearing stated:

> We cannot rationally construct farm legislation for the '90's until we know the outcome of the Uruguay round. We are in a global marketplace, we all represent an industry that is export dependent, and if we are to reform agricultural and trade policies in the world, we must go down that road together with our trading partners.

Mr. President, his suggestion that we maintain all of our current tools to allow maximum flexibility is a position that makes good sense and I heartily endorse it. Successful completion of the GATT negotiations will allow us to loosen the shackles on American agriculture and create an environment where decisions are made by farmers at home based on the marketplace, not made in Washington, DC by politicians.

The Agriculture Department also carries out Federal nutrition programs. I was pleased with Ambassador Yeutter's comments during the confirmation hearing about his support and involvement with the WIC Program over the years. As a strong supporter of nutrition programs such as WIC, School Lunch, and Child Care Food, I intend to take an active role in the reauthorization of child nutrition programs this year.

Finally, Mr. President, a critical need exists for action to provide leadership and tools to rural communities throughout the Nation to assist in rural development. Ambassador Yeutter, in his testimony before our committee displayed considerable knowledge and concern for the needs of rural America. His views that more joint efforts among Federal agencies are necessary, and that the local people must play the key role in development efforts are encouraging to those of us who will be active in working for increased rural development. This Senator looks forward to working closely with the Secretary in this important area.

Mr. President, as we deal with the critical issues ahead in international trade, domestic farm and food policy, resource conservation, and rural development it is important to have a Secretary who understands all of these areas and their interrelationships. We are indeed fortunate to have those characteristics in Clayton Yeutter. It is an honor to speak on his behalf and recommend his unanimous confirmation.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in the Senate in supporting the nomination of Clayton Yeutter for Secretary of Agriculture. I am delighted with this nomination and can think of no finer choice for this appointment.

Clayton Yeutter has the right mix of experience and achievement, he is an agricultural economist and attorney from Nebraska who held USDA Assistant Secretary posts in the Nixon and Ford administrations and became U.S. Trade Representative after working a number of years as chief executive officer of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Perhaps no one has a better background in Agriculture and the role it plays in international affairs than Clayton Yeutter. His focus on the importance of trade to the U.S. farm economy is vital and he has made a personal commitment to opening markets abroad. Coming from a State where the importance of international trade to the farm economy is increasingly critical, I have a great appreciation for the depth of his abilities in both agriculture and trade.

He has the talent. He has the ability. And he has the potential to be a great Secretary of Agriculture.

He has demonstrated that he is a tough bargainer on international trade issues and he has experience in dealing with Congress.

Clayton Yeutter understands the problem facing farmers today, he is a farmer/rancher from Nebraska, and he understands the international economy in which they operate, and I cannot think of anyone who is better qualified to step into the job than Clayton Yeutter.

He displays the kind of sound judgment that we need in Government. As a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, I look forward to working with Clayton Yeutter in the development of agriculture related initiatives. I am confident that the Department of Agriculture and the United States will be pleased with his strong leadership. Mr. President, I commend the Senate for executing this swift confirmation.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the nomination of Clayton Yeutter to be Secretary of Agriculture.

As the former chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee of the Finance Committee, I gained an appreciation of Ambassador Yeutter's qualities over the last 2 years in his role as U.S. Trade Representative in the previous administraton. He proved himself an outstanding public servant who performed well in an exceedingly difficult assignment. In his new Cabinet post his responsibilities may be different but the issues, for the most part, will be similar to those he managed as Trade Representative, given the importance of American agriculture in our overall world trade position.

While we do not see eye-to-eye on some matters, notably the sugar program, I am encouraged by the statement he made at his confirmation hearings that he does not intend to unilaterally disarm in regard to our agricultural support programs, especially insofar as sugar is concerned. In my considered opinion, this is the only intelligent course we can take, Mr. President, unless we are prepared to completely dismantle our domestic industry and become entirely dependent on foreign imports of this strategic commodity, as some would have us do. Fortunately, however, their view is not shared by Mr. Yeutter or by the Bush administration, whose position on sugar I am given to understand is far more enlightened than was that of the Reagan administration.

With that said, Mr. President, I am happy to support the nomination of my good friend Ambassador Yeutter as the Nation's new Secretary of Agriculture and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, what more is there to say about this extraordinary man? I've known him for many years. He once lived in Wyoming and he's really a neighbor of ours from Nebraska.

He is so eminently well-qualified for this position and he deserves our deepest thanks for agreeing to continue his service to our Nation. We know of his desire to return to the private sector, and yet he "held off" and will now provide us the strong leadership so necessary for our agriculture sector on into the nineties.

Clayton Yeutter has already spent the past few years battling the barriers to U.S. agriculture exports. He's sure the right man for the right job as we begin to see a recovery in the agriculture economy.

He will be such a good person to work along with the Congress as we prepare to debate future farm policy. He's a man of absolute integrity as well as consummate good sense. He'll shoot straight with us. I'm a great fan of his, obviously. Together we can produce a sensible farm policy even under the continuing stress of Federal budget deficits and the specter of sequester. Because of the many exemptions to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, agriculture is particularly hard hit under any form of sequester. But if we can provide the means for our hard-working farmers and ranchers—the ones who honestly deserve it—to secure an adequate income through the marketplace rather than through Federal subsidy, we will have done our jobs well as legislators and administrators.

I look forward to working with my friend, Clayton Yeutter, to achieve these ends. I wish he and his lovely and talented wife, Jeanne, well in their new and important endeavor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I congratulate President Bush on his selection of Clayton Keith Yeutter, Esq., as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and I am pleased to express my support and vote for his confirmation today. The President has selected a highly regarded trade expert, who is especially well-equipped to promote U.S. agriculture through an expanded share of the international market.

Mr. Yeutter is well-qualified for the position as Secretary of Agriculture as reflected in his impressive list of accomplishments and experiences. He earned a degree in animal husbandry, a law degree, and a Ph.D. in agriculture economics. Mr. Yeutter began his public service as an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture during the Nixon administration. He expanded into the arena of international trade during the Ford administration when he served as Deputy Special Trade Representative and later as U.S. Trade Representative for President Reagan.

My confidence in Mr. Yeutter's ability and integrity arises from having known and worked with him. His reputation has been built on devotion to hard work and determined yet good-natured persuasiveness, traits influenced by his years growing up in rural Nebraska. His 3½ years as Trade Representative was spent battling barriers to U.S. agriculture products. Through his determination at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] in Montreal, Mr. Yeutter displayed his ability to discipline international agriculture while maintaining the viability of the U.S. farmer. I am confident that Clayton Yeutter will continue his efforts in the international trade markets to promote U.S. agriculture at home and abroad.

This position of Secretary of Agriculture is especially critical in many of the Nation's agriculture and environmental matters, including the prevention of surface and ground water contamination, development of new and modified crops, pest management, and product development, research in the areas of animal diseases and biotechnology, and improved food safety. I long have believed that it is imperative to constantly improve the U.S. agriculture industry because it must compete with the rest of the world for a market for its products. I am confident that Mr. Yeutter will be an effective leader in these important areas.

I support the nomination of Mr. Yeutter to this post. If confirmed by the Senate, as I am sure he will be, I have every confidence that he will perform the new duties with exceptional skills, as he has in the other positions he has held in the past.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise to support the confirmation of Ambassador Clayton K. Yeutter, President Bush's nominee to be Secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The position of Secretary of Agriculture is among the most demanding in the Federal Government. While the American agricultural community has good reason to be optimistic as we approach a new decade, with the prospects of further increasing export markets, we need not look too far back over the past to be reminded of leaner and bleaker times. The challenges that lie ahead for agriculture are still great, and the choices that will be made by the Secretary will decide the direction of American agriculture well into the 1990's.

As a cattleman from Nebraska, Ambassador Yeutter has experienced the unique risks facing the American farmer. Even Congress cannot control the weather. His service in Government, as an Assistant Agriculture Secretary in the Nixon and Ford administrations and as the U.S. Trade Representative since 1985, has demonstrated his strong commitment to agriculture. Further, as chairman of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange during a challenging era, Ambassador Yeutter displayed a keen awareness of the role played by the agricultural commodity markets.

I have had the opportunity to work with Ambassador Yeutter on a number of trade issues involving agricultural issues. I have always found him to be thorough, astute and, above all, aggressive in pushing for expanded markets for U.S. products.

In particular, I am pleased to note that in his capacity as Secretary of Agriculture, Ambassador Yeutter will be able to continue his participation in the Uruguay round of the GATT negotiations, working for the reduction and eventual elimination of all trade-distorting agricultural subsidies.

In 1990, Congress and the administration will be faced with the task of writing a new farm bill. It is vitally important that a strong and experienced voice for agriculture be heard as that 1990 farm bill takes shape.

I believe we have that voice in Ambassador Yeutter, and he will advocate well for agriculture. Ambassador Yeutter has demonstrated his commitment to a free market and his experience as the Trade Representative will help agricultural industries to continue the progress made in opening new markets. His experience in foreign trade negotiations will provide continuity with current U.S. trade policies.

I am pleased to cast my vote in support of Clayton Yeutter's confirmation, for he has proven himself to be a man of integrity, ability and experience in the issues that will confront him as the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my statement be included in the RECORD as if read.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the excellent qualification that Clayton Yeutter brings the the position of Secretary of Agriculture. There is probably no individual that is more suited to take on the enormous responsibilities of this job.

Agriculture is a extremely complex industry that demands strong leadership. Agriculture employs more Americans than any other single industry. It provides $1 out of every $5 to our gross national product and it consistently has been the only sector of U.S. trade that has a positive trade balance. U.S. agriculture benefits from a comparative advantage over most other countries in many areas of production. That advantage must be used to further extend U.S. dominance in the world marketplace.

The experience as U.S. Trade Representative that Clayton Yeutter brings to this new job will give us a distinct advantage as we enter tough negotiations with our competitors. His practical experience as a Nebraska grain and livestock farmer will help him inject a more realistic view of how U.S. agriculture should position itself for the future.

The job he assumes will be neither easy nor glamorous. It will require countless time and effort, but I sincerely feel that there has not been a man in recent history who is more suited and qualified to be the Secretary of Agriculture. I look confidently forward to the future of agriculture with Clayton Yeutter at the helm of the Department of Agriculture of the most productive country in the world. Mr. President, I ask that my colleagues join me in a yes vote for Ambassador Clayton Yeutter as the next Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I am proud today to vote to confirm my fellow Nebraskan as Secretary of Agriculture. While he and I do not agree on each and every issue affecting agriculture, his understanding of production agriculture will enable him to contribute greatly to the State of Nebraska and the rest of the country.

Clayton Yeutter has led a career of committed public service and has also maintained contact with his family and with the roots from which he has grown. He has a sense of himself and his roots that will serve him well as Secretary of Agriculture.

Ambassador Yeutter understands that agriculture is still in a very fragile recovery. He also understands the paradox in this land of enormous capacity to produce food and the struggle to see that all who obviously need that food receive it.

One area in which I hope Ambassador Yeutter will focus a great deal of his attention as Secretary is in implementing sensible price stabilization measures. As Secretary, he will have at his disposal many tools that will enable him to manage inventories in such a way that we keep commodity prices within a reasonable range.

In my view, that should be the primary goal of our farm program. By using the Acreage Reduction Program, the Conservation Reserve Program, and the Paid Land Diversion Program, the Secretary can manage inventories in a range where the marketplace can produce the profit for the producer rather than have it come from the Government.

Again, I am pleased to vote to support my fellow Nebraskan and look forward to working with him in the coming years.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield any remaining time that I have.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the question of advise and consent to the nomination has been yielded back. All time has expired.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Clayton Yeutter, of Nebraska, to be Secretary of Agriculture? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

So the nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

The President will be immediately notified of the confirmation of the Secretary of Agriculture.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate under the previous order will now return to legislative session.

The majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of a resolution to be offered by the Senators from Montana, acknowledging Mike Mansfield's distinguished service, and that it be considered under the following time limitation: Twenty minutes on the resolution to be equally divided between Senators BAUCUS and BURNS, or their designees, and that no amendments or motions be in order with respect to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR PERIOD FOR MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the Mansfield resolution there be a period of 30 minutes for the conduct of routine morning business within which Senators may be permitted to speak for a period up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS, is recognized.

COMMENDING THE SERVICE OF MIKE MANSFIELD

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Mr. BURNS from the State of Montana I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 55) acknowledging the distinguished service that Michael J. (Mike) Mansfield has rendered on behalf of the people of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I will not seek recognition. I would like the clerk to read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the complete resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 55

Whereas Michael J. (Mike) Mansfield has served the Nation for over seventy years, as a soldier, educator, Congressman, Senator, and Ambassador;

Whereas Mike Mansfield served as Senate Majority Leader longer than any other person in history, and provided wise and steady leadership during a critical time in the history of the Nation;

Whereas Mike Mansfield served as the Ambassador to Japan for the United States longer than any other person in history, and advanced the interests of the Nation and improved relations between the United States and Japan during a difficult time of frequent trade problems;

Whereas Mike Mansfield provided valuable advice and counsel to Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan;

Whereas President Reagan recently awarded Mike Mansfield the Presidential Medal of Freedom and declared that he "set his indelible mark upon American foreign policy and distinguished himself as a dedicated public servant and loyal American";

Whereas throughout his career Mike Mansfield has exemplified the ideal public servant and displayed the highest qualities of dedication, integrity, and rectitude; and

Whereas Mike Mansfield has announced his retirement from full-time public service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate gratefully acknowledges the distinguished service that Michael J. (Mike) Mansfield has rendered on behalf of the people of the United States of America, and that the Senate expresses profound gratitude and best wishes to Mike Mansfield and to his wife, Maureen, upon the occasion of Mike Mansfield's retirement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS.

COMMENDING AMBASSADOR MANSFIELD FOR HIS YEARS OF SERVICE

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today the Senate not only will honor a distinguished citizen of the State of Montana, but we will also honor an American institution.

My colleague from Montana and I have introduced a Senate resolution to recognize the years of outstanding public service rendered our Nation by Mike Mansfield.

Mike is here today because he is a gracious man. I know, however, that he really doesn't approve of all the fuss we are making over his retirement as United States Ambassador to Japan.

This is quintessential Mansfield. Selfless. Always dedicated to the task at hand and never trying to focus attention on himself. He is, in essence, the ultimate public servant, because he never lost sight of the public he served.

Mike's public career is a mirror of American history. He served in the military during World War I, served 10 years in the House of Representatives and 24 years in the Senate.

For 16 years Mike served as majority leader of the Senate—longer than any other Senator.

And there was good reason to entrust this institution to Mike. His power was derived from his character—open to all. Honest to a tee. Respectful of individuals.

Mike was a Senator for all people. Whether he was presiding over this stately Chamber, or sharing breakfast with Montanans at the Oxford in Missoula, he was always Mike. To my colleagues in the modern Senate who don't know, Mike had no State offices. His office hours were held in the coffee shops, homes, and eateries across Montana.

During his congressional career, Mike served under seven Presidents and during three wars. He offered strong, steady leadership during periods of great political and social unrest. The phrase "they don't make 'em like they used to" was probably written to describe Mike Mansfield.

Mike began his career of public service at the age of 14, when he joined the Navy and became the youngest Montanan to serve in World War I.

After the war and a stint in the Marines, he returned to Montana and settled in Butte. He worked in the copper mines, over half a mile underground. In 1927, he enrolled at the Montana School of Mines to study mining engineering. While there, he met his future wife, Maureen Hayes.

Maureen has had a profound influence on Mike. She has been by his side, offered her advice and guidance, and been a gracious companion. Under her encouragement, Mike enrolled at the University of Montana in Missoula in 1928 to study history and Far Eastern affairs. Following graduation, he started teaching at the university.

In 1940, Mike entered his first congressional race. He came in third in the Democratic primary. Fortunately for Montana and our country, he ran again 2 years later.

During Mike's 10 years in the House of Representatives, he gained a reputation for honesty and hard work. He was recognized as one of the preeminent scholars on Asian affairs. His dedication took him to the Senate in 1952.

Mike would have been happy to spend his congressional career serving only the people of Montana. However, the Nation needed his leadership. In 1961, at the urging of President Kennedy and Vice President Johnson, Mike ran, for and was elected as Senate majority leader.

All majority leaders bring special qualities to the job and to the institution. Mike brought not only his experience and character to the job, he brought a personal style that helped the Senate during one of the most turbulent times in our Nation's history.

Maybe he couldn't calm stormy seas, but Mike was a steady rudder for a Senate confronted with complex and difficult problems.

Mike didn't twist arms or threaten. He respected Senators and understood their difficulties, and they in return gave him their trust.

Mike was an early opponent of the war in Vietnam, yet while he stood up for his principles, he also defended the principles of others. He did not fear disagreement, because he knew that from discourse springs truth. And from truth comes better Government.

Mike truly saw the Senate as a collection of 100 equals, each deserving to be heard. He was a calming influence during a difficult time. As a result, this institution is stronger today.

I sometimes wonder, in these days of television, how the country would respond to Mike Mansfield. Mike's five favorite answers were "Yes," "Nope," "Maybe," "Could Be," and "Do Not Know."

I believe that while he would have driven the producers of television crazy, he probably would have been lauded as a folk hero.

I recall that during an appearance on Meet the Press the reporters had to ask Mike over 80 questions in order to fill the time of the program.

But the bright lights of modern political life would not be of interest to Mike. To enlighten the public as to the important issues of the day was his forte.

It is because of this dedication to excellence that made Mike Mansfield such an outstanding choice to be our Ambassador to Japan. At a crucial time in United States-Japan relation, Mike's steady hand and mind have provided important leadership.

As Mike is fond of saying: "The bilateral relationship between the United States and Japan is the most important in the world—bar none." The United States and Japan are now the world's two economic superpowers. And relations between the economic superpowers have been bumpy over the last several years. Numerous bilateral disputes over Japanese trade barriers have flared to near trade war proportions.

During my trips to Japan, I have seen first-hand the respect the Japanese have for Mike. They value his integrity, his honesty and his willingness to listen. No American is more admired by the Japanese.

But Mike has also been praised by American businesses working to export to Japan. He has worked tirelessly for American trade interests in Japan. Instead of seeing his job as simply a diplomatic cheerleader, he has jumped into trade disputes on the United States side.

I witnessed Mike's dedication firsthand on my most recent trip to Japan.

I traveled to Japan in March of 1988 when the negotiations to open the Japanese market to United States beef exports had reached a critical juncture. Mike had undergone open-heart surgery only a few weeks before. But he accompanied me to meeting after meeting with Japanese officials to plead the United States case. Largely because of Mike's efforts, the Japanese agreed to open their market to United States beef exports.

As they say in Montana, you just can't keep a good man down.

In addition to helping with the day-to-day trade problems, Mike has also been perhaps the most influential thinker on the future of United States-Japan relations.

For years Mike has been urging the United States and Japan to move beyond the issue-by-issue approach to trade negotiations and conclude a free trade agreement.

Such an agreement may be years away. But I for one hope that this administration follows his advice and concludes a sweeping economic and trade agreement with Japan.

If such an agreement is eventually concluded, it will be a lasting tribute to Mike's powerful vision of future United States-Japanese relations.

Mike's legacy of honesty, integrity, and hard work serves as an inspiration for all of us. We don't use the phrase "public servant" very often anymore. That's partly because there are so few individuals who have dedicated their entire lives to working for the public interest. Mike Mansfield is one of those people.

Our Nation is fortunate to have had the services of Mike. It would be selfish of us to wish that Mike had continued on as Ambassador—he certainly deserves to retire. But we will miss him and we are losing a valued friend.

I know that I speak for the rest of my colleagues when I wish Mike and Maureen well. I also would like to thank them for the years of service they have given to our country.

Mike Mansfield used to say that when he left the Senate, he wanted to be forgotten. That is one wish we will never be able to fulfill. We will always remember him and we will always be grateful to him.

Mr. President, we have all heard the resolution as read by the clerk.

We are all here today honoring Mike Mansfield for many, many different reasons. Each of us who knew Mike has his own reason. Many of us who admired and respected Mike Mansfield have additional reasons.

But, Mr. President, as I stand here as a Member of the U.S. Senate from the State of Montana, I personally have introduced this resolution because, for me, Mike Mansfield has been not only a person whom we honor in the State of Montana and we honor in the country, but a person whom we honor as an American institution.

There is no man or woman in the State of Montana who is as revered, who is as respected as Mike Mansfield.

When I first ran for the Senate in 1978, my pollster put my name on a thermometer, along with Mike Mansfield and other statewide figures, and I do not have to tell you who came in first. In fact, my pollster said in all of his years of polling no other person has ever made it as high on the thermometer index question in any other State in the Nation than Mike Mansfield, with one possible exception.

That was the Senator who was one of Mike Mansfield's friends in the U.S. Senate, his companion, George Aiken, of Vermont.

Mike Mansfield is still as popular in Montana, and the final most important point I can make about Mike Mansfield is that he has been truly a dedicated and selfless public servant all the years he served our State and our country.

As Senators know, he first ran for Congress in 1940 and he was unsuccessful in that effort. Fortunately for the State of Montana and the country, he ran again and was successful. Since 1942 he served continuously in both Houses of Congress until 1976.

Mike Mansfield is very selfless. He did not seek the limelight. I can think of many instances and many times when the Montana delegation, which I fortunately was a member of when Mike was still a member of our delegation, would be honored someplace in Montana, or someplace in the country. It always struck me that the person who least sought the limelight, who least sought the attention, was the one who deserved it more than anybody else, and that was Mike Mansfield.

Mike always stood in the back and let others seek the limelight or tried to get the praise for a group effort or for efforts that he took on their behalf.

The fact of the matter is, the best evidence we have that Mike was so selfless is that here we are today. We all know that Mike is a bit embarrassed at all of the honor that is being heaped upon him. He is embarrassed because he is a true public servant. He was a public servant of the people of the country and the State, not for himself as an individual. And it is for that reason that Mike Mansfield is so popular and that people respect and admire him so much.

In my State of Montana, too, he is very down to earth, very much a person whom everyone respected and spoke to not as Senator Mansfield, not as Mr. Majority Leader, but as Mike. Mike was Mike to everyone in Montana. He put on no airs. He did not seek the limelight. He was a person who worked very hard for his State.

He also respected the individual. He remembered the name of every single person whom he met because he knew how important that was, not so much politically, but for that individual. He also respected individuals by calling meetings on time. If he set a meeting at 9 or at 10 o'clock, it started at 9 or 10 o'clock, something that we Senators, I think, should pay much more attention to.

But, finally, and probably most important to me, Mike Mansfield is the main reason why I sought public office. When I was younger, I was in law school and worked for the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, DC. I must say, I had absolutely no interest in politics. I thought politics was dirty. I thought it was tainted. I thought it was corrupted, disgusting, idiotic, and stupid that anybody in his right mind would ever want to run for public office.

I was thinking about all of this about 20 years ago, and I thought, "Well, one person I should talk to is someone I admire very much, and that is Mike Mansfield."

So I walked over to the U.S. Senate. I walked over to the reception room not too far from here. I wrote my name on the card and I had the page bring the card in to Senator Mansfield and I waited. About 5 minutes later, suddenly there was the man standing right next to me, saying, "Hi, Max"—Mike Mansfield, whom I had last met 2 or 3 years earlier. He remembered my name. He sat down and we talked and he strongly encouraged me to run for public office.

So that is why I am here today. It is because I want to honor a man who has been very important to me.

I found that politics is not dirty, tainted, corrupted, and disgusting, as some of the American public might think, unless you let it be that way; that this profession is like any other profession; and the more we try to achieve the standards of Mike Mansfield, the more we will realize and portray the impression to the American people that politics is a very honorable profession and, in fact, is not dirty or tainted, but is one of America's highest callings.

It is that selflessness of Mike Mansfield which led me to run for public office. It is that selflessness of Mike Mansfield which I know has inspired so many others. It is an honor and a privilege for me to be from the State of Montana and to be able to offer this resolution.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I would like to yield first to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Montana list me as an original cosponsor of the resolution.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Is the Senator yielding the floor now?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, all of us in this Chamber, regardless of party, are proud of Mike Mansfield because he epitomizes what we each seek to be; a wise statesman. He served as majority leader of the Senate longer than anyone else, for 15 years, and then went on to establish another record for longevity in the position of Ambassador to Japan, which he has held for the past 11 years. He retired this month from his diplomatic post at the age of 85 and returned to Washington with his wife, Maureen, to be honored by the State Department for distinguished public service.

In his early years he worked as a miner in his native State of Montana and also served in the 1920's as a U.S. marine in Asia, an experience which awakened a lifelong interest in the Pacific region. After studying mining engineering, he made an early career switch and became a student and teacher of history and political science, specializing in Asia and the Pacific. He came to Congress in 1942 and was elected to the Senate a decade later. A recent interview with the Washington Post, which was published in a question-and-answer format by reporter Don Oberdorfer, captures his straightforward wisdom and the essence of his character. In it he urges us to become "less emotional, more practical" in our world view. In order that my colleagues and others might gain from his insights, I ask that the article, "Japan: The View From Mansfield," be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JAPAN: THE VIEW FROM MANSFIELD

AS ROLES SHIFT, UNITED STATES SHOULD BECOME "LESS EMOTIONAL, MORE PRACTICAL"

Mike Mansfield, 85, is retiring from 50 years of government service on Friday after one of the most distinguished careers in American public life. Elected from Montana to the House in 1942 and the Senate in 1952, Mansfield served as Senate majority leader for 15 years (1961-76), longer than anyone else. Since then he has served as U.S. ambassador to Japan for 11 years (1977-88) under Presidents Carter and Reagan, holding that key diplomatic post longer than anyone before him.

A U.S. Marine in Asia in the 1920s and a professor of Far Eastern history in the 1930s, Mansfield was one of the ranking U.S. experts on Asia and the Pacific even before his long service in Tokyo.

Last week, shortly after a formal retirement ceremony at the State Department, Mansfield was interviewed by Washington Post staff writer Don Oberdorfer. Excerpts from that interview:

In the early postwar years you were credited with helping convince President Truman to keep the emperor of Japan on the throne rather than depose him at the end of the war. And I was wondering if you'd ever discussed this with the emperor, what your relationship with him was, and, now that he's dead, how you feel about your advice and about what the emperor meant to Japan in the postwar period.

I'm sure that Truman called on a lot of others for advice on the future of the emperor. In August or September 1945, he did call Sen. Elbert Thomas, a Democrat from Utah, former missionary to Japan, who spoke the language and had broadcast to Japan during the war. And me.

Mr. Truman said he was concerned about what should be done about the emperor. He asked if we had any advice or counsel.

We both told him that it was absolutely necessary that the emperor be maintained in office and that he symbolized Japan, that remaining in office he could keep Japan together and that deposed it would cause chaos, confusion, confrontation and great difficulties. He thanked us and we left.

I had no conversations with the emperor on the subject. My meetings with him were all formal, in the presence of others, tied to the duties of an ambassador. . . .

What is your estimate of what Emperor Hirohito meant to Japan in the post-war era?

I think he meant a great deal. . . . He was not one who swaggered or boasted; he was modest, not forward. He was interested in his people. On several occasions he expressed his full faith and confidence in the Constitution, his desire for world peace and his distress, on official visits, about the war . . . I think he played a great part in bringing about a feeling in Japan which helped to raise it from the ashes and to the great power it is today.

A week or two ago in Newsweek magazine, former prime minister Nakasone wrote, "I often said to Mr. Reagan, 'You are the pitcher and I am the catcher. Throw me a good pitch.' But I also told him, 'You have to listen to the catcher's advice sometimes.'" Nakasone went on to say, "If the Reagan legacy continues, the pitcher-catcher relationship between the United States and Japan will last, with mutual trust and cooperation for the foreseeable future."

How do you react to that way of describing the relationship?

He did say those things, not once but several times. I would agree with his sum-up.

I would anticipate that President Bush will carry out the policies which Shultz and President Reagan have laid down because as Japan has become a superpower economically, it has assumed greater responsibilities and undertaken greater burdens in defense and foreign aid; for example, in bringing about a change in its domestic and economic structure so that there is less emphasis on exports and more on imports and more on domestic development.

And I would assume that as this relationship strengthens that now and again the positions will be reversed, and that sometimes we'll be the catcher and Japan the pitcher and other times we'll be the pitcher and Japan will be the catcher. They're very great on baseball, as you know.

But that's fine because as this interlocking and integration of our two countries becomes more apparent, there's going to have to be more give and take. . . .

Japan has achieved maturity and majority. Japan is one among equals, one of the two superpowers of the world economically, one of the great powers of the world generally speaking. And with more of the burden which we want them to assume, more of the responsibility which they must and are able and willing to undertake, must go also I think a greater share in the decisionmaking. So that matters can be worked out on a cooperative basis and not brought up all of a sudden and through a statement laid down as established fact and/or policy.

In your opinion is it inherently unhealthy or perhaps even dangerous to have Japan be the No. 1 creditor of the United States in the world, as it is today?

I don't like it, but you have to face up to reality. Less than a decade ago we were the world's greatest creditor nation, now we're the world's biggest debtor nation. But Japan has been able to take advantage of the times, look further into the future than we in an economic sense seem prepared to do. They've turned out products for which there's a demand based on reliability, reputation and follow-through service.

I would hope that it would not be considered dangerous. I would hope that we would become less emotional, more practical, and recognize the advantages which accrue to both countries and do something about our foreign debt.

Some people feel that the attitudes of the Japanese people and Japanese businessmen have been transformed from a respect for the United States to a kind of pity for the United States, which is seen as a great power which is slipping. Do you encounter that?

Not pity. Concern. Because they know so much depends upon the United States. They want the United States to be the No. 1 economic power in the world. They want to be able to continue to penetrate into our markets. They wish that we would do something about the national debt and the foreign debt and those are of our making, of our responsibility.

Under [Prime Minister] Takeshita they're bringing about a restructuring of the domestic economy and doing a good job. They have opened up their markets much more. . . . It's not a case of pity because basically the Japanese like us. It's one of concern because they think that if we fail in retaining the No. 1 spot that they could well fail also.

Do you have any job description for your successor? What are the attributes of a successful ambassador in Japan?

Well, if he's a professional [diplomat] I hope he has an understanding of business because trade is going to be the issue for years to come. If he's a businessman I hope he has a good understanding of diplomacy. It's not going to be an easy job but it's going to center almost entirely in one area which will be difficult because of the protectionist sentiment which exists in the Congress.

Finally, what would you like to be remembered for in your long career in public service?

[Long pause.] Nothing really. Let the record speak for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 2 minutes allotted to the Senator from Hawaii has expired.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], is recognized.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I first would ask unanimous consent to be added as a cosponsor to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, Mike Mansfield was the majority leader when I arrived in the Senate a bit more than 20 years ago. He was providing great leadership at that time. He was tremendously helpful to me and others who arrived in the Senate at that time in the history of this body.

What was most noteworthy to me about Mike's leadership of the U.S. Senate and his leadership in our country was his great stress upon the important issues and his focus upon what was important and his lack of concern about the unimportant things that so many of us find ourselves spending all too much time on. As a result of that, he made a great imprint upon not only the work of our Senate but, through that work, upon our country and our world with his interests and his knowledge of foreign policy, not only in Asia, but in all parts of this world of ours, and many important legislative accomplishments on domestic issues that have benefited the lives of our people, our laws and programs, and policies because of Mike Mansfield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

All time allotted to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] has expired. The remaining time is under the control of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS].

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, this is a proud moment for me to stand here on the floor of the U.S. Senate and pay tribute to Ambassador Mike Mansfield—Senator Mike Mansfield—Montanan Mike Mansfield.

Mike Mansfield has retired from service to this Nation from his most recent role as our Ambassador to Japan—and I think I speak for all Montanans when I say that his service will be sorely missed.

The Ambassador, and his lovely wife Maureen, have done more to build a strong and positive relationship with that important partner in the Far East than others had done in decades. Ambassador Mike Mansfield understood the importance of the Pacific Rim to the United States when few others did. He talked of trade with Japan when others were concentrating their efforts on Europe and the Atlantic.

I can think of no better representative of traditional American values than Ambassador Mike Mansfield. The Japanese, I believe, have a much better understanding of what America is truly all about since Mike Mansfield occupied the Ambassador's residence in Tokyo.

The Ambassador was always available to offer help and advice to Americans seeking business opportunity in Japan—and he was available to offer insights to Japanese for our own sometimes inscrutable society. Ambassador Mike Mansfield truly has been a bridge across the Pacific over which a half a generation of Japanese and Americans have moved toward greater cooperation and understanding.

Serving as Ambassador to Japan is just the culmination of a long and distinguished career for Senator Mike Mansfield. Mike Mansfield came to Washington first to the House of Representatives when he was elected to 1942.

Congressman Mike Mansfield paid careful attention to constituent needs and services as a Member of the House and moved to the Senate a decade later in 1952. Senator Mike Mansfield was elected the majority leader of the Senate in 1961, and he held that position longer than any other Senator before or since.

Mike Mansfield served as majority leader during a tumultuous period in American history. He filled that role in a fair and bipartisan way that lent enormous stature to the office. Senator Mike Mansfield brought the values of Montana to Washington, DC—the equality of its plains and the humbling quality of its mountains.

Ambassador—Senator—citizen—Mike Mansfield is first and foremost a Montanan. Montana and Mike Mansfield are almost synonymous terms. Mike was a history professor at the University of Montana when he first became involved in politics. Today, the library at the university campus in Missoula is named the Mike and Maureen Mansfield Library in honor of their contributions to the State and its people.

Many of the books, particularly those on the subjects of Japan and the Pacific Rim, still bear the imprint of Mike's note pen. Montanan Mike Mansfield heads the Mansfield Center at the University of Montana, a research center dedicated to fostering the highest ethical standards in government as well as making contributions to the Nation's Asian policy—two items close to Mike Mansfield's heart.

The world—this Nation—and the people of Montana—owe a debt of gratitude to Mike Mansfield.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana controls the time.

Mr. BURNS. I will yield to the honorable Senator from Kansas for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think we will have to get additional time. I would hope we have additional time. We have a number of speakers on this side and perhaps the two Senators from Montana might make that request.

Mr. President, I am honored to join as a cosponsor of this resolution, and very happy to have this public chance to say "thank you" to Mike Mansfield.

Thank you, Mike, for all your years of public service—as a great Senator, and great Ambassador.

Thank you, too, for lending even greater statute to this already great institution; for the many pieces of landmark legislation on which you left your personal mark; and for the many acts of statesmanship which marked your Senate tenure.

And thank you, Mike, for representing our Nation with such distinction for so many years in Japan; and for doing so much to make the United States-Japanese alliance stronger, and even more effective as a force for regional and global stability and peace.

Finally, Mike, thank you for being a friend—a personal friend of this Senator, and a friend, in the broader sense, of all who sit in the Senate, making us feel a part of this body when he was the majority leader, never giving anyone any preference, treating us a equals, as we should be treated. That meant a great deal to many of us in those years, who were sort of feeling our way in the U.S. Senate. We knew we had someone in charge who would not take advantage of us, who would treat us all alike and treat us fairly. That is about all you can ask. About all you have around here is your word.

When Mike Mansfield gave his word, that was it. And meetings did start on time, as the distinguished senior Senator from Montana has pointed out. Nine o'clock was nine o'clock, not 9:10, not 9:15.

For all those reasons and for all the support that he has given us when we traveled to Japan, and for his work for our Nation, I say thank you, Mike Mansfield, for everyone in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I would like to have recognized the honorable Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], is recognized for such time as he uses.

Mr. HATFIELD. What a wealth of material Mike Mansfield's life provides anyone who wishes to make commentary. I join with my colleagues in commending Mike Mansfield for a distinguished political public career. I would like to just take one small facet out of Mike's life, because I think that it illustrates a point that oftentimes popularity in the political life and respect do not go hand in hand.

In fact, very seldom in political history do you find someone who has maintained both the top-rated popularity, as the Senator from Montana has recited today that has followed Mike's career, and respect. I can only point to the obvious, because Disraeli, Gladstone, Churchill, De Gaulle, all had times when popularity left them and they were defeated in their political life. But never even in the trough of unpopularity, or less popularity, did their respect ever crumble. Respect was sustained throughout their political lives through both victory and defeat.

But Mike Mansfield is one of those rare persons who has maintained both respect and popularity in tandem, and I think, if he were to give any kind of comment on why this has happened in his life, he would say because he sought respect over popularity. Respect was the bedrock of his career, and respect was the sustaining power of his life. Popularity was the byproduct. It was not the objective. And I think, therefore, he could play a role model for all of us, not only from the point of ideal, of seeking respect first, but also the pragmatic, practical politics that followed.

He, indeed, had his priorities straight, and I respect him for it and thank him for providing us that role model.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield to our majority leader, Senator MITCHELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be an additional 10 minutes for consideration of this resolution with the time to be equally divided between Senator BAUCUS and Senator BURNS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho, [Mr. MCCLURE].

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose in taking the floor at this time to repeat what has already been said so eloquently and so appropriately by the other speakers because I think certainly Mike Mansfield has earned the respect of Members of this body. He has certainly earned the devotion of Montana. And he has that respect and that popularity because he earned it.

There are just two things that I want to say in addition to saying to my friends who have spoken: amen, indeed you have spoken the sentiments of each of us. And that is to remind those who served with Mike Mansfield in this body during the period of years particularly when he was majority leader, that many, many times on the floor of the Senate things had reached an impasse and Mike would come in from his office and calm the atmosphere and bring about a resolution in a way that is unique to this body because of the respect everyone had on both sides of the aisle for his judgment and his fairness and his ability to be fair to both in a completely evenhanded and nonpartisan—not bipartisan but nonpartisan way.

Mike Mansfield, in addition to respect which he earned, and in addition to the popularity that he has enjoyed, also has the affection that many of us have for a man with whom we served, who, by his example and his personal treatment of each of us, has earned our personal affection for a uniquely qualified human being.

Mr. President, it has certainly been my pleasure to serve with him. My life has been enriched by it. Certainly my service in the Senate has benefited from his example. But I think both he and Maureen know of the affection with which he is held by people of all walks of life in both parties on both sides of this aisle and inside and outside of this Chamber.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding this time.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the resolution honoring the distinguished career of our beloved colleague and friend, Ambassador Mike Mansfield. Ambassador Mansfield embodies many fine qualities—a strong sense of commitment to his country, an unyielding dedication to duty and unquestioned integrity. He possesses those personal traits each of us aspire to attain.

Ambassador Mansfield was born in New York City in 1903, and 3 years later he moved with his family to his adopted home State of Montana. At the early age of 14, he served as a U.S. Navy seaman during World War I. After the war, he was graduated from Montana State University at Missoula in 1933. He received a master's degree from that fine institution the following year, then taught history and political science at his alma mater until 1942.

He was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1943, and served in that capacity until being elected to the U.S. Senate in 1952. During his 25-year tenure in the Senate, he served ably in myriad leadership positions, including Democratic whip from 1957 to 1961 and majority leader from 1961 to his retirement in 1977. Ambassador Mansfield holds the distinction of being history's longest serving majority leader.

Upon his retirement, he was named Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Japan. At the time of his appointment, foreign relations with Japan were of utmost significance to the United States. Ambassador Mansfield was credited with bringing our two nations much closer, and with laying the foundation for a harmonious future between the United States and Japan. In the history of our Nation, few have served more ably in such a sensitive and important post.

It is common in this Chamber that from time to time we recognize the deed of our former colleagues. Yet the achievements and character of Ambassador Mansfield are outstanding; among our Nation's great leaders, he has few peers. He is a man whose friendship I value greatly, and I am confident that he will continue to serve his Nation well in whatever capacity he should desire.

I would like to take this opportunity to wish Ambassador Mansfield and his lovely wife, Maureen, much happiness and good health in their future years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana, [Mr. BAUCUS].

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that I might be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I just want to take a moment to add my voice to that of others with respect to Mike Mansfield. I had the opportunity to know him not only as a Congressman from the State of Washington, working with him when he was a Senator from Montana; but later in private life, Mr. President, I had the great pleasure to call upon him and to ask him for help on behalf of both the United States and, at other times, my individual State of Washington when he was Ambassador to Japan. He was one of the finest emissaries we possibly could have had in a difficult time in our existence and in our relationship with Japan.

He is the kind of person, I want to state to the senior Senator from Montana, that we all were proud to not only to have served with, but Montana gave a great gift to the United States when they sent him to Japan. He was honored by the Japanese people, as well as by those of the United States. He has done a great deal for all of us, and we are grateful he was here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time? The Senator from Montana, [Mr. BURNS].

Mr. BURNS. I yield 2 minutes to Senator HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, all of us are grouping for words to express our feelings about Mike Mansfield. The words "role model" have been used several times. He certainly was that to me. Many a time he and I closed up the Senate. Then Senator Mansfield and I would have conversations. I learned so much through the little things he said.

He handled the press with such effectiveness. He never was misquoted by the press, I will say to my friend from Virginia [Mr. WARNER]. He would either answer by saying "yep" or "nope," and it is very difficult to misquote a Senator or anybody else under those circumstances.

Senator Mansfield, and Ambassador Mansfield, is one of the most unforgettable characters I have ever known and, as Senator MCCLURE said, he has had an impact on our lives. We all are indebted to him.

I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding the time to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana, [Mr. BAUCUS].

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I had the privilege and opportunity to serve in this body for 1 year in 1974 before I came to the body through my election in 1976. Senator Mansfield was the leader at that time.

Of all the people I have met in my political career, I know of none who have so held themselves up on a pinnacle of integrity. Senator Mansfield was integrity personified. His word was his bond.

He was the kind of Senator that even when he was a leader never attempted to tell you how to vote. He respected your vote whether you agreed with him or disagreed with him.

I believe he has added so much to the luster of this body, and I feel a great privilege to have the opportunity to just say a word of my respect for him as a public servant. He has added so much to the Senate's history. I am proud to have had the opportunity to serve with him during that 1-year period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to Senator WARNER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia, Senator WARNER.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that I may be made a cosponsor of this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the former majority leader taught me one of the greatest lessons in humility that I ever received, and it occurred exactly 20 years ago this month.

I had been nominated by the President to join the Navy Secretary. I strode into his office in my brash, cocky, somewhat pompous way and sat down. I began telling him a little bit about myself, and he sat there and his eyes riveted on me. He listened very carefully.

I said, "You know, Mr. Leader, I may be the first man in the history of the United States of America ever to have served in the Marines and the Navy to become its boss." He looked at me and said, "My, Mr. WARNER, that's impressive." And I just felt, as we all do, as big as life.

Then he quietly said with a twinkle in his eye: "You know, Mr. WARNER, that reminds me of my earlier days. I enlisted in the Army and served in the Army. I enlisted in the Navy. I served in the Navy." And he paused. "I enlisted in the Marines, and I served in the Marines. Do you suppose I may have set some record to be the first Senator ever to have served in three of the uniforms of the United States?"

I say to my colleagues, I was flattened, and it has taken me 20 years to slowly build back the confidence to relate that story about that great man.

I thank the Presiding Officer and the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator has 1 minute 15 seconds. The senior Senator has 2 minutes.

Mr. BURNS. I yield that minute to Senator DOMENICI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, everyone has attested to the tremendous life and contributions of Mike Mansfield. I was very young and junior when I came here. Mike Mansfield was a tremendous help to me. And he has been ever since. Within the past 18 months, I went to Japan with a small delegation from New Mexico. Ambassador Mansfield made special arrangements to brief us, himself, for well over an hour. He even permitted a member of the New Mexico press to attend. He broke his own rules to do that.

I will never forget it.

If anyone left a big shadow on the horizon called the United States of America with their life in all respects, Mike Mansfield did. Anyone who wants a model for their life—a life with an impact as a citizen on this great country and its business and its people—they can look at Mike Mansfield's life.

I am delighted to be on the resolution and to have an opportunity to say a few words about this great man.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, we yield back the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Senator BAUCUS.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield myself 30 seconds. Mr. President, one final point, and that is Mike Mansfield is not only a model for all of us in the Senate, he should be a model along with his wife Maureen for all married couples in America. Mike Mansfield started out as a mucker in Butte, MT. About a half mile underground he dug, he picked copper, he worked in the underground mines.

At that time he met Maureen Hayes who lived in Butte, MT. She was a schoolteacher. Maureen and Mike got married. It was Maureen who persuaded Mike to leave the mines, to go to school and get an education. He did so. While she worked, Mike went to school. Mike then became a history professor at the University of Montana and ever since, Mike and Maureen have been very close, very dedicated. So close and so dedicated to each other that they are a model to, I think, all marriages in our country.

Mike always refers to Maureen, always mentions Maureen, always points out it was Maureen who provided his inspiration, his guidance. She is his best friend, the person whom he always turned to in matters that were of deep importance to him.

So I think it is important to realize that Mike Mansfield is a true man in every sense of the word, not only as a servant, but also as a husband and also as a father. A tremendous man. I yield the remaining time to the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, every day those of us who serve in the Senate must struggle with the many and conflicting demands upon our attention, our time and our decisions. Every human defines the public interest through the prism of his self-interest, and all of us wrestle with our consciences daily as we seek to represent a variety of interests, many of them conflicting.

I think it is particularly significant that we pay tribute to Mike Mansfield now at a time when we must candidly acknowledge that the impression held of the Congress by the American people is unfortunately very low. We need in our daily lives, in our daily actions to act with the same dignity, the same selflessness, the same character, the same commitment to the national interests that Mike Mansfield demonstrated through his entire public career.

I believe that Mike Mansfield represents the best that American democracy has to offer. Simple and direct, forthright and honest, always committed to the public interest and to fairness in reaching whatever decision is made. Although he held important positions and possessed great power, Mike Mansfield never abused those positions and never used that power to advance his personal interests or to gain an unfair advantage over an adversary.

I am pleased to join my colleagues in adopting this resolution unanimously, and I commend the distinguished Senators from Montana for proposing it. I hope as he leaves public service, after a lifetime of contribution to his Nation, Mike Mansfield will make one further contribution, and that is inspiring all of us to act in the way he acted, to live in the way he lived and, most important, to meet our public responsibilities with the same honor and commitment which he demonstrated.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent that Senator DASCHLE be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that articles from various Montana newspapers concerning Mike Mansfield be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Butte (MT) Standard, Nov. 15, 1988]

MANSFIELD RETIRES: SCHOLAR, SENATOR, STATESMAN DESERVES A LIFE OF HIS OWN

Nearly everyone who knew him has a favorite "Mike" story.

Some are humorous, such as his legendary "yeps" and "nopes" when answering questions from the national press.

Others are personal, such as the speed with which he, as U.S. Senate Majority Leader, could clear roadblocks for individual Montanans.

After 11 years as Ambassador to Japan, Mansfield, now 85-years-old, has announced his retirement from public service.

He began his career as a member of the House of Representatives in 1942 and accepted his first foreign service assignment from Franklin Roosevelt.

He served as the Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate for 16 years, a record tenure.

Mansfield Centers have been established in the state in recent years to begin to honor him.

Although, always wary of mixing his personal life with his public service, the ambassador, reportedly, has kept a good distance between himself and any fund-raising activities.

Mike Mansfield, citizen, probably is unthinkable to some people.

Already there are noises being made about bringing him back to the University of Montana to teach. He taught Far Eastern and Latin American history there when the school was Montana State University.

Surely his wealth of knowledge would be of value.

But, a question comes into mind.

Here's Mike Mansfield. He has been in public service for nearly 50 years.

History wil judge him as one of the preeminent public figures in U.S. politics in the 20th Century.

He served under Presidents, Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Carter, Ford and Reagan.

Should he be called upon to do more?

It might be impolite to ask.

Perhaps the man needs a little time to contemplate his career, perhaps to write a book or two.

Obviously, if he could overcome his sense of loyalty and natural reticence, he would have some great stories to tell about the major events of the century.

He served in World War I, was in Congress for World War II, Korea and Vietnam and was the principal observer of the development of Japan, Inc.

Manfield's level of expertise might never again be duplicated, particularly by someone who worked in the Butte underground mines to attend Montana Tech.

So, the desire by the academic community to tap into his vast storehouse of understanding is natural.

Perhaps, however, the man should be left alone to pursue his goals.

Should those goals include a seminar or two, an undergraduate class or two, a lecture or two, so be it.

Mansfield deserves great thanks for his service. His efforts on behalf of the United States and particularly Montana have been monumental.

We wish him well and urge restraint on the part of those who would seek to cajole him back into a public role, until he has a chance to define what kind of a private life he might like to lead.

MIKE MANSFIELD

Six years as Congressman for Montana's western district.

Twenty-four years as a United States senator from Montana, with the final 16 years as the senate's majority leader. The latter is a record.

Eleven and a half years as America's ambassador to Japan, which is also a record.

This adds up to more than 40 years of public service for Montana's Mike Mansfield, who will retire at the end of the year as ambassador to Japan at age 85.

A rich and very productive four decades it has been too for Montana, the nation, Japan and other countries of the world.

Mike, a Democrat, has been an extremely able politician of course. He had to be to accomplish all that he has.

But politics always took a back seat when it came to the best interests of his state and nation.

Voters knew this.

They respected Mike. Republicans and Democrats alike in Montana kept him in the Congress.

An example of the affection and respect Central Montanans have for Mike Mansfield occurred during his late years in the senate.

It was a Monday noon, the time Lewistown Rotarians meet.

One of the club's members had skipped the meeting because Mansfield had telephoned to say that he would be coming to his office.

"Mike," the Rotarian said, "we will be late but I would like to take you to Rotary anyway."

Mike's answer: "Let's go."

And they did.

The club's members were well into their lunch when Mansfield walked in, but the Rotarians rose to their feet as a man and cheered.

Which was particularly indicative of their respect for Mansfield, as most members of the club are probably Republicans.

Mike Mansfield was first appointed as America's ambassador to Japan by President Carter, a Democrat.

But when Ronald Reagan, a Republican, took office in January 1981 one of his first actions was to reappoint Mansfield as his ambassador to Japan.

Mansfield served Reagan just as faithfully as he had Carter.

When Reagan or Carter disagreed with policies of the Japanese government, Mike Mansfield would say so to the Japanese officials. He did this with courtesy and respect, and with understanding of the Japanese position too.

Mike did the same with Carter and Reagan when he felt their positions in their dealings with Japan weren't in America's best interests.

The two Presidents respected this, and sometimes changed their minds as a result.

And the Japanese?

Well, they didn't always agree with Mike, but they loved him.

Sosuke Uno, Japanese foreign minister, expressed this clearly after Mansfield's announced retirement when he said:

"He (Mansfield) was a good friend who understands Japan quite well. It was truly fortunate that we had a person like Ambassador Mansfield in Tokyo for a long time. . . . His warm personality has earned everyone's respect and love."

Mike Mansfield has said often in recent years that the coming century will be one of the Pacific . . . that Japan and other Asian countries on the Pacific Rim will be far more important to us as a market and influence than has been Europe.

He gives credit to President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz for their realization of this. "They are," Mansfield said, "the first men to occupy these posts to show an interst in and understanding of Japan and Asia in general."

So much more could be said about Mike Mansfield . . . his service to state and country . . . the respect and affection Montanans and Americans generally have for him.

But hopefully these things make the point.

So good luck Mike in the years ahead.

And we're glad that you will be spending some of your time with us here in Montana.

MANSFIELD WILL BE MISSED; MONTANA'S PERFECT DIPLOMAT WILL BE A TOUGH ACT TO FOLLOW

For as long as most Montanans can remember, Mike Mansfield has been actively engaged in the service of his state and country. As a young Montana congressman, he helped save Flathead Lake from senseless destruction by the Army Corps of Engineers. Through some of our nation's most traumatic times—civil rights battles, the Vietnam War and Watergate—we gained from Mansfield's steady statesmanship as Senate majority leader. More recently, as ambassador to Japan, Mansfield has helped strengthen U.S.-Japanese ties at a time when rapidly changing technology and world economics threatened to drive a wedge between the two nations.

Now, at 85, Mansfield is retiring from public service. His departure leaves us a little sad, a little apprehensive about his immediate successor but extremely appreciative of the nearly half-century he has dedicated to the betterment of Montana and America.

Mansfield, who underwent major heart surgery earlier this year, is retiring as the longest-serving envoy to Japan, having been appointed to the post by President Carter in 1977, shortly after Mansfield's retirement from the Senate. Over the past 11 years, Mansfield has done more than represent America's interests in Japan: He's helped awaken Americans to the fact that they, too, must change in order to succeed in this fast-changing world.

Mansfield has critics who contend he's been too soft on the Japanese, that he is too sympathetic to their concerns and not forceful enough in demanding changes in Japanese economic policies affecting the United States.

But, in fact, Mansfield has been remarkably successful in Tokyo. During his watch, Japan has reduced trade barriers—albeit, not enough—increased its share of defense costs and greatly expanded its foreign aid.

As Mansfield pointed out this week, U.S. agriculture exports to Japan will reach $7.6 billion this year, up from $5.7 billion last year. The U.S. trade deficit with Japan remains high, but is moving in the right direction—$52 billion this year, down from $60 billion last year.

Both as senator and ambassador, Mansfield preferred to lead, not push. Persuasion, he once said, was his only instrument of power. His realistic understanding of his nation's and his own source of power was the secret of his success as a senator and diplomat.

Sony Corp. Chairman Akio Morita once said, "If Lee Iacocca says it, Japanese become defensive, But if Mike (Mansfield) says it, in his way, he gets listened to."

In appointing his successor, George Bush will do well to select an ambassador who shares Mansfield's belief that the U.S.-Japanese relationship must be a true partnership devoid of patronage or antagonism. Tough talkers who believe might makes right may be popular at home, but they have no place in the real world.

Mansfield is the model politician, the perfect diplomat. He stands out as the quintessential statesman of our time. He'll certainly be missed.

[From the Billings (MT) Gazette, Nov. 16, 1988]

MIKE IS COMING HOME

Professor, Congressman, Senator, Ambassador hang on Mike Mansfield's name like medals on a general's chest.

But Mansfield will always be "Mike" to Montanans, and that is a tribute to the man.

Mike announced his retirement Monday, and that reminded us of the title we'd most like to call him: neighbor.

He has held two of America's most important posts, majority leader in the Senate and ambassador to Japan, with great competence and aplomb.

He has seemed impervious to the years, transcending the petty, physical rules that govern the rest of us, brushing aside his 85 years and coronary bypass surgery last January to serve.

His decision to step down as ambassador was weighed carefully with the good of the American people uppermost, as always, in his mind, delaying it to clear his desk.

Mansfield steps down from the high post at a time when the relationship between America and Japan is flourishing. He goes, knowing "we can leave with our heads high and ours arms swinging."

Japanese Foreign Minister Susuke Uno said he regarded the departure of his good friend with "deep regret."

We can understand the Japanese people's sense of loss. That same feeling has permeated the state since Mansfield left the prairies and mountains of Montana. We have missed him greatly, and already plans are being made for him to share his views with the young people of the state should he return here to teach.

Mike we've missed you, and we'll welcome you back. And until we see you, don't forget: "Tap 'er light."

[From the Great Falls (MT) Tribune, Nov. 16, 1988]

MIKE MANSFIELD IS HEADING HOME

Montana's senior statesman is coming home.

After ten years in the United States House of Representatives, four terms in the United States Senate—a record 16 years as majority leader—and more than 11 years as this nation's ambassador to Japan, Mike Mansfield is retiring.

In announcing his retirement last Monday, Mansfield showed he hasn't forgotten Montana. He and his wife Maureen plan to return to Montana—but not in the winter.

Mansfield has traveled far from his boyhood home in back of a small Great Falls grocery store. As a young man his wondering ways found him lying about his age to get into World War I. He saw some of the world then and wanted more. His interest in the Far East was sparked during his tour of duty in the Marines. At the age of 19, a veteran of the Navy, the Army and the Marines, he left the service and returned to Butte.

From the mines of Butte he went to college, eventually becoming a history professor at the University of Montana. There his political career was launched. He served in the U.S. House of Representatives before moving on to the Senate in 1953.

Never one to seek publicity, Mansfield accomplished much in the Senate with little fanfare. He was responsible for major reforms that democratized the Senate. He continually pressed for the end of the Vietnam War, passing slips of paper with the number of war dead written on them to Presidents Johnson and Nixon whenever possible.

A man of conviction, he introduced gun control legislation in 1969 after the shooting death of a young Montana cadet in Washington, D.C. He was willing to take the heat from his Montana constituents.

Mansfield was a key player in passage of the constitutional amendment giving 18-year-olds the vote. He kept the veterans' hospital in Miles City open after President Johnson ordered it closed. He called in a number of markers to nab the last grant available to permit construction of the new terminal at the Great Falls airport. He obtained the MHD plant for Butte.

Mansfield has often said Montana was good to him. He was good for Montana and the nation. He's done us proud.

Welcome home, Mike.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I ask unanimous consent to be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I wish to join those who paid tribute to Senator Mike Mansfield. I did not have the privilege of serving in the U.S. Senate when Senator Mansfield was the majority leader, but he has become a legend in his own time. Through his dedication, not only to the institution of the United States Senate but as Ambasasador from the United States to Japan, he has set a record of dedication, dignity and integrity that serves as a model for all who will follow.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, several Senators have added their names as cosponsors. I believe that I would not be taking an improper liberty to suggest that every Member of the Senate, if he or she were present and appraised of the situation, would want to be an original cosponsor of this resolution. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the name of each Senator be added as an original cosponsor of this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

All time allowed for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 55) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for morning business not to exceed 30 minutes. Under that order, Senators are permitted to speak for up to 5 minutes each.

SECRETARY OF STATE JAMES BAKER CALLS FOR AN EARLY CEASE-FIRE IN SUDAN

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I wish to speak for just a moment today because this afternoon Secretary of State James Baker called on the Sudanese Government and the Sudanese Peoples' Liberation to agree to an early cease-fire that would allow relief aid to reach those starving in Sudan. Secretary Baker urged authorities on both sides to remove remaining obstacles and do everything possible to provide emergency relief to victims caught in garrison towns and other areas of the war zone. There is no more urgent issue than the delivery of food aid to the starving victims of this civil war.

Mr. President, I would like to commend Secretary Baker for his early leadership on this very tragic crisis in Sudan and would like to join him in his urgent appeal for a cease-fire.

By blocking the delivery of food aid, both sides in the civil war are treating food as a weapon which is resulting in horrifying levels of famine and deaths among innocent civilians. Last year, it is believed that the famine claimed as many as a quarter-million lives in southern Sudan. It is also estimated that over 2 million southern Sudanese have fled to the north or to Ethiopia to escape the fighting and the hunger.

Western relief workers are relating devastating stories of people dying without being counted and of people looking like walking skeletons crossing the border into Ethiopia on a trail that is littered with corpses. A senior British relief official recently described the crisis as "one of the most awful tragedies the world has seen for many years."

Mr. President, the United States has a special relationship with the Sudanese people and government. It is urgent that we use whatever leverage we have and that we take a leadership role in trying to alleviate the horrible suffering that is taking place.

It is widely believed that delivery of relief rather than the availability of food and medicine has been the major problem facing relief efforts. Since the first signs of famine appeared in the SPLA-controlled territory in the spring of 1988, the United States has spent more than $60 million on relief.

But unless both the Sudanese government and the SPLA agree, it is impossible to deliver these supplies in adequate amounts. Recently, there has been some agreement that has allowed the United States and other international donors to get food into both rebel and government held areas in the south. But, these are only the first steps which are helping a small percentage of the people in need.

Mr. President, as Secretary Baker stated today, an earlier cease-fire which would allow relief to be delivered is an urgent priority. It is critical that the international community join us in this appeal.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. COATS:

S. 373. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow an additional 50-percent deduction for the costs to employers of providing family leave in certain cases involving a birth, an adoption, or a serious illness of a child, spouse, or dependent of the employee; to the Committee on Finance.

FAMILY LEAVE BENEFITS ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today the Family Leave Benefits Assistance Act of 1989. This bill is designed to promote through tax incentives the availability of better profamily employment policies throughout the Nation's work force and to encourage employers to include parental and medical leave in the diverse and flexible packages of benefits offered to employees. This is the first in a series of legislative proposals I plan to introduce tailored to meet the pressing needs and concerns of America's families, especially the families of the working poor.

According to work force 2000, a study prepared by the Hudson Institute for the Department of Labor, our country is facing growing labor shortages and an aging work force. Poor and disadvantaged persons have difficulties in getting off the welfare rolls and into suitable employment. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, about 21 million new workers will be needed by the end of this century to keep our Nation's economy growing. Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Dole has testified before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee concerning the urgent need to improve the education and training of today's entrants into the work force—mostly women, minorities and immigrants—so that they will have the skills needed to hold the jobs of tomorrow. The challenge we face is to find ways to further stimulate growth so that everyone who wants a job can find one and accelerate productivity so that America remains competitive in a global economy. We must also integrate the new workers into the economy through positive incentives, as painlessly as possible.

We are fast becoming a society in which nearly everyone works. Today over two-thirds of the Nation's adult women are in the work force, and over half of mothers with children are employed full time. We have some 29 million two-income families with 25 million children. Two-thirds of the new entrants between now and the year 2000 will be women, most in their childbearing years, and two-thirds of all preschool children will have mothers working outside the home. Clearly one of the tasks we face is to reconcile the conflicting needs of women, work, and families.

I have seldom struggled with an issue as I have with the problem of parental and medical leave. I realize that a Federal mandating of such benefits makes no sense and could be counterproductive. But I am deeply moved by the desire of new mothers to spend time with their new little babies and the need of parents in an emergency to suspend temporarily their employment in order to attend to a critically ill loved one. Parenting is a good thing for both the parents and the infant.

Working parents should not be caught in a dilemma of having to choose between careers and families. They need to be able to continue to hold jobs and earn income to support their families, while at the same time raise their families, have babies, tend to their children's needs and care for sick infants and ailing parents. Their parenting and family responsibilities should not have to be sacrificed to their jobs. Balancing is required so that family needs and the demands of the workplace are both accommodated.

I cannot accept the fact that we cannot find a way to meet the needs of children or elderly parents with serious illnesses who require a parent or loved one with them for a period of time. It is natural for parents to desire to be with their young children when they are needed. I also believe that employers would want to find a way to accommodate these urgent needs of employees, just as employers as parents or family members would themselves wish to be with their own seriously ill babies or parents.

Today companies are offering a broad range of new benefits and services to attract and keep better employees and allow them greater freedom and choices in their lifestyles. Employers are becoming better attuned to the workplace and family needs of their employees. It is within the context of the changing demographics of the work force, the dynamics of our economy, and the evolving role of the family that we should address the issue of parental and medical leave.

Traditionally the matter of benefits is one of agreement between employer and employee. Companies have had the flexibility to design specific benefit packages according to affordability, changing working conditions, and the competing needs of their work force. In 1986 employers spent a record $742 billion on benefits—or 40 percent of payroll dollars—and only 8 percent of these benefits were mandated by law.

Granting parental and medical leave is an admirable idea and one that should be encouraged in the workplace. It is the kind of benefit that many businesses have incorporated into the benefit packages and cafeteria plans they provide their workers. To remain competitive in the job market, to recruit and retain good employees and to improve productivity, particularly in a time of growing labor shortages, employers will want to offer more attractive benefit packages. Moreover, these benefits will help to alleviate the concerns of the working men and women with young children and aging parents and will ease the transition from welfare to work for low-income and disadvantaged families. Clearly, the availability of parental and medical leave will continue to be a major factor in management and family planning choices.

The Family Leave Benefits Assistance Act is designed to serve both the needs of America's working families and those of the businesses that provide their employment. At the same time, this legislation avoids the pitfalls of mandating benefits.

This bill will allow an employer a tax deduction of 50 percent of the costs of providing family leave for employees. The deduction would be available for all qualified family leave expenses—that is, salary or wages and the costs of benefits, including paid leave, taken during the period in which an employee is temporarily absent on account of the birth or adoption of the employee's child or the serious illness of his or her child, spouse, or parent. The employer must have in effect a certified benefits plan which includes a leave policy providing that any employee taking leave will be entitled to return to the same or equivalent position without loss of pay or benefits.

By providing substantial relief to employers who incur such costs, the bill would encourage businesses, particularly small firms, to include parental and medical leave in their benefit packages and cafeteria plans. It would enable wage-earning parents, faced with family and home emergencies, to take time off to attend to such emergencies, without sacrificing pay or other benefits.

The practical problems and costs associated with mandating family leave are considerable. Congress cannot properly determine and regulate the individual needs of workers and their families and should not force its judgment concerning such needs onto the employer-employee relationship. It is one thing for businesses to decide to offer employees a package of benefits which includes family leave. It is quite another for the Federal Government to dictate what benefits an employer must offer and to whom and under what conditions.

If the Congress compels an employer to provide a particular benefit, the total benefits are not thereby enlarged. Instead, it may necessitate the removal or reduction of another benefit. When employers are able to offer a wide array of benefits, the individual employee can select the kind of benefits most suitable to his or her needs and can thus personalize his or her own package. This trend toward flexible benefit programs, which are becoming increasingly popular in the workplace, would be constrained by mandating parental and medical leave, much to the detriment of those employees who do not need or desire such leave. The European experience with mandated benefits, including family leave, is that they have contributed to economic stagnation. We should think long and hard before embarking on any policy which would reduce our competitiveness and result in the loss of American jobs.

For small business the total costs of mandated benefits would be incalculable. The most dynamic sector of our economy is dominated by America's 18 million small and entrepreneurial firms, which annually create most of the new jobs. Yet many of these small businesses struggle to survive and remain competitive. Without some incentive or relief, they would be forced to bear the brunt of the costs of mandated leave. Little wonder, then, that this issue was the No. 2 priority concern of the 1,800 delegates to the 1986 White House Conference on Small Business—of whom over 600 were businesswomen—who voted overwhelmingly to recommend that the Congress reject mandated benefits, including parental leave legislation.

As a practical matter, more women than men would most likely take advantage of parental leave. Thus mandated benefits would be especially costly for small firms which employ a majority of women. This could mean a loss of employment opportunities for young women of childbearing age as well as low-skilled and marginal workers and teenagers.

Mr. President, the Family Leave Benefits Assistance Act preserves the freedom of choice and flexibility that have proved successful in employer-employee relationships. Choice and flexibility have enabled businesses to compete effectively and to respond quickly to economic circumstances. They have enabled American businesses to meet diverse family needs.

This proposal is based upon the recognition that the appropriate role of Government is to promote and support desirable improvements in labor practices rather than dictate radical changes and restrict workplace and family choices.

In my opinion, this legislation will foster the development and expansion of profamily, cost beneficial policies and programs in the workplace. By strengthening America's families in this way, we will, in turn, contribute to America's productivity and competitiveness. At the same time, we will address the needs and concerns of parents, children, and other family members who are struggling as Americans adjust to changes in the workplace.

By Mr. REID (for himself and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 374. A bill to amend the National Trails System Act to designate the Pony Express National Historic Trail as a component of the National Trails System; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PONY EXPRESS NATIONAL HISTORIC TRAIL

Mr. REID. Mr. President, today it is my privilege to introduce legislation to designate the Pony Express Trail as a national historic trail under the National Trails System.

The Pony Express galloped into postal history on April 3, 1860. It was like a giant relay, in which about 75 horses participated in each direction. At each station, these heroic riders were given 2 minutes in which to transfer the saddle bags to fresh ponies and be on their way again. The Express ran day and night. Riders worked in all kinds of weather and faced the threat of Indian attacks. During the 18 months of the operation of the Pony Express, only one trip was missed. A "Pony" courier, a Mexican, westbound, rode into Dry Creek station, clinging to his saddle horn. He had been fataly wounded by Indians, and died in a few hours, but he had brought the mail through in its bloodstained "mochila," a leather saddle blanket containing four "cajas," or boxes, for carrying the mail.

The service was sponsored and financially supported by Russell, Majors, and Waddell, a well-known freighting firm that had also organized the Central Overland and Pike's Peak Express Co., to operate a mail and passenger service along the central route. Russell had failed repeatedly to get backing from the congressional Post Office and Post Roads Committees for an express route to carry mail between St. Joseph, MO—the westernmost point reached by the railroad and telegraph—and California. St. Joseph was the strategic starting point for the direct 2,000-mile central route to the West. Except for a few forts and settlements, however, the route beyond St. Joseph was a vast, silent wilderness, inhabited primarily by Indians. Russell's freighting firm lost more than $100,000 on the Pony Express. A loss he could ill afford. Undismayed, he kept the Pony Express going at a loss. Moreover, the partnership did not get the anticipated mail contract.

The project was pushed vigorously. Starting at St. Joseph, MO, the route in general followed the well-known Oregon-California Trail by way of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and California. Stations were built at intervals of about 15 miles, wherever stage stations did not already exist. Fleet, wiry, Indian horses were purchased; and young, courageous, lightweight riders were hired. Riders were recruited hastily, but before being hired had to swear on a Bible not to "cuss," fight, or abuse their animals and to conduct themselves honestly.

The first mail by Pony Express via the central route from St. Joseph to Sacramento took 10½ days, cutting the Overland Stage time via the southern route by more than half. The fastest delivery time was in March 1861, when the inaugural address of President Lincoln was carried in 7 days and 17 hours.

The completion of the transcontinental railroad ushered in the most remarkable era of development of the national resources, advance of civilization, and spread of population the world ever saw. It should be remembered, however, that the emigrant trains plodding their weary westward way along the dusty trails, the freighter's Conestogas, the romantic stagecoach, the Pony Express, and the telegraph provided the steppingstones leading in that direction. The traveler speeding over the old trails on a streamlined train at 90 miles an hour or looking down upon them from the sky may not be aware of what happened a century and a quarter ago.

The Pony Express won for itself a secure, permanent place in the catalog of American folklore. More than anything else in the history of America, it stands as a symbol of the vision, daring, fortitude, and sheer courage of youth. Better than any other institution, it breathes the spirit of pioneer ingenuity, resourcefulness and endurance. The time has come to honor these heroes and acknowledge the national historical importance of the Pony Express Trail.

Mr. President, by introducing this legislation today, I intend to repay our debt to those gallant men and their courageous benefactors, and recognize the significance of this historical episode on our country's western expansion.

I urge my colleagues to support swift passage of this legislation.

By Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MACK, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 375. A bill to provide for the broadcasting of accurate information to the people of Cuba, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TELEVISION BROADCASTING TO CUBA

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, today I rise in behalf of myself and the distinguished Senators from Florida, Senator GRAHAM and Senator MACK, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN], to introduce the TV-Marti authorization bill.

This is the authorization bill sought by our distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee last July when we debated the $7.5 million amount that we appropriated on a trial basis, which trial, incidentally, is working.

To those misinformed people in the media who would prematurely bid "adios" to TV-Marti, I am pleased to inform my colleagues that, just this morning, top USIA officials have assured me of the Bush administration's full and enthusiastic support for TV-Marti as called for in this bill.

Mr. President, there is a naive and self-congratulatory school of thought these days which proclaims that the cold war is over and the good guys won. I do not share that optimistic assessment. Yes, the West is indeed winning. But there are many important battles yet to be fought.

In these waning years of the 20th century, however, most of those battles will be fought not with bombs and bullets, but with ideas and facts. That, my friends, is why I have championed TV-Marti. I take seriously the Bible's admonition "You shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free" (John, 8:2). The West is winning today by the sheer, compelling force of its political example and economic success. Our task, today, is to spread the word about that success, and to inspire democratic movements throughout the Communist world.

I am convinced that TV-Marti will succeed. I am convinced that it will have a profound and dynamic impact on Cuban politics and society. Mr. Castro likes to tout his revolutionary credentials. But he cannot begin to match the revolutionary potential of television.

It is no coincidence that, in the Soviet Union, the Baltic Republics of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia are in the vanguard of the democratic, essentially anti-Communist ferment now gaining strength in the U.S.S.R. For years, the Baltic Republics have had open access to television broadcasts from neighboring, democratic Finland. They understand the Finnish language, and—thanks to Finnish television—they understand the true achievement of Western democratic capitalism, and the true plight and desperation of the Soviet system.

I am convinced that TV-Marti will have that same dynamic impact within Cuba. Certainly, no Communist country hungers more for a whiff of truth and freedom. Cuba is retrograde and hidebound even by Communist standards. In Cuba, there is no hint of glasnost, no pretense of perestroika. It is a Stalinist state in the crudest, most brutal form. Castro is an old-fashioned Latin dictator who brooks no question or dissent.

TV-Marti, in tandem with Radio Marti, can be a mighty engine of change in this totalitarian society. Radio Marti has already demonstrated the potential: surveys show that some 85 percent of Cubans tune in Radio Marti, giving it twice the audience of Cuba's most popular domestic station. Castro feels obliged to respond almost daily to information broadcast by Radio Marti.

In a very real sense, Radio Marti is the sole opposition voice within Cuba. And with 90 percent of Cubans owning televisions, TV-Marti can vastly expand the scope and impact of that opposition voice.

Let us put an end to Castro's 30-year tyranny of total media censorship. Let us broadcast the visual truth about the United States and the West. And, by all means, let us also broadcast the true story and the true cost of Cuban militarism and imperialism.

In 1958, Cuba had only 58,000 men under arms. In contrast today, to support Castro's imperial ambitions in Africa, Cuba maintains an Army of 265,000 regulars and reserves plus a militia of over 1.2 million. Who pays? Obviously, the Cuban people pay.

They pay with their sons and with their blood; according to press reports, as many as 10,000 Cuban soldiers have been killed or wounded in Angola. At home, the Cuban people pay with the depletion of their already meager economic resources; while Castro builds airfields and military installations in Angola and Ethiopia, Cubans endure permanent economic depression and a miserable per capita income of well under $2,000 per year. Dr. Castro seeks to heal the whole Third World with his dubious medicine. I say to Dr. Castro: physician, heal thyself.

As with Radio Marti, our aim with TV-Marti is to broadcast objective, truthful news and information to the Cuban people. That objective—truth and objectivity—is, in itself, enough to make TV-Marti an opposition voice within Cuba.

In the case of both Radio and TV-Marti, my philosophy is simple: the best propaganda is no propaganda. The Cuban-American success story speaks for itself; it needs no embellishment. I say: let the Cuban people draw their own comparisons and conclusions.

Mr. President, when the Senate approved funding for the test of TV-Marti last July 27, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations asked that further funding await authorization of the program. Today, we are introducing the bill that will provide that authorization. We look forward to early action by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill that we are introducing closely follows the language of the "Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act," Public Law 98-111, approved October 4, 1983, and provides for appropriation of $16,000,000 in each of fiscal years 1990 and 1991. The fiscal 1990 amount is the Price-Waterhouse for the operating expenses in 1990 and a similar amount should be sufficient in 1991.

Mr. President, before yielding to my colleagues from Florida let me indicate that we will be circulating a letter to all Senators soliciting their cosponsorship of this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 375

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Television Broadcasting to Cuba Act".

FINDINGS; PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that it is the policy of the United States to support the right of the people of Cuba to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, in accordance with article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

(2) That, consonant with this policy, television broadcasting to Cuba may be effective in furthering the open communication of accurate information and ideas to the people of Cuba, in particular, information about Cuba;

(3) that such broadcasting to Cuba, operated in a manner not inconsistent with the broad foreign policy of the United States and in accordance with high professional standards, would be in the national interest.

(4) that the Voice of America already broadcasts to Cuba information that represents America, not any single segment of American society, and includes a balanced and comprehensive projection of significant American thought and institutions but that there is a need for television broadcasts to Cuba which provide news, commentary and other information about events in Cuba and elsewhere to promote the cause of freedom in Cuba.

ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

SEC. 3. (a) In order to carry out the objectives set forth in section 2, the United States Information Agency (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Agency") shall provide for the open communication of information and ideas through the use of television broadcasting to Cuba. Television broadcasting to Cuba shall serve as a consistently reliable and authoritative source of accurate objective, and comprehensive news.

(b) Television broadcasting in accordance with subsection (a) be in accordance with all Voice of America standards to ensure the broadcast of programs which are objective, accurate, balanced, and which present a variety of views.

(c) Any program of United States Government television broadcasts to Cuba authorized by this section shall be designated "USIA Television Marti program".

CUBA TELEVISION SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY

SEC. 4. (a) The Director of the United States Information Agency shall establish within the Agency a Television Marti Service (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Service"). The Service shall be responsible for all television broadcasts to Cuba authorized by section 3. The Director of the United States Information Agency shall appoint a head of the Service and shall employ such staff as the head of the Service may need to carry out his duties.

(b) Broadcasting by the Service shall be done in such a manner as to avoid interference with any domestic television broadcasting.

SEC. 5 of the Radio Broadcasting to Cuba Act 22, U.S.C. 1465c, shall be amended as follows:

(a) Title—Board for Broadcasting to Cuba (delete Radio)

(b) The Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba is renamed to be the Advisory Board for Broadcasting to Cuba with responsibilities for both Radio Marti and Television Marti.

ASSISTANCE FROM OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

SEC. 6. (a) In order to assist the United States Information Agency in carrying out the purposes set forth in section 2, any agency or instrumentality of the United States may sell, loan, lease, or grant property (including interests therein) and may perform administrative and technical support and services at the request of the Agency.

(b) The Agency may carry out the purposes of this Act by means of grants, leases, or contracts (subject to the availability of appropriations), or such other means as the Agency determines will be most effective.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 7. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for the United States Information Agency $16,000,000, for fiscal year 1990 and $16,000,000 for fiscal year 1991 to carry out sections 3 and 4 of this Act. Such funds shall be available for purchase of such equipment and facilities as the Director deems appropriate.

(b) Amounts appropriated under this section are authorized to be made available until expended.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues Senators HOLLINGS, MACK, LAUTENBERG, and KASTEN in introducing this legislation authorizing the funding of TV Marti.

This year marks the 30th anniversary of the Cuban revolution. Fidel Castro, with the departure of Alfredo Stroessner from Paraguay this week, is now the longest running dictator in the hemisphere. The tide is against him.

The Somoza's, the Duvalier's, the Peron's, Stroessner and by the end of this year likely Chile's Pinochet are all history. As people become disenchanted with dictators and authoritarian misinformation campaigns, they turn inevitably toward democracy.

Our own privilege as a free people in a democratic society confers the responsibility to extend that option to other nations. The success of American democracy is no big secret—so the many fruits of that democracy which can be shared, should be offered generously, not kept under wraps.

Information about our society, about events in the world which affect all of us, about life in a functioning democracy—all of that will be broadcast to Cuba via TV Marti.

Radio Marti has already begun to reach out to the people of Cuba and they have responded. Radio Marti has consistently been the top-rated station in Cuba since its inception in 1985.

Two large-scale studies conducted in 1987—one by the Strategic Information Research Corporation and one by Radio Marti's Office of Audience Research—concluded that Radio Marti reached 86 percent of the Cuban people and 92 percent of the Cuban people respectively.

Interviews with recent emigres from Cuba disclose that, since glasnost and increasing liberalization, Moscow newspapers and magazines are widely sought after on the island. Even the Soviets provide Cubans with better information than their own government.

By introducing this legislation today we hope to capitalize on the hunger for accurate news and information in Cuba. Interviews with refugees tell us that 90 percent of the Cuban people in the broadcast area have access to television and are enthusiastic about alternatives to government-controlled broadcasts.

The bill authorizes $16 million in each of the next 2 fiscal years. This modest amount of funding will be used to establish a transmission system that will beam television programming to the 2 million Cubans who live in Havana.

The recommended programming would include an evening newscast, entertainment programming such as Walt Disney cartoons and children's shows, "novelas"—the latin equivalent to our soap operas—American movies, travelogs and comedy programs. We would be sending Cuba a daily picture of democracy.

Studies conducted by the Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba conclude that TV Marti is both technically and legally sound. It will not interfere with the signals of any existing United States stations.

Castro could try to jam TV Marti but there are technical end runs around that—the signal could never be completely jammed—and Castro's threats to jam Radio Marti were empty ones.

Since July 1986, the Cuban Government has broadcast a television signal which reaches our east coast. They send regular satellite transmissions 3 hours a day on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays. According to the Cuban media, the government plans to increase regular transmissions to 8 hours a day.

Daniel Cirio, director of the Cuban television channel, called Cubavision, says that Cuba's objective is to "each Cuban internationalists, students, and diplomats abroad and to allow all of Cuba's friends abroad and those interested in viewing our programs to tune in."

Fair enough. TV Marti is simply equal access. Americans don't back off from the challenge of ideas. We are not afraid to listen to another point of view. And we are not afraid to speak up for what we believe in.

This is a great Nation, governed by a just system. We are free to shape the direction of our own lives, to find out all we want to know about the world around us, to make intelligent decisions based on that information.

Most of all we are free to dream. That is what TV Marti will beam out from Florida to the island just 90 miles from our own shores—the dreams and the achievements of a free people, a dream all people in this hemisphere can share.

Mr. MACK. I thank the Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak out on this issue, and I want to compliment the Senator from South Carolina for introducing this legislation. Senator BOB GRAHAM and I are original cosponsors.

The importance of the legislation today is not only for us to make a statement about our desire to expand our ability to deliver the message of freedom to Cuba, but it is also to once again focus the attention of the American people on the issue of Cuba and the role that it plays in our hemisphere in destabilizing our neighbors.

So I rise in support of this legislation. Again, I compliment the Senator from South Carolina for his initiative and thank him for his effort last year in making sure we had the original $7.5 million to begin the process of moving forward on TV Marti.

At this point, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement that was made by then Vice President Bush, now President of the United States, and his support for TV Marti.

STATEMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

I spoke this morning with Senator Warren Rudman and expressed to him my strong support for creating TV Marti. I asked the Senator to report to the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations the fact that I strongly favor funding to put TV Marti on the air.

Castro has force-fed the Cuban people his own brand of the daily news. He has suppressed the truth and covered the island with a shroud of disinformation. But since the anniversary of Cuban Independence Day in 1985, Radio Marti has pierced that veil of deceit and deception and today has a listening audience twice the size of the most popular state-run radio station.

Now it is time to go one step better. It is time to create TV Marti so that the Cuban people can see the world as it is, not as Castro would like them to believe it is. They must see their young men dying in Angola and Ethiopia. They must see the stark contrast between the oppression of their totalitarian leaders and the fruits of freedom and democracy. They must hear directly about human rights abuses in their own country. In essence: they should be permitted to see and hear the truth.

It's been said that a picture is worth a thousand words. Well, in the case of TV Marti, thousands of pictures are worth a single word—Freedom, and that's why Castro fears it.

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise as an original cosponsor of this bill to authorize $16 million for TV Marti. Named after the Cuban patriot, Jose Marti, TV Marti will complement the Radio Marti Program, and it will also be administered by the United States Information Agency.

Two years ago, Congress mandated that the Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba report on the feasibility and cost of a United States Government television service to Cuba. That report concluded that creation of a United States Government television service to Cuba, or Television Marti would be an appropriate action, since the Cuban Government began regular transmission of television programming that can be received along the east coast of the United States. Moreover, the success of Radio Marti in providing information to Cuba not readily available to Cubans bodes well for TV Marti.

The fact that about 90 percent of Cubans have access to a television set, and that recent studies show that TV Marti would reach an even wider audience than Radio Marti, especially young people, indicate that TV Marti would be a great success.

Mr. President, some have argued that the establishment of TV Marti will cause Castro to retaliate against our U.S. broadcasting. However, we must remember that the United States is only responding in kind by establishing this service. Regular Cuban satellite transmissions to the United States are sent for 3 hours daily on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays. They have been occurring since July of 1986, and the director of Cuban Television has announced plans to expand these broadcasts to 8 hours daily. As people who value free speech, we should not shrink from presenting our side of the debate to the Cuban people through the use of public diplomacy.

Castro cannot jam the TV signal easily. While local jamming inside Cuba could affect TV Marti's coverage area, TV Marti can respond by boosting signal strength and broadcasting on alternative frequencies. Moreover, Castro would harm his own public image inside Cuba by jamming.

TV Marti will not interfere with existing Cuban or American stations. TV Marti will broadcast only on available frequencies on the Cuban dial, and there are many. By using a nightly directional antenna, there will be virtually no leakage of the signal into U.S. territory.

Furthermore, no U.S. stations in the area now use the intended frequencies. Thus, TV Marti cannot lower the size of service areas enjoyed by private broadcasters over the public airways.

Mr. President, through his rhetoric and his actions, Castro promotes anti-American sentiment throughout the world. Establishing TV Marti will help make Castro accountable to the Cuban people for his unsuccessful foreign adventures, and depressed economic conditions on the island.

The better informed the Cuban people, the better chance they have to overcome Castro's totalitarian regime. TV Marti will make a real contribution to that effort, and is thus worthy of our support. As the saying goes, a picture is worth a thousand words; and a television picture just might be worth a million.●

By Mr. GORE:

S. 376. A bill to amend the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 to provide that certain noise control costs are included as allowable project costs; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NOISE REDUCTION REIMBURSEMENT ACT

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Noise Reduction Reimbursement Act of 1989. This is legislation that will benefit not only the thousands of families living near airports throughout the country, but the many airports and communities whose economies depend heavily upon safe, efficient air transportation.

Moreover, this legislation will actually save taxpayers millions in Federal funds by accelerating implementation of much needed noise abatement programs with local funds in current dollars.

As the needs of the traveling public increase, and as airports accommodate larger and larger numbers of passengers, additional flights, new hubs, new runways, and general expansions are expected, even demanded. Larger airports and better facilities at those airports are a major investment in infrastructure; and they generally enjoy broad support not only from those who fly, but also from the business community and local governments. The stimulus that top quality air service provides to the economic development efforts of entire regions of the Nation cannot be underestimated.

Of course, one of the major problems with expansion projects is the effect of increased noise in the neighborhoods surrounding the airports. The use of Airport Improvement Program funds for FAA approved noise compatibility projects is absolutely essential to the success of airport improvement and expansion efforts. But timely funding of noise abatement measures are necessary for continued community support, and that funding should be available as a matter of fairness to those who are directly affected by new runways, more flights, and more noise.

Mr. President, the key of this process is timely funding, the driving idea behind the legislation that I am introducing today. The example of the Nashville Metropolitan Airport will illustrate how helpful this legislation can be to airport noise compatibility projects.

Since 1986, in one of the most significant developments in domestic air transportation, Nashville has added 207 flights a day. Over the next 3 years, flights are expected to increase another 50 percent. Meanwhile, construction at Nashville is outstripping available Federal funds. Already more than $150 million in State and local funds have been spent at Nashville. The airport is spending more than $50 million of its own money on a reimbursable basis to build a second runway and is doing so under a Federal "letter of intent" with FAA. All of Nashville's entitlement funds are committed to the construction of the new runway.

But noise from the expansion at Nashville will affect more than 13,000 people and approximately 5,500 homes in a 17-square-mile area. In June of this year, only 4 months from now, the "part 150" noise compatibility planning study on noise abatement will be completed. Acceptance by the community is essential, and this is where timely funding will play a critical role.

Upon completion of the Federal study in June, Nashville is prepared to embark on a 5-year, $51 million noise abatement program. In addition to land acquisition in the approach and clear zone, which is already being funded by the airport authority on a reimbursable basis, the noise mitigation plan will include acquisition of residential property at fair-market value with relocation assistance; sound insulation for those wishing to remain; and land use planning, particularly in undeveloped areas around the airport.

Since all of the Nashville's available local and Federal funds are committed to the ongoing runway construction, and since Federal noise abatement funds are severely limited, it might be many years before the noise abatement measures identified in the "part 150" study would be implemented. But, Mr. President, such a long wait is unnecessary.

Nashville is prepared to provide upfront funding for the Federal share of the costs of noise abatement, if such costs eventually would be reimbursed by the Government through its existing program. With the authority provided in this legislation, Nashville could provide noise abatement relief to the surrounding community when the second runway is opened late this year. I am certain that there are many other airport authorities that would benefit from this legislation as well.

This legislation also provides maximum flexibility to the Government on the timing for reimbursement. As is the case with reimbursement for land acquisition, and in contrast with reimbursement under letters of intent, the scheduling of repayment by the Federal Government is under the discretion of the FAA Administrator.

Mr. President, this is a great deal for the Federal Government. Local airports will pay the interest charges, and Federal reimbursement will be paid when those funds become available. In effect, the Federal Government will be getting the equivalent of an interest-free loan. This will allow scarce Federal noise abatement funds to have a substantially larger impact than does the present grant program, and local airports can begin immediately to implement the noise programs applicable to their particular circumstances.

Mr. President, this is a fiscally sound, common-sense approach to noise reduction at our Nation's airports, and I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 376

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Noise Reduction Reimbursement Act of 1989".

PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) enhance the quality of life of citizens living in proximity to the Nation's airports;

(2) allow for the prompt implementation of the full range of recommendations of federally sponsored noise studies;

(3) provide that scarce Federal funds for noise abatement may be used with maximum efficiency; and

(4) provide that individual airports throughout the national airway system are encouraged to spend local funds on noise abatement by providing for the Federal reimbursement of such local noise abatement funds.

NOISE CONTROL COSTS INCLUDED AS ALLOWABLE PROJECT COSTS

SEC. 3. Section 513(a)(2) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. 2212(a)(2)) is amended by inserting after "or easements through or other interests in airspace," the following: "noise control costs incurred as part of a federal approved noise program if such costs are incurred subsequent to June 1, 1989,".●

By Mr. DIXON (for himself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BOREN, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. PACKWOOD):

S. 377. A bill to establish a series of five Presidential primaries at which the public may express its preference for the nomination of an individual for election to the office of President of the United States; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

REGIONAL PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES AND CAUCUSES ACT

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Regional Primaries and Caucuses Act of 1989, a bill designed to improve the Presidential nominating process.

Anybody who followed the 1988 Presidential primaries knows that our Presidential nominating system needs to be reformed. The combination of the kingmaker Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary with the huge number of primaries held on super Tuesday have created a frontloaded, chaotic and inequitable system. It is time for us to bring some rationality and fairness to the way we choose our candidates for the Presidency.

The Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary have an inordinate amount of influence on the selection of our party's nominees. Together, these States only account for 2 percent of this country's total population. Yet, the impact of a vote cast in these States greatly outweighs the impact of votes cast in the other 98 percent of the country.

The evidence of the early primaries' impact on the nominating process is strong. Since 1952, no President has been elected who has not won the party primary in New Hampshire, and 1988 was no exception.

And what is wrong with a frontloaded system that gives too few people a say in the process? After the election last year, the New York Times and CBS conducted a poll asking voters: "Were you satisfied in choosing between the two candidates this fall, or do you wish there had been other choices?" Believe it or not, 67 percent—two-thirds—said they would rather have had other choices for the President of the United States. If the process continues this way, voters will become even more disillusioned with choosing our President. Considering how few people voted the last time, we can ill-afford more disenfranchisement.

Clearly, the reason Iowa and New Hampshire are so important in the process today is simply that their caucus and primary are held first. A George Washington University study of CBS's 1980 coverage of different primaries found that California, with nearly one-tenth of the Nation's population, received one-fiftieth and one-fortieth of the attention given to Iowa and New Hampshire, respectively. My own State of Illinois received one-sixteenth and one-twelfth the attention given to Iowa and New Hampshire. This trend is apparently still going strong.

The media's intense focus on these early States translates into greater visibility and voter preference for the winners of their contests. For instance, in 1984, after Gary Hart won the New Hampshire primary, his name recognition in the South increased from 5 to 50 percent and preference for him among the country's voters increased from 7 to 38 percent.

New Hampshire's success in picking Presidents may be partly due to good luck or old fashioned New England horsesense, but numbers like these make me believe that they are successful largely because their primary comes first.

New Hampshire realizes the importance of going first. The State legislature had the good sense to pass a law requiring their primary to be held 1 week before any other State primary. If you change yours, New Hampshire is going to go earlier. You make yours January 1, I guess they are going to vote on Christmas in New Hampshire. Of course, other States realize the importance of being first also. Twenty States on the Democratic side and 17 States on the Republican side all held primaries 3 weeks after New Hampshire on super Tuesday. Over 30 States now hold their primaries before the end of March.

Why, people used to laugh when you talked about a primary in March, particularly in the North in the cold weather. Thirty States now hold their primaries before the end of March and California may pass a law moving their primary up to March as well.

The States are crowding their primary dates closer and closer together, and the result is an increasingly front-loaded system.

However, these other States cannot achieve parity with Iowa and New Hampshire as long as they continue to hold their contests first. The system will not become equitable and reflect national concerns until the influence that comes with being first is shared among all the 50 States.

Last Congress, I introduced a similar regional primaries bill, and it was approved by the Rules Committee in the form you see now. This bill sets up a system of five regional primaries in the country of about equal electoral sizes. State primaries and caucuses are then placed into the regions on the basis of their geographical location.

Each election year, the Federal Elections Commission would decide by lot the actual order of the regional primaries. The first primary would be held on the second Tuesday in March and the remaining primaries would take place every 3 weeks until the first Tuesday in June.

We might go first in region 2 one time, Mr. President, where I am located, and we might go first in region 5 by lot where the President is located.

I would like to make clear to my colleagues that the bill in its present form is not set in stone. I know there are others of my colleagues that have different ideas about how many primaries there ought to be or how large or small the regions ought to be. Senator PACKWOOD, an original cosponsor of this bill, has his own 10-region primary bill—twice as many regions—and while we may have some differences of opinion over the smaller issues in this bill, we agree that the system is too chaotic and exclusive and that a regional primary system can solve those problems.

For instance, some would say we ought to have more regions because California dominates the fifth region too much and the Senator from Washington, who is in the chair, might feel that way.

Although I would rather see the parties or States act on their own, I think it is time for the Congress to take the lead on reforming our system. After the 1984 election, the late Teddy White—one of the greatest political analysts in our country's history—said,

> The primary system today bounces crazily from State to State hobbled by bizarre party regulations, dominated by dramatic needs of television. * * * By 1988 it is certain that both parties will be holding primaries simultaneously in a free-for-all that will confuse everyone. New public laws, not new party regulations are needed.

Mr. White's prediction is not too far away from the truth.

My proposal will give every region of the country an equal voice in the selection of each party's Presidential nominees. It will encourage each candidate to appeal to all parts of our Nation, rather than to one small sector of our population. It will replace chaos and confusion with fairness and reason in choosing each party's Presidential candidates.

Mr. President, I am privileged to send to the desk on behalf of myself and certain other colleagues this important legislation. I ask unanimous consent that Senator BREAUX of Louisiana, Senator BOREN of Oklahoma, Senator SANFORD of North Carolina, and Senator PACKWOOD of Oregon be shown on this legislation as original cosponsors and that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 377

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Regional Presidential Primaries and Caucuses Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the numerous elections and caucuses held by States for the expression of a preference for the nomination of individuals for election to the office of the President of the United States are conducted without any semblance of order;

(2) the conventions held by national political parties for the purpose of nominating candidates for election to the offices of the President and the Vice President are vital to the process of selecting such candidates for national office; and

(3) in order to preserve the effectiveness of the Presidential election process and to provide for the public welfare of the Nation, the Congress must regulate certain parts of the process for selecting candidates to the office of the President.

SEC. 3. (a) No State shall conduct a Presidential primary, as defined in this Act, except in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(b)(1) Five regional Presidential primaries shall be held during each Presidential election year. The first regional primary shall be held on the second Tuesday in March of such year, and the remaining four regional primaries shall be held every third Tuesday thereafter.

(2) Seventy days before the date of the first regional primary, the Commission shall determine by lot the region in which that primary is to be held. The Commission then shall determine by separate lot, conducted 70 days before the date of each subsequent regional primary, except the last, the region in which each subsequent regional primary is to be held. A State may not hold a Presidential primary on a date other than the date assigned by the Commission to the region in which such State is located.

(c) Whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe that a State is holding a Presidential primary in violation of the provisions of this section, he may bring a civil action in any appropriate United States district court for such relief as may be appropriate, including injunctive relief.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "Commission" means the Federal Election Commission;

(2) "Presidential primary" means a primary, first tier caucuses, convention, or other means of expressing a preference for the nomination of individuals for election to the Office of President of the United States or for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention of a political party, except that such term does not include a national nominating convention of a political party;

(3) "region" means any of the following five regions:

(A) region 1 comprises Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Maryland, the District of Columbia, New Jersey, Delaware, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico;

(B) region 2 comprises Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania;

(C) region 3 comprises Kentucky, Louisiana, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and the Virgin Islands;

(D) region 4 comprises North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas; and

(E) region 5 comprises Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, Hawaii, American Samoa, and Guam;

(4) "State" means each of the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Territories of American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join Senator DIXON in introducing legislation which would establish five regional Presidential primaries. Having introduced my own bill in virtually every Congress since 1972, I am particularly pleased to note that there is growing consensus and support for the regional primary concept. While my own preference would be to expand the number of regions, I am happy to work cooperatively with others to fashion a regional primary bill which will garner the widest support among my colleagues and bring to an end the current chaotic system of choosing our Presidents.

This legislation is designed to replace the present mismash of Presidential extravaganzas which leave the candidates tired and broke and leave the public bored, bewildered and—far too often—disgusted. Voters understandably ask, "When is this nonsense coming to an end?" In the process, the candidates lose their credibility and the office loses its dignity.

Credibility must be restored to the candidates because, without it, dignity cannot be restored to the most important office in the world. A plan must be devised that somewhat dramatically improves the traveling sideshow of our current system.

Congress must meet its responsibility of providing a vehicle for the American people to select the nominee of their party from a wide range of candidates.

The legislation which we are introducing today will, I believe, restore credibility to the candidates and dignity to the office they seek. It would establish a system of five regional primaries throughout the Nation. Every State is included in one of the following five regions:

First, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Maryland, the District of Columbia, New Jersey, Delaware, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico;

Second, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania;

Third, Kentucky, Louisiana, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and the Virginia Islands;

Fourth, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas;

Fifth, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, Hawaii, American Samoa, and Guam.

Each year, the Federal Election Commission would decide by lot the actual order of the regional primaries. Under our proposal, candidates would not know where the first regional primary would be held until 70 days prior to it. This procedure would be repeated for each of the remaining regions. In this way, the order of the primaries would not be known in advance. Under the current system, some candidates begin their campaigns for nomination almost 2 years prior to the Presidential election. They are able to do this because certain States have a set primary date and the result is that all of the candidate's money, energy, and talent are focused on those particular states.

Under this proposal, the first regional primary would be held on the second Tuesday in March and the remaining four regional primaries would take place every third Tuesday thereafter. Practical politics would dictate that candidates spend most of their available time in the region holding the next primary. In conducting primaries in this organized manner, we will avoid the whirlwind approach of our current system which fatigues the candidates, sours the voters, and badly erodes confidence in Government.

While our bill requires all States to participate in the Presidential regional primary system, it does not attempt to regulate the national convention and delegate selection procedures. These procedures should rightfully be left to the States and political parties. Neither does this bill dictate what form a State's primary should take; that is, whether it should be open or closed. If a State provides for an open primary whereby those persons not registered in a particular political party may vote in a party's primary, the State would be able to continue to do so.

A regional primary would allow candidates to spend a relatively small amount of time and money in order to determine whether they had widespread support. If candidates did well in the first primary, they would be off and running. If they did poorly, they could avoid the embarrassment and expense of hopelessly campaigning nationwide. It would also give supporters and contributors a chance to become involved with a more viable candidate. Candidates could enter their first primary and if they did well could marshal the organizational and financial backing necessary to garner additional support. Their candidacies would have the chance to catch fire and gather momentum. In short, regional primaries would allow candidates to gracefully withdraw if their campaigns failed to catch fire. By the same token, regional primaries would also allow a smoldering ember to be built into a blazing bonfire.

Under this measure, moreover, the voters would have a better chance to judge a candidate's true qualifications. Madison Avenue would be shelved. A more personal and direct approach would result. Rather than the trademarks of "image" and "style" characteristic of our present system, the trademarks of a regional primary would be "issues" and "answers."

If we are to return "government to the people" and restore confidence in that government, we have that opportunity through the regional primary concept. The regional Presidential primary offers the best hope of returning credibility to the candidates and dignity to the Presidency.

S. 378. A bill to extend the Steel Import Stabilization Act for an additional 5 years; to the Committee on Finance.

STEEL IMPORT STABILIZATION EXTENSION ACT

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today Senator JOHN HEINZ and I, along with 47 of our colleagues, are introducing legislation to extend the President's authority to enforce the Steel Voluntary Restraint Agreements [VRA's]. We are offering this legislation because the current authority expires on September 30 of this year.

As chairman of the Senate Steel Caucus, I will be working with the administration and the industry to see that the United States has an effective steel policy. The leadership of my cochair, Senator JOHN HEINZ—who has chaired this caucus before and worked diligently on these issues for many years—is critical to this effort. I thank Senator HEINZ and look forward to working hand in hand with him to pass this bill.

America's steel VRA Program is working. On this point, I find myself in agreement with President Bush. In a November 4, 1988, letter to Senator HEINZ, President Bush said, "the goal of a privately owned, internationally competitive steel industry was made possible by the reduction in subsidized and dumped steel imports provided by the voluntary restraint agreements we have negotiated." In that letter, President Bush assured us of his intention to continue the VRA Program. It is gratifying that we have that commitment already from the President because extension of the VRA Program is a critical, pressing goal for the American steel industry and its 165,000 workers. Many of the problems facing this industry today are not a reflection on the companies or their workers, but are the result of unfair trading practices and illegal subsidizing on the part of our trading partners.

In a floor speech last week, I discussed the state of the steel industry. As I have said, our steel industry is competitive, but that does not mean it can compete in an environment where all the odds are stacked against them. The VRA Program has offered the steel industry some defense against trade-distorting conditions worldwide. Those conditions are exacerbated by foreign governments who intervene in steel markets through massive subsidies and keep a firm grip on their own steel markets by restricting imports, thereby diverting steel to the United States. Our industry's ability is also weakened by foreign producers who dump steel into our market in violation of United States and international law.

The legislation we are introducing today gives the President the authority to negotiate and enforce VRA's for 5 years. In the letter I mentioned, President Bush explained, "The only way to produce a permanent solution to the domestic steel industry's problems is to bring an end to these unfair practices and restore a competitive market in steel."

Obviously, this is a goal we, the industry and the administration share. Yet, no one believes these foreign trade barriers are going to come tumbling down in the immediate future—tedious, painstaking, long-term negotiations are the only way to bring about a competitive world steel market. To successfully conclude these negotiations, the President needs the full flexibility that comes with a 5-year extension.

The steel industry has made commendable use of the time they have been given under the existing VRA Program. VRA's have enabled domestic steel producers to make investments which have resulted in enormous quality improvements and productivity gains. Costs are down 35 percent since 1982, and productivity gains are up 40 percent over the same period. In fact, U.S. productivity—4.6 man hours per finished ton—is probably the highest in the world. The extension of the VRA's is essential to ongoing reinvestment in modernization of the domestic steel industry. Extension will assure future reinvestment in plant and equipment, modernization of operations, and worker retraining. If the legislation passes, U.S. companies will be required to reinvest substantially all of their net cash-flow from steel operations back into the steel industry, as has been required for the last 5 years. Of course, the VRA's not only benefit steel producers, but consumers as well. Steel customers are best served by a private steel industry growing more cost efficient and internationally competitive. VRA's are a win-win program for America.

The fruits of the VRA Program are just beginning to be seen in the turnaround of the steel industry. U.S. producers have returned to profitability in the last 18 months. That spark of profitability will encourage American steel producers to stay in business and provide the country with steel which is essential to our defense, industrial base and infrastructure.

The brighter aspects of the picture on steel I have painted could be dashed by the termination of the VRA Program. We do not want to see a return to the situation in the dark days of the early 1980's—import penetration of 26 percent, billions of dollars of losses and record numbers of bankruptcies. Without VRA's we will see a surge of dumped, subsidized and disruptive steel imports. I am hopeful that the Congress will see the wisdom in extending the President's authority to renegotiate the VRA's and pass this legislation. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor our bill and help us achieve its enactment as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 378

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Steel Import Stabilization Extension Act".

EXTENSION OF ACT

SEC. 2. Section 806(a) of the Steel Import Stabilization Act (19 U.S.C. 2253 note) is amended—

(1) by striking "fifth" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "tenth"; and

(2) by striking "or fourth" in paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, or ninth".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, in this third discussion of the President's Steel Program, I want to lay out for Senators where we stand today. Last week I demonstrated the sorry state of the international steel market and the pervasive dumping and subsidies that plague it. Yesterday I explained in some detail how the domestic industry had wisely used the time made available by the program to improve its competitiveness. Indeed, if there is one issue in this debate that appears to be incontrovertible, it is that the industry has made significant gains in restoring its competitiveness.

These two issues—the state of world steel trade and the health of our industry, are the two pillars on which the President's program is built and which justify its extension. As my previous discussions have made clear, we have made some progress on the second, but none at all on the first. USTR has done little if anything to persuade our trading partners to change their behavior.

President Bush, when he wrote me on this subject, addressed exactly the same points. His letter, which I ask unanimous consent be printed at the conclusion of my remarks today, makes clear his firm commitment to restoring the market system in steel and continuing the program. He stated:

One of the key trade policy goals of a Bush Administration will be to achieve an international consensus on eliminating these practices, and, pending that, I can assure you of my intention to continue the voluntary restraint program after September 30, 1989. As Vice President, I worked to prevent the sacrifice of our industry to those who choose not to subject themselves to the discipline of the market, and I have no intention of abandoning that commitment if I am elected President.

Much has been made of the fact that the President's letter did not go into detail with respect to the duration or nature of the program. Obviously, it would have been inappropriate and presumptuous at that point to prejudge every issue related to the VRA Program. Some of them had not even been invented last fall.

It is not entirely correct, however, to say that he did not address the duration question. He stated quite clearly in the portion of his letter I just read that he intended to negotiate the elimination of unfair trading practices and, pending that, to continue the program. That clearly suggests the program is to exist until the unfair practices are eliminated. I would also suggest that was President Reagan's objective as well, although he clearly failed to achieve it. This time around we will do better.

The legislation, Senator ROCKEFELLER and I are introducing today along with others, is intended to help the President achieve his objectives.

The bill is permissive in that it does not require the President to take any action at all. It simply extends for 5 years the President's authority to enforce the VRA Program. That authority was included in the Steel Import Stabilization Act in 1984 because it was thought necessary for the Customs Service and the Commerce Department to have explicit authority to deny entry to imports unaccompanied by the proper foreign export documents. It is prudent at this point to continue that authority, and 5 years is an appropriate length of time, that guarantees congressional review in the future. Such an extension does not constrain the President's freedom of action. He can terminate the program at any point or decline to extend it, although that would be violating his commitment to me.

I would also note that this bill, in addition to extending enforcement authority, also continues the industry's obligation to invest substantially all its cash-flow in modernization, research and development, and retraining. The industry does not shirk that responsibility. It welcomes it, and it guarantees the further development of a healthy industry that can compete with any other in the world.

Thus, while enactment of this bill will hardly conclude the debate over VRA extension, it will help move it forward to focus on the important questions of how the program will be configured—the inclusion of new countries, the adjustment of restraint levels, streamlining the short supply process, and so on.

To facilitate that discussion, a recent report by the Congressional Research Service provides a wealth of data and information on the recent operation of the current program and its effect on the U.S. economy. Most significantly, that report points out that the VRA limits were not entirely filled in 1987 and were even less filled in the first half of 1988—only about 72 percent—which makes it difficult to blame the program for price increases. Indeed, as I indicated yesterday, available evidence seems to suggest that prices are currently higher in the rest of the world, particularly in Asia, than they are here, and the unfilled limits reflect that fact.

At the same time, the CRS report discusses in some detail the extent to which countries have taken advantage of the flexibility already built into the program to meet changes in demand. Countries have borrowed from future years' limits and have carried forward unused quotas for use in subsequent periods. As a result, in some situations where demand has warranted it, countries have legally shipped in more than 100 percent of their limit, without resorting to the short supply system. I ask that the text of this CRS study be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks today.

Finally, Mr. President, let me express the hope that this debate will continue to be based on the facts and no on wild assertions that have no basis in reality. In my judgment those facts are clear, and once examined objectively will lead to only one conclusion. It is in our Nation's interest, our steel industry's interest, and foreign producers' long-term interests to renew this program and facilitate the restoration of the market system to steel trade.

There being no objection, the letter and study were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, November 4, 1988.

Hon. JOHN HEINZ,
U.S. Senator, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HEINZ: One on the significant successes of the Reagan Administration has been the President's Steel Program. During its first four years the steel industry has reduced capacity, cut costs, and modernized its equipment and technology to the point where it is now one of the most efficient producers in the world on a man hour per ton basis.

This Administration's success in pursuing the goal of a privately owned, internationally competitive steel industry was made possible by the reduction in subsidized and dumped steel imports provided by the voluntary restraint agreements we have negotiated. A comprehensive VRA program has proven to be more effective in offsetting unfair trade practices than trying to counter these practices on a case-by-case basis.

Unfortunately, while the voluntary restraints have clearly had a positive impact on the U.S. industry, we have not at the same time made as much progress toward eliminating market distorting practices. Global overcapacity remains a serious problem, and there is still substantial dumping and subsidizing. The only way to produce a permanent solution to the domestic steel industry's problems is to bring an end to these unfair practices and restore a competitive market in steel.

One of the key trade policy goals of a Bush Administration will be to achieve an international consensus on eliminating these practices, and, pending that, I can assure you of my intention to continue the voluntary restraint program after September 30, 1989. As Vice President, I worked to prevent the sacrifice of our industry to those who choose not to subject themselves to the discipline of the market, and I have no intention of abandoning that commitment if I am elected President.

At the same time, I also endorse the requirement that major steel firms substantially reinvest their cash flow because much more needs to be done. The industry's future progress will depend on both the voluntary restraints and the further investment and modernization steps that are undertaken. I intend to make sure that such further progress is made.

I am also encouraged by the recent growth in U.S. steel exports. If elected President, I will work vigorously to encourage growth by pressing to open up steel markets abroad.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

STEEL IMPORTS: ARE THE VRA COUNTRIES FILLING THEIR QUOTAS?

(By David J. Cantor, Specialist in Industry Economics, Economics Division, Congressional Research Service)

SUMMARY

Based on an analysis of official data on the steel exports of countries covered by voluntary export restraint agreements under the President's steel program (VRAs) for 1987, it appears that the aggregate quota limits, and those for major product categories established by the VRAs were filled for most of the countries. But, these quotas do not appear to have been filled in the first half of 1988. In 1987, the VRA countries in the aggregate exported 94 percent of the quantity of steel they were entitled to ship to the United States, although most of the countries came close to filling or exceeded their overall quotas, and those for specific major product categories. In the first six months of 1988, they filled about 72 percent of their estimated export ceilings. While price increases in 1987 might have been influenced by the steel quotas that were filled, any domestic increases in steel prices experienced after early in 1988 might not be explained by the VRA quotas.

If the VRA countries did not fill their quotas, steel price increases experienced generally cannot be attributed to the existence of the VRAs. Economic theory holds that quotas (including those embodied in voluntary export restraint agreements) can result in price increases when the quotas are binding or filled. The theory assumes that, if there were no import limits on the amount of a product, additional quantities of the product could be purchased at the prevailing price; binding quotas create an artificial supply constraint. But, if the quotas are not filled, any change in price cannot, as a rule, be attributed to them.

One interesting aspect of the steel program emerges, namely the considerable flexibility in the process for implementing and enforcing the VRAs. In reality, the quotas established under the VRAs are not rigid. Various provisions written into each VRA enable both the Department of Commerce and the VRA countries to revise the export ceilings, even to the point of permitting them to be exceeded. As a result, potential shortages of products can be alleviated by modifying the amount of steel that can be exported from VRA countries. This flexibility provides a mechanism to restrain price increases resulting from limits on potential supply in the face of rising demand. In a significant sense, the steel program is constructed in a way to reduce, if not prevent the adverse consequences of a system of rigid, unilateral quotas.

STEEL IMPORTS: ARE THE VRA COUNTRIES FILLING THEIR QUOTAS?

One of the main concerns regarding the effects of the President's steel program is the effect on domestic steel prices of the export limits of steel-exporting countries. A key element of the President's program is the bilaterally negotiated voluntary export restraint agreements (VRAs). These agreements establish quotas on the amounts of various steel products that VRA countries can export to the United States. Conventional economic theory suggests, however, that quotas result in higher prices. To the extent that quotas are filled before demand is satisfied, the conclusion of conventional theory holds. But, if the quotas are not filled (or, to use the language of economics, not binding), then any change in price cannot be attributed to the quotas.

Based on an analysis of official data on the steel exports of countries covered by voluntary export restraint agreements under the President's steel program (VRAs) for 1987, it appears that the aggregate quota limits, and those for major product categories established by the VRAs were filled for most of the countries. But, these quotas do not appear to have been filled in the first half of 1988. In 1987, the VRA countries in the aggregate exported 94 percent of the quantity of steel they were entitled to ship to the United States, although most of the countries came close to filling or exceeded their overall quotas, and those for specific major product categories. In the first six months of 1988, they filled about 72 percent of their estimated export ceilings. While price increases in 1987 might have been influenced by the steel quotas that were filled, any domestic increases in steel prices experienced in 1988 might not be explained by the VRA quotas.

The data for the individual countries indicate that several of them did in fact come close to filling their negotiated quotas in 1987, and that some even exceeded their quotas in this year. This result applies to both the total vlume of shipments in 1987, and the amounts of major products.

The data for the first half of 1988 suggest a different situation. Namely, all but four of the 29 countries covered by VRAs exported significantly less than the estimated amounts they could have shipped to the United States in this period. This finding also applies to individual product categories.

The analysis of the official data reveals another significant aspect of the President's steel program—namely, that the quota limits themselves are flexibile. Under the several VRAs, countries are permitted to "borrow" against their quota limits in a succeeding period. Export limits for several countries are determined by market forecasts which are updated quarterly, and, therefore, subject to change. There are provisions for carrying forward into a succeeding period the export of quantities of steel products that could have been but were not shipped in the previous period. Under the "short supply" process, quotas could be increased when domestic producers are unable to satisfy domestic demand for particular products.

As a result of the flexibility for managing the steel program, simply looking at the data—particularly, the data for 1987—could lead to the conclusion that quotas are in fact being filled, or nearly filled. In 1987, six countries filled 98 percent or more of their quotas. The argument could be made that these countries "effectively" shipped as much steel as they were permitted to under their VRAs. But, it is also clear that the quota limits could be expanded in the case of rising demand. This is the most likely explanation for the fact that several countries actually exceeded their stated quota limits. That is, as the year proceeded, the VRA countries were able to bring forward into 1987 some of the volume of exports they would be allowed to ship in 1988. A detailed examination of the data indicates that many of these countries increased their shipments toward the end of the year, and especially in December 1987, and this may explain why their 1987 quotas were filled. In the same period, three countries exported more than 100 percent of their allowable quota limits. Exceeding the quota limits does not mean, however, that the three countries were not in compliance with their VRAs; it is more likely that they were taking advantage of the flexibility that the VRAs offer.

STEEL EXPORTS FROM VRA COUNTRIES IN 1987

Aggregate Exports of VRA Countries

In 1987, the 29 VRA Countries (including those covered by the VRA with the European Community) exported more than 1.36 million tons of steel products to the United States. Their combined export ceiling was over 1.45 million tons. Thus, as a group, they actually exported nearly 870,500 fewer tons of steel products than they could have, or about 94 percent of their limit under their VRAs. Most of the undershipment is accounted for by a few countries—mostly Japan, although Spain and Mexico also shipped noticeably less than they were permitted to export to the United States. These data, and those for the individual countries are presented in table 1.

Four countries—Austria, Japan, Mexico, and Spain—exported significantly less steel to the United States in 1987 than they were allowed. These four countries exported about 5.1 million tons of steel to the United States in 1987; the limit on their exports was about 5.9 million tons. They shipped about 775,400 fewer tons of steel to the United States—or 13 percent less—than they could have exported in 1987. Japan accounted for most of this undershipment: Japan exported about 590,000 tons less than its ceiling, about 68 percent of the total undershipments. Spain's undershipments totaled more than 101,000 tons.

Most of the VRA countries appear to have come close to filling their quota limits. Seven countries—Czechoslovakia, the European Community countries (excluding Portugal and Spain), Finland, Hungary, Korea, Poland, and Portugal—filled more than 90 percent of their export ceilings. Five countries filled between 90 and 95 percent of their quota limits: Australia, China (PRC), East Germany, Romania, and Venezuela. These twelve countries accounted for about 53 percent of the total steel exports of VRA countries in 1987, and for about 50.5 percent of the quota limits of the VRA countries. These twelve countries shipped about 168,200 tons less than they were entitled to export, or about 19.3 percent of the undershipments of steel from all the VRA countries.

Three countries—Brazil, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia—shipped in excess of their steel export ceilings. These countries shipped nearly 73,200 more tons of steel to the United States than their export ceilings, or about 5.5 percent. Brazil accounted for most of the excess shipments, about 58,600 tons. Trinidad and Tobago shipped about 13,700 tons more than its export ceiling. That these countries exceeded their quotas in 1987 does not necessarily mean that they were not in compliance with their VRAs. One of the unique aspects of the President's steel program is the considerable flexibility built into it to minimize disruption in the market.

The excess shipments of steel products from Trinidad and Tobago to the United States in 1987 is explained by the fact that this country entered the program in early 1987. Under all of the VRAs, countries are permitted to ship all of the steel on order at the time of the execution of the agreement, even if this would mean that they would exceed their quota limits. In subsequent periods of the term of their VRAs, the countries would "pay back" their overshipments by reducing their exports to levels below their quota limits. In the first half of 1987, steel exports from Trinidad and Tobago accounted for nearly 80 percent of their total exports to the United States in 1987; this "bunching" of its exports in this period is most likely explained by the provision in its VRA permitting it to ship all of the steel for which it had orders prior to the execution of its agreement.

Although the data indicate that several countries have approached or even exceeded their export limits, the explanation for this may lie in the flexibility built into the administration of the VRA program. The quota limits are established on the basis of market forecasts for individual steel mill products. But, in addition, there are provisions in the VRAs to alter the actual amounts that can be exported to the United States. These provisions include the ability to "borrow" from the quota that would be set for the next year, the ability to carry forward to the next period some quantities not shipped in the current period, and exemptions from the established export ceilings resulting from short supply. Essentially, these provisions provide for flexibility in the quota limits themselves.

Under all of the VRAs, countries are permitted to "borrow" against the quotas of subsequent periods, reducing their shipments in those subsequent periods; any such borrowing must occur in the fourth quarter of the year. This fact probably explains why so many of the fifteen countries that exported 90 percent or more of their quotas in 1987 did so. This provision is the most likely explanation for three of the countries exceeding their quotas. The data shows that nine of these countries (including the European Community countries) exported a disproportionately large share of their total steel exports to the United States in December 1987 or in the last calendar quarter of the year. These data are presented in table 2.

Seven of these fifteen countries shipped more than 25 percent of their total steel exports to the United States in the fourth quarter of 1987: Australia, Brazil, the European Community, Finland, Poland, Romania, and Venezuela. Australian and Venezuelan exports in the fourth quarter were nearly 40 percent of their total shipments for the full year. The exports of the other five countries in this quarter accounted for between 28 and 30 percent of their total steel shipments to the United States in 1987.

Nine of these fifteen countries shipped at least 10 percent of their total steel exports for 1987 to the United States in December: Australia, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, the European Community, Finland, Poland, Portugal, Romania, and Venezuela. December shipments from Australia, Portugal, and Venezuela accounted for more than 20 percent of their total steel exports to the United States in 1987. Steel exports from Czechoslovakia, Finland, and Poland in December represented between 15 and 20 percent of their total shipments to the United States for the year.

The data of table 2 suggest that most of the countries that came close to filling or exceeded their steel quota limits in 1987 accelerated to some extent their shipments in either the last quarter of the year or in the last month of the year. A significant exception to this pattern was Korea. Korea exported about 22.4 percent of its total steel shipments to the United States in 1987 in the last quarter, and 7.1 percent in December.

The relative concentration of the steel exports from so many of the VRA countries in the last quarter and/or month of 1987 may be due to the changes during the year in the market forecasts under which many of the quota limits are established. As 1987 proceeded, it became apparent that steel demand in the United States was rising. This increase in demand would most likely be captured in forecasts performed later in the year than earlier. The VRA countries use the forecasts for the year as a guide to the volume of steel they can ship to the United States. Under the terms of the VRAs, the various countries are prohibited from shipping more than 55 percent of their forecasted ceiling in two successive calendar quarters. But, if the forecasts indicate a rising demand, the countries could be expected to increase their exports for the subsequent months to capture as much of the projected increase in demand as possible.

Another factor that might explain why so many VRA countries exported 90 percent or more of their quota limits is the so-called "short supply" provisions in the several VRAs. The "short supply" provision is a mechanism that enables quota limits to be exceeded when domestic producers are unable to supply the quantity demanded of particular steel products. When a domestic steel consumer is unable to obtain the product from a domestic seller or a VRA country, because the latter has exhausted or is likely to exhaust its quota, the consumer may petition the Department of Commerce (Commerce) for an exemption to the quota limit. Similarly, when a VRA country has orders for such products, but has filled its quota, it may also petition for an exemption to its quota limit. Commerce evaluates each petition individually, and, if it finds that domestic suppliers cannot fill the orders, may increase the quota limit for the product. During 1987, and owing to the relatively strong demand for steel in the United States, several short supply petitions were filed and approved. Thus, the increase in exports of steel products from the VRA countries in the last quarter of 1987 may reflect the granting of short supply petitions.

Finally, the several VRAs permit the countries to adjust their quotas in the succeeding year to account for over- or undershipments in the previous year. Available official data indicate that these countries have been permitted to carry forward into 1988 over 439,000 tons of steel product exports from their 1987 quota limits. Countries that did not ship all that they could export in 1987 are permitted to carry all or part of that tonnage forward into the next year. Several countries, including the European Community, Finland, Japan, Korea, Mexico, and Spain, were permitted to carry forward more than 515,000 tons. Five countries, including Brazil, East Germany, and Trinidad and Togabo, had their 1988 quotas reduced. No agreement on the total adjustments to the 1988 quotas had been reached with Australia or Venezuela. Japan accounts for most of the carry forwards with more than 373,287 tons, or about 72 percent of the total amount carried forward. In the case of Brazil, the 1988 quota was reduced by over 58,600 tons. Most of this reduction was in semifinished steel; with respect to finished steel mill products, Brazilian exports could be increased over the market forecast for 1988. The 1988 allocation for Trinidad and Tobago was reduced to reflect the excess shipments in 1987 resulting from its late entry into the steel program.

The flexibility that characterizes the process for implementing the steel program gives rise to some confusion and difficulty in interpreting the data on exports from VRA countries. The fact remains that all but three of these countries exported less steel tonnage to the United States in 1987 than they were permitted by their agreements. That several came close to reaching or exceeded their limits may be the result of the flexibilty that characterizes the administration of the VRAs. All of the VRA countries together exported 94 percent of the volume of steel they were allowed to ship to the United States in 1987.

Exports of Selected Steel Products From VRA Countries in 1987

Consideration of the extent to which VRA countries filled their expert quotas for particular products is important, because the VRAs wre negotiated on the basis of individual products. That is, the aggregate quantity of all steel products that could be exported under a VRA is determined generally on the basis of the amounts or market shares allocated to specific products.

Although the VRA countries exported to the United States less steel in the aggregate than permitted by their agreements, the question arises as to whether or not this pattern applies to all products. It may be that countries did fill or try to fill their quotas of low cost and/or high value products, especially in the light of the depreciation of the U.S. dollar relative to other currencies. That is, various VRA countries may have opted to ship those products whose prices in the domestic market were sufficiently high as to enable the exporters to absorb all or a major part of the change in the exchange rate.[1] Also, the VRA countries may have attempted to fill their quotas for those products that experienced a significant increase in domestic demand—especially semifinished steel and steel plate.

Six broad categories of steel products have been selected for this analysis: semifinished steel, steel plate, hot rolled sheet and strip, cold rolled sheet and strip, coated sheet, and steel pipe and tubular products. These categories accounted for at least 53.6 percent of the total shipments of steel products by VRA countries. Each of the categories is either a low cost/high value product, or one that was in especially great demand in the United States. Tables 3 through 8 present data on the volume of exports, the export ceilings, and the share of the export ceilings for each of these products.

At this point, it should be noted that not all VRA countries have explicit export quota limits for all products. Some agreements define product categories in great detail, while others specify as few as one specific product and a catch-all category of "all other products". For example, the VRA with the European Community specifies 33 different product categories, while the VRA with China (PRC) specifies only nails as a product category. For purposes of this analysis, therefore, only those countries whose VRAs explictly define the products selected are identified in the tables. Given the catch-all category of "all other products", it is very likely that countries not listed in the tables export some of the selected products to the United States.[2]

[2] The VRA with Japan provides an especially good example of this case, because, in general, the quantities of particular steel products that Japan can export to the United States are large. Japan's VRA does not specify hot rolled sheet as an explicit product category, although it does identify other sheet and strip products. Under its agreement, if Japan does not fill its quota for identified sheet and strip products, it can shift the unused quantity to other unspecified sheet and strip products. In general, these other sheet and strip products consist of hot rolled sheet and strip.

With the exceptions of cold rolled sheet and strip and coated sheet, the VRA countries exported substantially all of their allocations of the selected products. Approximately 99.6 percent of the identified semifinished steel quotas were filled in 1987. About 99.8 percent of the steel plate that could be exported was shipped to the United States. About 97.9 percent of the quota for hot rolled sheet and strip was filled. About 95.6 percent of the allowable exports of pipe and tube were shipped in 1987.

Less than 95 percent of the identified quota for cold rolled sheet and strip was filled in 1987. Approximately 93.4 percent of these products were exported by the countries whose VRAs explicitly identified cold rolled sheet and strip as a product category. Only about 84.6 percent of the identified quotas for coated sheet were filled.

Japan appears to be the only major country to consistently and significantly fall short of filling its quotas in each of these specific product categories. With the exception of steel pipe and tube, Japanese steel producers shipped less than 90 percent of their allowable exports in each of the product categories. In the case of pipe and tube, Japan filled about 93.5 percent of its quota.

The significant appreciation of the yen relative to the U.S. dollar and to the currencies of other major Asian producers—in particular, Korea and Taiwan—may explain the reason for its failure to fill its quotas. First, Japanese steel became increasingly expensive in dollar terms as a result of the increase in the value of Japan's currency relative to the U.S. dollar. Second, while other Asian currencies increased in value, none increased more than the yen. Given that other Asian countries, like Korea, were and are expanding their steel industries, they were in a position to compete with Japan for the U.S. market in terms of both price and quality of product.

As the data in the several tables indicate, it was not uncommon for many countries to exceed their export limits. Of the ten countries with explicit export limits on semifinished steel, five—Australia, Brazil, the European Community, Korea, and Trinidad and Tobago—exported at least 100 percent of their quotas. Seven of the eleven countries with explicit export limits on steel plate—Brazil, East Germany, the European Community, Finland, Korea, Poland, and Spain—exceeded those limits. Four of the twelve countries with identified quotas on pipe and tube products—Korea, Mexico, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia—reached or shipped in excess of their limits on exports of these products to the United States.

As in the case of aggregate exports of all VRA countries, the extent to which the quotas of most of the six selected product categories were filled may be explained by the flexible mechanism for administering the steel program. That so many countries in most of these categories exceeded their quota limits is evidence of their being able to "borrow" against 1988 or later quotas. This "borrowing" may have been permitted, owing to the positive changes in the market forecasts throughout 1987.

STEEL EXPORTS OF VRA COUNTRIES IN 1988

Aggregate Exports of VRA Countries

In the first half of 1988, the rate at which VRA countries filled their quotas was considerably less than for all of 1987. In this period, the VRA countries as a group exported about 72.1 percent of all the steel products to the United States that they were able to under their agreements. Their exports totalled about 5.96 million tons; their estimated export ceiling was approximately 8.27 million tons. The VRA countries as a group exported about 2.3 million tons less than they could have shipped to the United States in the first half of 1988. These data, and those for the individual countries are presented in table 9.

Thirteen of the countries exported less than 80 percent of the volume they could have shipped to the United States. Four countries—Australia, Austria, Spain, and Venezuela—shipped up to half of their estimated export limit. Four countries—China (PRC), Finland, Japan, and Portugal—exported between 51 and 70 percent of their estimated quotas for the period. Brazil, Czechoslovakia, the European Community, Korea, and Yugoslavia exported between 71 and 80 percent of their estimated quotas for the period.

Five countries shipped 90 percent or more of their estimated quota. Mexico shipped about 95.1 percent of the estimated volume it was permitted. Trinidad and Tobago exported about 94 percent of its estimated limit. Three countries—Hungary, Poland, and Romania—exceeded their estimated limits. East Germany approached the 90-percent level of quota shipments; this country shipped about 88.1 percent of its estimated export ceiling.

The flexibility that characterizes the administration of the VRAs may to some extent explain why the VRA countries shipped relatively little of their estimated export ceilings. In the discussion of the experience of 1987, it was posited that many of the countries may have "borrowed" from their 1988 quotas. If this was the case, then they would have been required to reduce their 1988 shipment levels. On the other hand, it was noted that most of the VRA countries were permitted to carry forward to 1988 shipments that could have been made, but were not made in 1987. It is quite possible, therefore, that the "paybacks" and the "carry-forwards" offset each other.

A Note on Methodology

Assessing the extent to which VRA countries have filled their quotas in the first half of 1988 is complicated by at least two factors. First, the data on country exports may not be complete. Second, the available export data is compared with the most recent product market forecast, the forecast made in October 1988. Since this forecast reflects more actual experience than forecasts made earlier in the year, its use for estimating the percentage of the estimated quota filled in the first half of 1988 may lead to an understatement or overstatement of the estimate.

Official data on VRA country exports produced as recently as December 1988 may be incomplete even for the first six months of 1988. The quotas under the steel program are export quotas, not import quotas. Monitoring compliance with the various VRAs requires, therefore, that only exports be considered. Under the VRAs, each country is required to issue an export license for each shipment of covered steel products. These licenses are presented at the port of entry in the United States when the shipment arrives and is cleared through customs. The licenses are forwarded to the Commerce Department, where they are used to compile totals of steel shipments under the VRAs. There is a lag in the time that a shipment leaves the country of origin, and the time it passes through customs in the United States; this lag may be several months in duration. Thus, although official data was most recently compiled in mid-December 1988, there can be no assurance that the reported exports for even the first half of the year are complete.

Nevertheless, for purposes of this analysis, it is assumed that the data for the first half of the year are substantially complete. While occasional shipments exported during the first six months of 1988 may not have entered the United States, the number of such shipments is likely to be small. Another factor that could affect the thoroughness of the reported exports is that the export licenses were not transmitted to Commerce. Again, for the first half of 1988, the possibility that Commerce did not receive the license documents is small. Thus, there is a likelihood that the data for the first six months of 1988 are complete. Assessments of the extent to which VRA quotas are being filled in 1988 may be reasonably made for at least this period of time.

A more significant problem is the choice of which forecast to use in the analysis. As noted previously, the export ceilings for each country and products are determined by a product market forecast made by an economic forecasting organization acceptable to both the VRA countries and the Department of Commerce. The contractor, Data Resources, Inc., makes several forecasts each year: February, May, August, and October. The later the forecast for a given year, the greater the likelihood that it reflects the experience of the year. For example, the February forecast for 1988 has little, if any actual experience for 1988; the October forecast is more likely to reflect what the full year market demand will be, because it can rely upon the actual experience for at least eight or nine months of the year. The VRA countries use the forecasts as a guideline for determining the level of their exports in the calendar quarter when the forecast is made, and in the next quarter. The May forecast, for example, could trigger an increase in exports shipped in June, as well as providing guidance for the calendar quarter from July through September. The August forecast, on the other hand, probably reflects the actual experience for the first and second calendar quarters of the year.

For purposes of this analysis, the average of the May and August forecasts for 1988 is used. As just noted, the May forecast helps to explain any shift in export behavior in June, and the August forecast does reflect actual experience. Given that the periodic forecasts for 1988 were revised upward throughout the year, using the average of the May and August forecasts gives more weight to the lower estimates in May. As a result, there is the possibility that the results of the analysis presented in table 9 overstate the extent to which VRA countries filled their quotas in the first half of the year. Using the average of the two forecasts, which result in a lower value for export ceilings than the August forecast, provides some basis for accounting for the perceptions of exporters early in 1988, and, at the same time, reflects actual experience.

To estimate the share of the export ceiling filled, the reported exports for the first half of 1988 are divided by the average of the export ceilings based on the May and August forecasts. Since the forecasts and, therefore, the export ceilings are stated in annualized quantities, they are divided by two to estimate the export ceiling for the first six months of 1988. It should be noted that these ceilings are not based solely on the forecasts; they include adjustments for carry-forwards of unused quotas from 1987.

Finally, this approach assumes that the VRA quotas are fixed for a particular period; they are not. As noted previously, the forecasts only provide guidance to the VRA countries as to the quantity of steel they can export. The actual ceilings are not determined until late in the year, and the extent to which the quotas are filled cannot be assessed until all of the export licenses for the year are received, possibly as late as June of the following year. In addition, during the year, VRA countries are permitted to exceed their estimated quotas; for example, they can ship up to 55 percent of their estimated export ceiling in two successive calendar quotas.

Exports of Selected Steel Products From VRA Countries in 1988

The VRA countries that had explicit export limits for specific selected steel products did not fill their potential quotas on these products in the first half of 1988. The products selected are those enumerated previously for 1987: semifinished steel, steel plate, hot rolled sheet and strip, cold rolled sheet and strip, coated sheet, and steel pipe and tube. The shares of the export ceilings actually exported in the first six months of 1988 ranged from 62.2 percent in the case of coated sheet to 85.2 percent for semifinished steel. Data on actual exports, estimated export limits, and the shares of the limit actually exported are presented in tables 10 through 15.

In most cases, there are instances where countries exceeded their estimated limits. The European Community Countries (excluding Portugal and Spain) shipped 103.4 percent of their limit on semifinished steel. Mexico, Poland, and Romania shipped from about 124 percent to about 145 percent of their estimated limits of steel plate. Romania shipped virtually all of its limit for hot rolled sheet and strip for the entire year in the first half of 1988. Mexico exceeded its estimated ceiling on cold rolled sheet in the first six months of 1988, shipping about 121 percent of its estimated quota. Mexico, Romania, and Yugoslavia shipped from about 101 percent to about 135 percent of their estimated quotas of steel pipe and tube.

Only in the case of coated sheet were the estimated quotas for the first half of 1988 not filled by any of the countries that had explicit export ceilings for products in this category. On average, the six countries with such quotas shipped about 62.2 percent of their combined export ceiling. The shares of the limits filled by the six countries ranged from 53.7 percent in the case of Australia to 82.9 percent for East Germany.

Apart from those countries that exceeded their estimated limits, there are only a few instances in which countries filled most of their quotas. For the purpose of establishing a cut-off point to identify these cases, countries that exported 90 percent or more of their estimated limits are considered to have filled most of their quotas. Brazil and Japan each shipped over 95 percent of their estimated limits of semifinished steel. East Germany exported nearly 97 percent of its estimated quota of steel plate. Hungary, Korea, and Mexico shipped between 90 percent and 95 percent of their estimated export ceilings on hot rolled sheet and strip.

In some cases, countries shipped none of their estimated quota limits in the first half of 1988. Trinidad and Tobago and Venezuela exported no semifinished steel products in this period. Romania shipped no cold rolled sheet and strip.

As stated previously, the estimated export ceilings are based on the assumption that the countries would have to fill their quotas in the specified time period. This is not the case in actuality. The estimated ceilings are essentially guidelines for the VRA countries. They are subject to revision based on subsequent product market forecasts. Finally, the countries are permitted to ship up to 55 percent of their annual quotas in two consecutive calendar quarters. For example, the fact that Romania exported nearly all of its estimated ceiling on hot rolled sheet and strip in the first half of 1988 implies that it would export virtually none of these products in the last half of the year.

It should also be kept in mind that countries that do not have explicit limits on exports of these selected products may in fact ship them to the United States under the terms of the VRAs. As stated previously, several countries have a "catch-all" product category of "all other steel products" specified in their agreements. To the extent that they can find buyers for the specific products considered herein, they can export these products up to the limit estimated for this "catch-all" product category.

A number of reasons can be put forth to explain why the VRA countries generally did not fill their overall or specific product export limits in the first half of 1988. Certainly, the effect of the realignment of the exchange rates could have led some countries, like Japan, to reduce exports, or for importers to have reduced their purchases from such countries. There is another possible explanation that merits attention, especially in the context of the process for implementing the VRAs: some countries may have shipped less in the first half of 1988, because they borrowed against their 1988 quotas in 1987.

As observed in the discussion of the 1987 experience, many countries came close to filling or exceeded their overall or specific product export ceilings. A reason for this pattern is the provision in the several VRAs that permits the countries to "borrow" against future quotas. Countries that do "borrow" are required to reduce their shipments in succeeding time periods. Thus, the generally low levels of shipments in the first half of 1988 overall and for selected product categories may reflect this borrowing in 1987 and subsequent pay-back in 1988.

While this pattern probably explains some of the low shipment levels in 1988 relative to estimated export ceilings, it should be kept in mind that most countries were authorized to carry forward into 1988 some shipments that they were entitled to make in 1987, but did not make. As stated previously, the market forecasts made under the terms of the VRAs are regularly revised. In 1987, the forecasts for most products led to upward revisions in the quotas. It is quite possible, therefore, that, even though many of the "borrowing" countries filled their quotas for 1987, their quotas were adjusted upward for 1988. For example, the 1988 limit on exports of coated sheet from Australia was revised upward to permit the export of an additional 10,296 tons in 1988. As seen in the data of table 14, Australia exported only about 53.7 percent of its estimated ceiling on coated sheet in the first half of 1988. Thus, while "borrowing" helps to explain the relatively high levels of shipments in 1987, it is not totally clear that paybacks explain the relatively low share of export ceilings filed in 1988.

CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS

The official data compiled to monitor exports of steel products from VRA countries tend to support the hypothesis that these countries did not ship as much steel to the United States as permitted by their VRAs in the first half of 1988. While the VRA countries as a group did not fill their quotas in 1987; and, this is explained largely by only a few countries—mainly Japan. Even so, there is reason to believe that many of the countries that did come close to filling or exceeded their quota limits in 1987 did so by taking advantage of the flexibility in the program that permits "borrowing", "carry-forwards" of unused quotas, and short supply exemptions.

With respect to 1988, it should be remembered that the results presented herein apply to the first half of the year. Although the VRA countries appear to have exported noticeably less than permitted in this period, there is nothing to preclude their filling their quotas for the full year.

Steel price increases experienced in the first half of 1988 cannot be attributed to the existence of the VRAs. To the extent that country and/or product quotas were filled in 1987, some prices may have risen early in 1988. But, if the experience of the first half of 1988 persists throughout the year, it is less likely that any upward trend in prices during the year could be attributed entirely to the quotas. The expectation is that the effect of previously filled quotas would diminish over the entire period. Economic theory holds that quotas (including those embodied in voluntary export restraint agreements) can result in price increases when the quotas are binding or filled. The theory assumes that, if there were no import limits on the amount of a product, additional quantities of the product could be purchased at the prevailing price; binding quotas create an artificial supply constraint. But, if the quotas are not filled, any change in price cannot be attributed to them.

In this analysis of the data, another interesting aspect of the steel program emerges, namely the considerable flexibility in the process for implementing and enforcing the VRAs. In reality, the quotas established under the VRAs are not rigid. Various provisions written into each VRA enable both the Department of Commerce and the VRA countries to revise the export ceilings, even to the point of permitting them to be exceeded. As a result, potential shortages of products can be alleviated to some extent by modifying the amount of steel that can be exported from VRA countries. This flexibility provides a mechanism to restrain price increases resulting from limits on potential supply in the face of rising demand. In a significant sense, the steel program is constructed in a way to reduce substantially, if not prevent the adverse consequences of a system of rigid, unilateral quotas.

While there are these potential benefits that result from the flexible nature of the steel program, there are also difficulties created. In particular, the flexible process for implementing the program makes it very difficult to monitor individual country compliance with its VRA. The provisions for "borrowing" and for carry-forward adjustments are not automatic. There is no precise formula for establishing the volumes involved. In fact, the actual quota limits cannot be determined until after the period to which they apply has ended; and noted frequently in the text of this report, the market forecasts are basically guidelines for the VRA countries.

On the one hand, the problem in monitoring compliance with the VRAs makes it difficult to insure that countries are honoring their agreements in a real time environment. But, on the other hand, the flexibility allowed in administering the program reduces the potential costs to society that result whenever artifical barriers to trade are established.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the legislation being introduced today by Senators ROCKEFELLER and HEINZ, that will extend the voluntary restraint arrangements [VRA's] on imported steel.

The U.S. steel industry is just beginning to emerge from the structural recession that began in 1974. This recession was due to a chronic overcapacity in the worldwide steel industry and foreign government financial and political intervention in the marketplace.

Since the early 1970's the substantial growth occurred in the steel industry. This expansion was primarily being undertaken by State-owned firms overseas. In addition, there has been massive Government subsidization of foreign steel production and exports, and dumping of foreign steel at prices below foreign cost of production or at prices below those charged in home markets abroad.

The recession of 1982, and the appreciation of the dollar in the 1980's have also contributed to the structural imbalance.

By the third quarter of 1984, imports share of the U.S. market had surged to 30 percent from 12 percent in the first quarter of 1979.

In my own State of West Virginia, the two major steel companies, Weirton Steel and Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel were devastated. Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel was forced to file a petition for reorganization under chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code. Weirton Steel undertook a buyout of the company through an employee stock ownership plan to save it from closure.

In 1983, Bethlehem Steel and the United Steelworkers of America, filed a petition with the U.S. International Trade Commission, requesting import relief under section 201 of the Trade Act of 1974. The Commission recommended the granting of import relief in five major steel product areas, but President Reagan decided to deny relief under section 201, but announced he would negotiate a series of bilateral voluntary restraint arrangements [VRA's] with steel exporting nations, with the objective of reducing import penetration of the U.S. market to 20.2 percent.

The implementation of the VRA system did not begin to produce results until mid-1986, due to the time involved in completing negotiations and implementing an effective system. The import penetration levels has declined from 26.4 in 1984 to 21.3 percent in 1987.

The VRA's have enabled domestic steel producers to take significant steps to improve their international competitiveness—costs are down 35 percent since 1982, labor productivity is up 40 percent and the quality of products has been greatly improved. However, additional time is needed.

For example, Weirton Steel and Wheeling-Pitt, my own State's major steel companies, are emerging as viable competitors in the world marketplace. Weirton is expected to post its 20th consecutive profitable quarter, and has just announced a $600 million modernization project that will enhance its competitiveness. Wheeling-Pitt is just emerging from its bankruptcy, and is taking steps to ensure its long-term viability.

The domestic steel industry is a cornerstone for America's national security, industrial base, and infrastructure. A 5-year extension of the VRA's is essential to the successful completion of the efforts now under way to ensure the long-term competitiveness of this key industry.

I commend Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator HEINZ for their leadership on this important legislation, and I am hopeful that the Senate will proceed with consideration of this legislation as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues today in cosponsoring legislation extending the President's authority to renew the Voluntary Restraint Agreements [VRA's] limiting steel imports for another 5 years.

When then President Reagan negotiated the original VRA's in 1984, a massive flood of unfairly traded steel imports had severely damaged the U.S. steel industry. Domestic producers lost $14 billion from 1982 to 1987, and were forced to close many facilities and abandon ambitious modernization plans.

The U.S. industry brought hundreds of successful unfair trade cases during the 1980's which graphically documented the extent foreign producers used unfair trade practices to grab U.S. market share. It appeared, however, that relief may have come too late to preserve a viable domestic steel industry, which I believe is essential to national defense and well-being. Fortunately, the VRA Program began to succeed. It gave the U.S. industry a breathing space in which to restructure and rebuild. This process has just begun, however, as the industry struggles to overcome the massive losses of the 1980's. Continuation of the VRA's is necessary to allow completion of these processes. If this is to take place, however, it is essential that the VRA's be extended without any significant changes in coverage, scope or level of imports.

The United States simply cannot serve as a dumping ground for foreign steel producers who continue to target their overcapacity at the expense of our own industrial infrastructure. I am particularly concerned with a proposed million ton exemption which South Korea's Pohang Iron & Steel is seeking for hot rolled sheet and believe this is an area of utmost concern for the committees with jurisdiction over this issue.

I look forward to working with the appropriate committees and members of the administration on this matter over the next coming months and believe the introduction of this package is an important first step.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am an original cosponsor of the legislation introduced today by Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator HEINZ, able chairman and cochairman of the Senate Steel Caucus. This bill would give the President authority to extend the Voluntary Restraint Agreement [VRA] program for steel through 1994.

A very interesting new book, called "Steel and the State," describes the "structural recession" that has occurred in the industry. From 1973 to 1987, the work force fell from 500,000 to 163,000. More than 25 firms were bankrupted, and others were forced to merge or drastically cut back on their operations. Between 1982 and 1986 the industry suffered approximately $12 billion in net losses. However, restructuring and capital investments—made often in the face of unfair foreign competition—have resulted in remarkable productivity gains: The American steel industry today produces better quality steel at lower cost than Japan. But although the steel industry has very recently begun to show some profits, it has not yet begun to recoup its investment. The VRA Program will allow the industry to continue to restructure, reinvest, and profitably compete.

The world steel market is distorted by tremendous overcapacity, brought about by the ill-conceived investments of foreign governments in new production facilities. For domestic economic and political reasons, these companies and governments have engaged in dumping, customs fraud, and other unfair trading practices which are tremendously injurious to our steel industry. Not to extend the VRA Program is to risk flooding the U.S. market with unfairly traded imports.

After the remarkable retooling and restructuring of the American steel industry, and the sacrifice of so many workers of employment, it would be a shame to allow a new wave of unfairly traded imports to roll in now.

I urge my colleagues to support the legislation introduced today.

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators ROCKEFELLER and HEINZ and many other members of the Senate in cosponsoring legislation that reauthorizes the authority to extend steel industry voluntary restraints agreements [VRA's].

This legislation will facilitate the continued rebuilding and modernization of our domestic steel industry. And it will provide greater certainty to the industry, and the working people in the industry, that the U.S. Government is fully committed to maintaining a viable domestic steel industry.

Mr. President, the problems of the steel industry began to surface in the mid-1970's. And those problems stemmed directly from the fact that foreign governments provided huge subsidies to construct and operate steel plants. The natural consequence of these foreign government policies has been massive worldwide overcapacity in steel, price cutting, and dumping.

Although many foreign governments have recently begun to recognize the futility of subsidizing steel overcapacity, we are far from the point where a rational market for steel exists anywhere in the world. Until foreign producers are fully weaned from government subsidies, and until production and supply are more fully rationalized, it is imperative that the United States allow its domestic industry a measure of protection from foreign competitors.

Mr. President, in recent years the steel industry has made very measurable gains in improving product quality and production efficiency. In fact, we have become one of the lowest cost steel producers in the world. But in a worldwide industry that is plagued by government subsidy and overcapacity, production efficiency and low price alone will not by themselves guarantee market share. In my view, the VRA program is the most sensible way to respond to these market realities.

Although the domestic steel industry has made very considerable progress in the past few years, one of the major industries that is an integral supplier to the industry—the domestic iron ore industry—has suffered through a major retrenchment and economic downturn. In recent years, many of the mines in northern Minnesota have been closed, and those that have reopened have not returned to historic levels of operating capacity.

Part of the reason that domestic iron ore companies and their employees have not shared in the revival of the domestic steel industry derives from the fact that the steel companies have been importing iron ore from offshore producers, some of which enjoy foreign government subsidies comparable to the subsidies provided to foreign steel producers.

I want to make it clear that when this legislation is considered in the Senate Finance Committee I intend to offer an amendment, or a series of amendments, that will require the domestic steel industry to diminish their reliance on offshore producers of iron ore. While I believe it is imperative that we maintain a strong domestic steel industry, I think it is equally important that the steel industry give preference to the iron ore resources available in the United States.●

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 379. A bill to amend titles 18 and 29 of the United States Code, to eliminate, and establish an alternative to the exclusionary rule in Federal criminal proceedings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ALTERNATIVE TO EXCLUSIONARY RULE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, last year in the District of Columbia, our fellow citizens were killed at a rate greater than a person a day. Similarly gruesome statistics issue from cities around the country. It is said, with some justification, that a civilian is safer in wartorn Beirut or the tense West Bank than in an American city. Although the suburbs suffer too, remember that the poorest of the poor bear the brunt of our failure to control crime. If we hold it self-evident that all men are endowed with the inalienable right to life, we are failing in our solemn duty to legislate accordingly.

Henry David Thoreau said: "There are a thousand hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at the root." In recent Congresses we have devoted a great deal of time to "hacking at the branches" of crime. The Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 reformed bail provisions, to prevent the perpetration of further crimes pending trial or appeal, and sentencing provisions, to provide uniform and strict penalties for Federal offenses. The Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986 strengthened programs for law enforcement, interdiction, eradication, research, treatment, and education. The Omnibus Anti-Substance Abuse Act of 1988 continued this effort by making penalties more commensurate with crimes; providing for more effective prevention, education, and treatment; fostering international cooperation in control of narcotics; and reaffirming user accountability. It also strengthened criminal laws in other areas, such as child pornography.

Although these acts do help Federal law enforcement officers fight crime, criminal justice reform has barely begun. These measures represent mere "hacking at the branches." It may not be within our power to strike at the root of crime, for it lies deep in the human heart. But at least we can move from twigs to the trunk.

Last year, with much fanfare, we stiffened penalties for crime and authorized greater expenditures for prevention and enforcement. Those efforts are worthless when time after time, in case after case, criminals walk away because of some technicality. Often the excuse for this affront to justice is the exclusionary rule. That is wrong. It is time to replace the exclusionary rule in Federal criminal proceedings with alternatives more likely to protect the victim than the criminal—and, I might add, more likely to ensure enforcement of the fourth amendment.

THE EXCLUSIONARY RULE: WHAT IT IS

The fourth amendment provides:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

The exclusionary rule, or the suppression doctrine, is an attempt to enforce the fourth amendment. It is a judicial policy under which evidence obtained unreasonably—according to current fourth amendment standards—is inadmissible. Although the fourth amendment triggers its judicial application, the exclusionary rule is not a part of the Constitution. It is a court-made rule of evidence that was not adopted for Federal courts until 1914, in Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383 (1914), and for state courts until 1961, in Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961). See Rader, "Legislating a Remedy for the Fourth Amendment," 23 S. Tex. L.J. 585 (1982).

Under the rule, evidence considered to have been obtained illegally is not permitted into trial. If causal connection is determined, even the most credible kinds of evidence may be deemed tainted and excluded from trial. Causal connection refers to the judicial decision that where additional evidence is believed to have been gathered as a result of illegally seized evidence, it shall be subject to the exclusionary rule. For example, the discovery of the body of a murder victim is inadmissible evidence at trial if the body was found as a result of a confession of a pickpocket being held illegally by law enforcement officers.

THE EXCLUSIONARY RULE: WHAT IT DOES

The rule has the potential, as Chief Justice Burger has noted, of "excluding from evidence the traditional corpus deliciti in a murder or kidnaping case." Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. at 502 (1976). In other words, credible and probative evidence critical to conviction, seized in the heat of apprehending a suspected felon, may be excluded from consideration solely because a court deliberating months later believes that it was obtained in an unreasonable fashion. As the rule now operates, a criminal who in fact committed a dreadful violent crime, even one caught in the act, is set free—not because he is innocent, but because the evidence necessary to establish his guilt is deemed to have been unreasonably seized.

In a brief—amicus curiae—submitted by the district attorney of Alameda County in the case of People versus Cahan, the district attorney stated:

> The net result of the exclusionary rule is that the person who will benefit the most, in fact almost exclusively, are the blackmailer, the kidnapper, the big-time narcotic peddler, the racketeer, the dishonest gambler who preys in devious ways upon a gullible public, the panderer and procurer, the entrepreneur of syndicated prostitution, who like the pimp, lives off the earnings of prostitutes, and other types of organized syndicated crimes.

The protection of the citizenry is the foremost responsibility of the law enforcement officer; his first priority is to remove nefarious persons such as rapists, murderers, and kidnapers from the streets. In the performance of his duties, the policeman may sometimes err. Unfortunately, the exclusionary rule does not distinguish between flagrant violations and accidental errors. For example, it does not distinguish between clearly unreasonable searches of one's home and simple misstatements of information on a search warrant. Regardless of the magnitude of the error of the policeman, the rule mandates the suppression of evidence obtained in violation of the fourth amendment. A simple error in a search warrant can necessitate the release of a murderer.

Some criminals, such as gamblers and pickpockets, seek monetary gain by committing crimes against property. Others, such as rapists and child molesters, commit violent crimes against the person. The exclusionary rule steadfastly refuses to distinguish between these. Nor does it distinguish misdemeanors from felonies. Conviction of a misdemeanor elicits a penalty ranging from a fine or probation to a year of imprisonment. Conviction of a felony elicits a penalty ranging from a year of incarceration to the death penalty. In the eyes of the exclusionary rule, however, all crimes are identical. A small impropriety can cause the exclusion of evidence resulting in the reversal of the conviction of a killer as easily as that of a small-time gambler.

FAILS TO DETER POLICE MISCONDUCT

The primary reason for the institution of the exclusionary rule was to deter abusive law enforcement practice. However, there is no substantive proof that the exclusionary rule is an effective deterrent. In the Janis case, the Supreme Court cites a long list of empirical studies of the effectiveness of the suppression doctrine as a deterrent of fourth amendment violations and concludes: "No empirical observer has yet been able to establish with any assurance whether the rule has a deterrent effect even in the situations in which it is now applied." 428 U.S. at 449, n. 22.

Justice White, dissenting in Stone versus Powell, is convinced that Weeks versus United States and Mapp versus Ohio had overshot their mark insofar as they aimed to deter lawless action by police enforcement personnel and that in many of its applications the exclusionary rule was not advancing that aim in the slightest, and that in this respect it was a senseless obstacle to aiming at the truth in many criminal trials. 428 U.S. 465, 537 (1967) (citations omitted).

A law enforcement officer acting in violation of the fourth amendment should be held responsible for his actions. The exclusionary rule instead thwards the prosecutor. As Dean Wigmore explains:

> Weeks v. United States also exemplifies a trait of our Anglo-American judiciary peculiar to the mechanical and unnatural type of justice. The natural way to do justice here would be to enforce the healthy principle of the fourth amendment directly, i.e. by sending for the high-handed, over-zealous marshal who had searched without a warrant, imposing a thirty-day imprisonment for his contempt of the constitution and then proceeding to affirm the sentence of the convicted criminal.

8 Evidence section 2184 (3d ed. 1940).

The burden of proof should be upon advocates of the exclusionary rule to demonstrate that it accomplishes its purpose. After decades, that burden of proof has still not been satisfied.

In fact, the exclusionary rule may promote illicit conduct by law enforcement officers. Since the rule is conviction-oriented, it is only brought to play at the trial stage of criminal proceedings when law enforcement officials are seeking a conviction. It thus permits harassment or seizure of contraband by officers who have no intention of obtaining a conviction while providing no direct punishment to the officer who may have violated fourth amendment rights. In some instances, the rule encourages officers to turn to illegal means of law enforcement, such as false testimony.

Where is the protection for the innocent victim of illegal searches and seizures required by the fourth amendment? If an illegal search and seizure is committed upon a law-abiding citizen, the rule offers him little if any help, remedy, or protection, and certainly no compensation.

Rejection of the evidence does nothing to punish the wrongdoing official while it may and likely will, release the wrongdoing defendant. It deprives society of its remedy against one lawbreaker because he has been pursued by another. It protects one against whom incriminating evidence is discovered, but does nothing to protect innocent persons who are the victims of illegal but fruitless searches. Peterson, "Restrictions of the Law of Search and Seizure," 52 Northwestern University Law Review, 46, 55 (1958).

A report from the American Bar Association's Division of Judicial Administration states:

> Not only has the rule failed to achieve its stated purpose, but it has imposed substantial costs on society in the process. First, the exclusionary rule affords no protection or remedy to innocent persons whose fourth amendment rights have been infringed. Justice Frankfurter noted that the exclusion of evidence is a remedy which directly serves only to protect those upon whose person or persons something incriminating has been found . . . next it is clear that the exclusionary rule imposes a single, inflexible, and drastic sanction without regard to the nature, circumstances or degree of police misconduct.

An empirical study was conducted in Chicago in 1971-72 by the U.S. Department of Justice and the University of Chicago Law School to ascertain the validity of the many criticisms of the exclusionary rule. It indicated that the rule failed to deter abusive law enforcement practices. It also illustrated the lopsided protections the rule gives for violations of the fourth amendment rights. Instead of protecting the innocent victim, the rule releases both the criminal and the offending officer.

NOT CONSTITUTIONALLY REQUIRED

In England and the other Commonwealth nations, the illegality of a seizure does not exclude evidence from criminal proceedings. Police violators of the law are held personally accountable for their transgressions. This English precedent has direct relevance to our own fourth amendment. The roots of our fourth amendment are evident in the maxim cited by Lord Coke that "every man's house is his castle." Recent studies indicate that in the turbulent times just prior to the American revolution, the English prohibitions against unreasonable searches were enforced against offices of the king by a suit for damages. See Rader, "Legislating a Remedy for the Fourth Amendment," 23 S. Tex.L.J. 585 (1982). In the famous case of Entick v. Carrington, 19 Howell's State Trials 1029 (1765), the English court awarded enormous damages to the victim of an illegal search even though it was conducted by one of the king's own ministers. The First Congress must have been aware of this landmark case and in the absence of the exclusionary rule must be assumed to have preferred its remedy as the means for fourth amendment enforcement.

It comes as no surprise that the United States stands alone in using the exclusionary rule. The Entick remedy had the virtue of punishing offending officers who performed an illegal search and still permitting proper consideration of probative evidence. The exclusionary rule shields not only the otherwise guilty criminal, but also the offending law enforcement officer. Both malefactors are freed to again break the law.

The rule's adamant demand for a perfect trial is without constitutional foundation. The sixth amendment requires a speedy and public trial, not necessarily a perfect one. In addition, the Supreme Court has repeatedly interpreted the due process clauses of the 5th and 14th amendments to require that a fair trial be provided, not a perfect trial. The concept of a fair trial is an important one. Justice Rehnquist, in Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. 433 (1974), stated:

> Just as the law does not require that a defendant receive a perfect trial, only a fair one, it cannot realistically require that policemen investigating serious crimes make no errors whatsoever.

SUPREME COURT INVITES CONGRESS TO CHANGE RULE

Several Supreme Court Justices have questioned the wisdom of the exclusionary rule. Justice Black, concurring in Wolf v. Colorado, 388 U.S. 25 (1949), stated:

> The Federal exclusionary Rule is not a command of the fourth amendment but is a judicially created rule of evidence which Congress might negate.

In Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 648 (1965), Justice Black elaborated:

> The rule is not a right of privilege accorded to defendants charged with crime but is a sort of punishment against officers in order to keep them from depriving people of their Constitutional rights. In passing I would say that if that is the sole purpose, reason, object and effect of the rule, the court's action in adopting it sounds more like lawmaking than construing the Constitution.

More recently, Chief Justice Burger stated that the exclusionary rule "creates a damage remedy not provided for by the Constitution and not enacted by Congress." In Bivens v. Six Unknown Federal Narcotics Agents, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), the Chief Justice said:

> Reasonable and effective substitutes can be formulated if Congress would take the lead, as it did for example in 1946 in the Federal Tort Claims Act. I see no insurmountable obstacle to the elimination of the Suppression Doctrine if Congress would provide some meaningful and effective remedy against unlawful conduct by government officials.

Recent Supreme Court decisions concerning the exclusionary rule have continued to echo the fact, noted in Wolf v. Colorado, 388 U.S. 25 (1949), that the rule is "judicially created and one which Congress might negate." The Supreme Court has thrown down the gauntlet. Now Congress must answer the challenge.

THE PROPOSED ALTERNATIVE

The bill I propose today responds to the Supreme Court's repeated challenge. More importantly, it responds to our fellow Americans, who are increasingly becoming victims of violent criminal acts.

This bill would eliminate the exclusionary rule in Federal criminal proceedings, thus permitting evidence obtained in violation of fourth amendment rights by Federal law enforcement officials to be admitted in a Federal criminal trial. This provision would be require the addition of a new section in chapter 223 of title 18 of the United States Code. Eliminating the exclusionary rule will make available to the trial judge all the evidence for his or her determination as to its relevance to the case.

In a recent case, the Supreme Court adopted an exception to the exclusionary rule which permits the admission of illegally seized evidence if the seizure was undertaken in the good faith belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment. Senior Judge Malcolm Wilkey of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals has commented with great insight on the need for legislative correction beyond the good faith exception:

> The proposed remedy has a certain plausibility, and it will have one favorable result; fewer guilty criminals will be set free by the application of the exclusionary rule. However, the guilty going free because the constable blundered is only the most visible of the many evils associated with the exclusionary rule. There are also evils which in the aggregate are greater than sometimes freeing the guilty criminal, and each and every one of these is preserved by this proposed "remedy."
> Looking * * * at the list of existing evils * * * it is clear the only the first evil will be partially corrected by the adoption of the good faith exception. Each and every one of the other * * * evils will be retained after the proposed good faith exception remedy goes into effect. For Example, the good faith exception does not purport to give innocent victims of illegal searches and seizures any remedy at all; only the truly guilty will continue to benefit by the exclusionary rule (Cost 2). All internal disciplinary efforts of law enforcement agencies will be totally negated by the continued retention of the exclusionary rule in any form (Cost 3). The necessity to determine whether the officer acted in "good"or "bad" faith makes impossible any effective disciplinary remedy by either law enforcement agencies or outside review boards. Discipline of the officer will always undermine the prosecution of the case, if there remains any chance that the search can be found sufficiently illegal to invoke the exclusionary rule. The burden on the court is in no way lightened; it will still be necessary to determine in every criminal trial whether the officer acted in "good" or "bad" faith (Cost 4). This is now and will continue to be an unabated waste of judicial resources (Cost 5 and 6). The necessity of determining good or bad faith will be an outright encouragement to perjury, even as now (Cost 7); similarly, the retention of the rule for "bad faith" searches makes hypocrites out of judges (Cost 8). We could go down the list of remaining evils listed and see that each and every one would still be present if the proposed good faith exception is adopted.
> In addition to perpetuating the present evils, the proposed good faith exception will create an additional evil:
> Cost 13: The "good faith" exception puts a premium on ignorance and lack of training in law enforcement agencies. The ideal police recruit will be the "noble savage" who never heard of the Constitution. He will be able to do many illegal things in perfect "good faith."

The exclusionary rule forces the courts to accept suppression motions on all evidence claimed to have been obtained in violation of the fourth amendment rights. This has admittedly doubled the court calendar. Other bills continue to request that courts decide whether the evidence should be admissible in court at a suppression hearing. Thus, the exclusionary rule would remain a time consuming, added burden on the court system.

Even innocent persons subjected to illegal searches and seizures, who are arrested as a result of the illegal searches and seizures, must wait for a date on the court calendar just for a suppression hearing, and then, whether or not the evidence is found to be admissible, they must await yet another date on the court calendar for their trial. If the innocent person cannot afford bail, he probably will have to wait for his trial date confined in a local jail. On the other hand, if an alleged criminal can afford bail he will await his trial date back in society.

This bill would not allow this injustice to occur. It would free up the court's calendar by eliminating the need for an extra proceeding prior to trial, thereby allowing the courts to handle cases in a more timely and expeditious manner. The speed with which the courts could handle cases would ensure the release of innocent persons after faster as well as speed up the removal of criminals from the streets.

The exclusionary rule does not work. It protects only the guilty. The court which created the rule has been forced to create many exceptions to it and has repeatedly hinted at the need to rectify its shortcomings by legislation. This bill would do so, allowing the Federal courts to pursue truth by allowing admission of probative evidence.

S. 380. A bill to redesignate the Anniston Army Depot, Anniston, AL, as the "William F. Nichols Army Depot"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

WILLIAM F. NICHOLS ARMY DEPOT

● Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation which will redesignate the Anniston Army Depot in Anniston, AL, as the "William F. Nichols Army Depot."

Congressman Nichols was an incredibly talented and intelligent man as well as a close friend. His death on December 13, 1988, left his district and the entire State of Alabama with an enormous sense of loss.

Bill served his country with great distinction. He fought in World War II where he earned the Bronze Star. He also received a Purple Heart when he lost his leg after stepping on a land mine. Bill's devotion to our national defense continued throughout his 22 years in Congress where he eventually came to head the investigations Subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee. Through this subcommittee, Congressman Nichols helped eliminate waste in Defense by restructuring the command hierarchies of the Pentagon and the military services.

Bill did much to improve the military of this Nation. He also helped ensure that his district would share in the jobs associated with defense expenditures. Congressman Nichols' support of the Anniston Army Depot and the entire community make it only fitting that the depot be renamed the "William F. Nichols Army Depot." The depot will stand as an appropriate monument to his dedication to his constitutents and to our national defense.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Anniston Star be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the Article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Anniston (AL) Star, Dec. 17, 1988]

OFFICIALS TALK OF RENAMING AAD FOR NICHOLS

Not long after U.S. Representative Bill Nichols' death, someone came up with the idea of renaming the Anniston Army Depot in his honor. The idea has since spread, and it may become a reality.

"Congressman Nichols was a great supporter of the Army, Anniston Army Depot, and the local community . . . Because of this dedication, the possibility of renaming the depot in his memory is being discussed by Anniston community leaders" depot Public Affairs Officer Joan Gustafson said Friday.

Ms. Gustafson said that if community support continues. AAD officials will work to rename the facility.

Officials in Calhoun County embraced the idea of a Nichols Army Depot.

"I think that something in our district and in our county ought to be named in honor of Bill Nichols," County Commission Chairman Don Curry said. "He epitomized what an elected official ought to aspire to be".

Curry said he would support renaming the depot if citizens so choose.

Tom Wright, Anniston city manager, said he thinks renaming the depot would be a fitting tribute. "He [Nichols] has done a number of good things for the depot."

Anniston Mayor Bill Robison said: "I don't know of anything that has ever been named for anybody that could be more appropriate. It would make me even prouder to have the depot located in Anniston."

County Commissioner James "Pappy" Dunn also said he would support the effort. "I think it's a very viable move because Nichols has contributed towards the growth and development of AAD," he said.

S. 381. A bill to provide Federal recognition of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF MOWA BAND OF CHOCTAW INDIANS OF ALABAMA

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians Recognition Act.

The Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians is a group of about 7,000 people who live in southwest Alabama within the original boundary of the Choctaw Nation. Though the people have been located there for over 10 generations, the name "Mowa" is recent. It is derived from the first two letters of Mobile and Washington Counties in Alabama and represents their geographic location. Their ancestors established the community in this sparsely populated area during the 1800's, just prior to the removal of the Indians from the State. The Mowa Choctaws of south Alabama are a segment of the Choctaw Indians who refused to migrate from their homeland during the infamous "Trail of Tears." They avoided removal by concealing themselves and their descendants in their efforts to achieve recognition as Indians. The tribe is officially recognized by the State of Alabama and now seeks recognition by the Federal Government.

The Mowa Choctaws of Alabama have lived in the same area for the past 200 years. The members have been living together and functioning as a group for those 200 years. The direct ancestors of the Mowa's came together in the forks between the Alabama and Tombigbee Rivers, below a stream called the cut-off which flows from the Alabama River southwest to the Tombigbee. This basin area between the rivers had always been claimed by both Choctaw and Creek Indians. To settle the dispute, the U.S. Government set the watershed as the boundary line with the Creek to the east and the Choctaw to the west. The Mowa community was, and still is, on the Choctaw side of the Tombigbee River.

This Mowa area has been identified as a prehistoric Indian site by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in the corps reconnaissance study made prior to the construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway. Artifacts attest to Indian occupation long before the arrival of Europeans.

Since this early period, the Mowa people have paid taxes, voted, and served their country from the Civil War through Vietnam. However, there are still neighbors that scoff at the tribe's claim of being Indian.

Since the 1880's, the ancestors of today's Mowa's have consistently sought recognition as an Indian tribe. Each time the U.S. Government opened the rolls, the tribe applied—with the Eastern Choctaw in 1887, the Eastern Cherokees in 1907 and the Creeks in the 1950's—finally achieving State recognition in 1978.

The goal of the Mowa's in seeking Federal recognition is to preserve their community. They believe that, with a little assistance and the cooperation and good faith of their non-Indian neighbors, they can help their people improve their standard of living and obtain adequate housing. The Mowa Indians have developed a good relationship with their non-Indian neighbors. They currently serve with them in local community organizations and in positions of leadership. They have demonstrated that they can perform effectively along side their fellow Alabamians in the schools, on the assembly line and in the boardroom.

The Mowa's plans for economic development stress the dual goals of providing employment for tribe members and utilizing their existing skills, while training them for future jobs. They have no interest in get rich quick schemes or those that would destroy their resources on alienate their young people or elders. The Mowa's need the opportunities that Federal recognition will provide.

The Mowa's desire the same success that has come to their cousins, the Mississippi Band of Choctaws, since that tribe gained Federal recognition. The Mississippi Choctaws have made great strides in education, health care, housing, and job training for their people. Their economic development is a source of pride and an 80-acre industrial park which houses two major industries now employs hundreds of people. The establishment of a development company in 1969 paved the way for the construction of 400 new homes and the repair of another 200, and is responsible for construction of numerous buildings on the reservation. Plans are underway to build a child-care facility for working parents, a transportation network and a commercial shopping center. The Mississippi Choctaws are currently one of the largest employers in the State. It can also happen for the Mowa's.

Even though the Mowa Choctaw Indians have had a long battle to regain their identity, the hard work of their leaders has made the effort worthwhile. They have self respect and are proud of their heritage as native Americans. I am proud that I can assist them in their struggle to receive overdue recognition by introducing the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians Recognition Act in the 101st Congress. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in full following the completion of my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 381

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians Recognition Act".

FEDERAL RECOGNITION

SEC. 2. Federal recognition is hereby extended to the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama. All Federal laws of general application to Indians and Indian tribes shall apply with respect to the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama.

RESTORATION OF RIGHTS

SEC. 3. (a) All rights and privileges of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians which may have been abrogated or diminished before the date of enactment of this Act by reason of any provision of Federal law that terminated Federal recognition of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama are hereby restored and such Federal law shall no longer apply with respect to the Band or the members of the Band.

(b) Nothing in this Act may be construed to diminish any rights or privileges of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama, or of the members of the Band, that existed prior to the enactment of this Act.

(c) Except as otherwise specifically provided in section 4 or any other provision of this Act, nothing in this Act may be construed as altering or affecting—

(1) any rights or obligations with respect to property,

(2) any rights or obligations under any contract, or

(3) any obligation to pay a tax levied before the date of enactment of this Act.

LANDS

SEC. 4. (a) All legal rights, title, and interests in lands that are held by the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama on the date of enactment of this Act are hereby transferred to the United States in trust for the use and benefit of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama shall transfer to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior shall accept on behalf of the United States, any interest in lands acquired by such Band after the date of enactment of this Act. Such lands shall be held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Bowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Attorney General of the United States shall approve any deed or other instrument used to make a conveyance under paragraph (1).

(c) Any lands held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama by reason of this section shall constitute the reservation of such Band.

(d) The Congress finds that the provisions of this section are enacted at the request of the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama and are in the best interests of such Band.

SERVICES

SEC. 5. The Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama, and the members of such Band, shall be eligible for all services and benefits that are provided by the Federal Government to Indians because of their status as Federally recognized Indians and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such services and benefits shall be provided after the date of enactment of this Act to the Band, and to the members of the Band, without regard to the existence of a reservation for the Band or the location of the residence of any member of the Band on or near any Indian reservation.

CONSTITUTION AND BYLAWS

SEC. 6. (a) The Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama may organize for its common welfare and adopt a constitution and bylaws in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall offer to assist the Band in drafting a constitution and bylaws for the Band.

(b) Any constitution, bylaws, or amendments to the constitution or bylaws that are adopted by the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama shall take effect only after such constitution, bylaws, or amendments are filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 7. (a) Until a constitution for the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama is adopted, the membership of the Band shall consist of every individual who—

(1) is named in the tribal membership roll that is in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, or

(2) is a descendent of any individual described in paragraph (1).

(b) After the adoption of a constitution by the Mowa Band of Choctaw Indians of Alabama, the membership of the Band shall be determined in accordance with the terms of such constitution or any bylaws adopted under such constitution.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

S. 383. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to clarify the rules concerning the unconventional fuels credit with respect to gas produced from a tight formation, and to restore the application of such credit to the alternative minimum tax; to the Committee on Finance.

TIGHT SANDS TAX CREDIT RESTORATION ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill I first introduced in the 100th Congress.

This legislation would reinstate the tight sands tax credit for income tax and the alternative minimum tax. This is a credit that encourages natural gas producers to drill for hard-to-get natural gas found in geological formations that are known as tight sands.

We need to reinstate the credit because, very simply, what the bold print giveth, the fine print taketh away.

Every member of this body knows that the Tax Code is a very complex law. While one code provision may establish a tax incentive, another code provision may inadvertently take that incentive away.

In the area of natural gas, it becomes more complicated because qualifying for the tight sands credit requires a taxpayer not only meet provisions of the Tax Code, but also to comply with certain Natural Gas Gas Policy Act requirements as well as to comply with FERC orders and court interpretations on those orders.

Until recently, qualifying for the tight sands credit was, if you will pardon me, a tightrope act. But it worked. It was a sound incentive.

For the tight sands credit to be available, the Tax Code and the Natural Gas Policy Act had to be consistently interpreted. Unfortunately, recent events have effectively eliminated the credit. Congress didn't change the law. Rather, an order by FERC and subsequent Supreme Court decision produced a conflict.

The bill I am introducing today would straighten out the unintended consequences.

Section 29 of the Internal Revenue Code allows a tax credit for unconventional fuels, such as tight sands, coal seam gas, Devonian shale, provided the price of crude oil drops below a certain level and provided the gas price was "regulated." That price level was reached in 1984, and a tax credit of 52 cents per million cubic feet of gas was provided.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, in its dual-category regulation rule, provided that tight sands, or section 107, gas is automatically deregulated when it has dual classification with another NGPA classification. Prior to this ruling the producers were entitled to choose the category they wished to qualify a particular gas.

If a producer chose a "regulated" category, it was entitled to the tight sands credit. If it chose "deregulated," the Tax Code did not provide a credit.

In the Case Martin Exploration Management Co. versus FERC, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit decided that FERC had misinterpreted the statute, that producers were clearly presented with this choice of categories, and FERC could not deny this choice. At this point in the proceedings the tight sands credit was still intact.

However, the Supreme Court disagreed and reversed this order last May on a basis other than the tight sands credit. The opinion dealt with the appropriate interpretation of the Natural Gas Policy Act.

The Court in essence said: "If the gas could be regulated or deregulated, treat it as deregulated." The opinion's policy was that we should maximize deregulation. The Court did not deal with the Tax Code. The credit wasn't an issue before the Supreme Court. It wasn't even a factor. But, as a result of this ruling, the credit has been unavailable since January 1, 1985.

Mr. President, the FERC's purported deregulation has been particularly harmful to the gas producers in New Mexico, and to those in other gas producing States that depend upon this credit.

As you will recall, the original purpose of the unconventional fuels credit was to serve as an incentive to drill and as a partial compensation to producers that drilled expensive tight sands wells, in the event of a price drop. The worst case scenario has happened: The price drop has occurred and the tax credit was abolished by the FERC order.

Mr. President, I played an active role in passing the Natural Gas Policy Act, and I am very familiar with the legislative history of section 107.

The intent of Congress in this case was clear. The unconventional fuels credit provides that any wells drilled up to January 1, 1990, would be eligible for the credit during low crude oil price periods and that it would be allowed until January 1, 2001, or until the prices rose to the former levels.

The oil and gas industry have been facing tremendous difficulties for the past 4 years.

We thought the oil industry had hit bottom in 1986, but it continued to decline in 1987. The number of wells drilled in the State of New Mexico dropped 24 percent from 1986 to 1987. During that same time, oil production declined 4.5 percent and natural gas prices fell 12 percent.

I have heard from many producers in my State who have explained to me the difficulties they are facing as a result of the low natural gas prices. The reinstatement of the tight sands credit would help avoid premature abandonment of many New Mexico natural gas wells.

There are 4,850 wells throughout New Mexico that produce 200 million MCF per month. These operators have had tremendous difficulty because of a commitment made in the legislation for special pricing on 107 gas, and they have had to adjust to the substantially lower prices they have been realizing in recent years. I am told the most influential factor in deciding to continue production at that field has been the tight sands credit.

Several producers in my State say they will be unable to produce without this incentive, one they had relied upon. Certainly, they will not be able to drill the remaining wells.

This is not just a problem in New Mexico. This affects tight sands producers in Texas, West Virginia, Oklahoma, and Kansas, as well. I urge my colleagues to act quickly to correct this grave error.

The bill I am introducing is very simple, it merely reinstates the tight sands credit for income tax and the alternative minimum tax, notwithstanding the FERC order and the Supreme Court Case.

I have said on many occasions on the Senate floor that the United States needs to reevaluate its energy policy to take into account low-price scenarios that can be expected for the next 5 to 10 years. Congress needs to enact additional incentives for exploration and development. Congress needs to intervene when the Supreme Court inadvertently abolishes an incentive.

Canada has already put into place a package of tax incentives to combat low-price scenarios. Reinstating the tight sands credit doesn't go far enough. It doesn't look to the future, but it does set the present record straight.

The industry desperately needs the credit. Well completions went from 1,243 in 1986 to 938 in 1987, the lowest number in 16 years. Oil production fell from 75.7 million to 72.3 million barrels per year, and the average field price of natural gas dropped from $1.92 to $1.69 per thousand cubic feet.

Depressed oil prices are harming much of the Southwest. New Mexico ranks fourth among the States in natural gas production and seventh in crude oil.

Mr. President, about $1 out of every $3 going into New Mexico's general fund comes from oil and gas related taxes, royalties, and permanent fund earnings. It is fair to say the petroleum industry is the State's No. 1 taxpayer.

Every county in my State benefits from assessments on the oil and gas industry. Four of the 33 counties in New Mexico account for 95 percent of all oil and gas produced in the State.

The State revenues derived directly or indirectly from oil and gas sources totaled $750.7 million in 1987. That was only a 1-percent improvement over the 1986 figure of $743.5 million, but provided an extra $7.2 million for the general fund. These revenues include production taxes, State and Federal royalties, lease sales, rentals, and earnings from two State permanent funds financed primarily by assessments on oil and gas production.

In the 1986-87 school year, education's share of the oil and gas revenues in New Mexico amounted to about $404 million. These revenues are crucial to the public schools, colleges and other educational institutions and agencies.

I have included certain statistics to highlight the important contribution the oil and gas industry makes and I ask unanimous consent that this material be printed in the RECORD. In reinstating the tight sands credit, we are acting in the national interest because it would contribute to America's energy independence. We are also acting in the various States' interest, because the oil and gas industry supports many vital State programs.

I hope my collegues will support reinstating the tight sands credit.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Business Leader, West Virginia Chamber of Commerce, September 1988]

TIGHT SANDS TAX CREDIT ESSENTIAL TO STATE'S NATURAL GAS PRODUCERS

(By Curtis P. Cook, Vice President and Regional Manager Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. of West Virginia)

The state of West Virginia is, and always has been, a major producer of coal. In West Virginia, we tend to think of coal as our energy base and our ticket to the future.

We have in this state, however, another energy source that shares that long productive history. That fuel is natural gas.

Natural gas was first produced from shallow salt wells along the Kanawha River and was used to boil off water and to make salt.

The chemical industry grew from that beginning, and the natural gas business grew also to heat our homes, cook our meals and drive the engines of industry.

The natural gas business, like most industries, has gone through a long series of ups and downs. Also, like most businesses, it has been helped and hindered by changes in tax laws and policies as the government authorities thought best.

In 1980, Congress and the Carter Administration, recognizing that natural gas was a premium, clean-burning fuel in short supply, took steps to encourage production of natural gas by providing a regime of tax credits.

In doing so, the federal government expected that the rising national demand for natural gas to heat homes and fire engines would be more readily met. While many sources of natural gas were already economically attractive to producers, the tax credits were intended to provide additional incentives to production from more inaccessible sources, such as Devonian shale, coal seams and tight sands formations.

Tight sands and these other inaccessible sources of natural gas require technological innovation and more money to develop and to produce than other more common gas deposits.

The tax credits were provided to help attract the money needed to drill. A tight sands structure is just a geological term for a poor gas source. It is a type of formation that is almost like concrete.

When you read "tight sand tax credit," think "poor gas well tax credit," and you will be about right.

West Virginia and other Appalachian states have many of the formations from which tight sands gas is produced. The potential reserves are estimated to be extremely large.

When Congress approved the tax credit for tight sands gas in 1980, some natural gas was regulated to a low price and some natural gas was not regulated and, consequently, received a higher price.

Congress wanted to provide only the lower priced gas with a boost and therefore restricted the tax credits for tight sands to natural gas from regulated wells only. Higher priced gas production from unregulated wells was not eligible to receive the credit.

A lot of people drilled tight sands gas wells expecting to get some of their return from the gas sales and some from the tax credit. Those were the prevailing rules of the game when Congress acted, and they remained in effect until about 1985.

However, instead of continuing to climb, as Congress and others of us had expected, natural gas prices fell sharply after 1985, particularly the prices for unregulated gas.

This is a business risk that all of us take when we invest today's dollars for future returns. We accept that. But, in 1985 the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), the government agency that regulates the price and production of natural gas, declared tight sands gas to be deregulated. The United States Supreme Court recently confirmed the FERC ruling.

Due to the fact that in order to remain eligible to receive the credit under the law, the tight sands gas price was required to be regulated by the FERC, the Supreme Court's action effectively repealed the credit as it applied to tight sands natural gas.

The loss of the credit is hard to accept. The government created a set of rules to encourage tight sand production. A lot of us responded and drilled those wells.

Now, in the middle of the game, and at a time of tremendous stress within the natural gas industry, the rules have changed.

Other unconventional natural gas sources did not lose their credits, only production from tight sands.

Certainly Congress did not foresee in 1980 that the incentives intended to promote output would expire at a time when prices were insufficient to otherwise maintain production from nonconventional sources.

Congress should reinstate the promised tax credits for gas from wells already producing from tight sands as well as from new wells drilled into tight sands formations. The United States will need more natural gas from all sources, and therefore production from tight sands must be encouraged.

The FERC won't go back to the original rules. It is therefore up to Congress to reaffirm its intention to encourage the production of tight sands gas through appropriate legislation.

Congressional action in this regard, however, will not only enhance our national interest in energy policy, but it will have far-reaching effects right here at home.

By further encouraging development of all our natural resources, reinstatement of the credit will allow West Virginia's economic base to broaden and will therefore expand opportunity throughout the state.

West Virginians have already benefitted from investment in natural gas developed in our state, significantly in tight sands resources.

But we have only seen the scratches on the surface. Reenactment of the tight sands tax credit will allow us to continue to develop the entire range of benefits associated with a thriving and diverse energy industry. West Virginians need the tight sands tax credit.

S. 384. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to assist individuals with a severe disability in attaining or maintaining their maximum potential for independence and capacity to participate in community and family life, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICAID HOME AND COMMUNITY QUALITY SERVICES ACT OF 1989

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989. This bill will provide people with disabilities and their families with a choice of care that meets their individual needs. I am joined in this effort by Senators MITCHELL, DOLE, ARMSTRONG, BRADLEY, MOYNIHAN, BAUCUS, MATSUNAGA, PRYOR, ROCKEFELLER, RIEGLE, NUNN, DASCHLE, GORE, HOLLINGS, WIRTH, BURDICK, STEVENS, HARKIN, BIDEN, SHELBY, BINGAMAN, INOUYE, DODD, ADAMS, LEAHY, CONRAD, HATCH, GARN, HATFIELD, HUMPHREY, JEFFORDS, LIEBERMAN, CRANSTON, MURKOWSKI, WALLOP, KERRY, THURMOND, SPECTER, MCCAIN, MIKULSKI, and BURNS.

I would like to highlight the essence of this legislation by reading passages from four of the thousands of letters I have received over the years from people with disabilities and their families. The first is from a parent from Wisconsin:

I support your legislation. My husband and I are parents of Matthew, two and a half. Matthew was 11 weeks premature and he has severe multiple disabilities. He is a beautiful, loving child and we want to maintain him in the community. We need help to pay for services so he can live at home. We do not want to feel forced to place him in an institution. The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act will help us and thousands of other families to get him health care, respite care, therapy services and other services. * * *

A parent from Illinois wrote:

Our family recognizes the great need for such a mandate to our State of Illinois. Our son has spent his twenty six years breaking down barriers to his independent living that society has imposed upon persons who have handicapping conditions.

Tim has been developmentally delayed due to Down syndrome. Being raised in a family of five older brothers and a younger sister he has been accepted as a first class member of society.

As retiring persons we, Tim's parents, are deeply concerned that there be a support system in place which will allow him independent living in housing of his choice in his own community.

However, we recognize that in the eyes of many well meaning citizens, once we are unable to provide such minimal services Tim may be judged a prime candidate for a large Illinois institution (of which there are many).

A parent from Pennsylvania wrote:

As the mother of an autistic child and a volunteer with both United Cerebral Palsy and the Autism Society, I have seen first hand the value of keeping disabled people near their families and the total devastation that results to everyone involved when getting needed services requires institutionalization.* * *

A parent from Virginia wrote:

We have a son who is seventeen years old and is severely retarded. He has lived at home with us since his birth and as time has passed, a situation I though would better itself with time has proven to be more difficult with each passing year. Michael needs constant supervision and will never be able to live independently. Prospects for his future living arrangements away from home are quite dim.

My only hope is that you will vote for passage of The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act. This bill will provide many services which are greatly needed but do not exist. Please, for the sake of parents like us who have a monumental task, as well as for the welfare of our children, cast your vote in support of this bill. Our future is in your hands.

I have received many letters like these which I believe get to the heart of the matter: persons with disabilities and their families deserve a viable choice of quality care that does not require loved ones to be separated or institutionalized.

Unfortunately, however, such a choice does not exist because under the current Medicaid Program, only limited assistance for home and community-based care is provided.

This means that those with mental or physical impairments virtually have only two options: go to an institution or remain at home with little or no outside assistance. This all-or-nothing proposition is neither practical nor responsive to the needs of families and individuals. Institutionalization may be appropriate care for some, but not for others. Yet, as the letters I have shared point out, for families who cannot adequately care for their disabled family member without the assistance of community services, an institution is the only existing alternative.

It is possible to tailor the Medicaid Program to meet the needs of the person—instead of requiring the person to meet the needs of the program. Our legislation will make that possible.

We have to remember this, and increasingly Americans are becoming aware of it—that those with disabilities are part of our society, and they have an important contribution to make. Unfortunately, many have not had the option of living in an environment in which they can grow, reach their full potential, and contribute to their communities. They deserve the chance to go to work, take the bus, go shopping, eat in a restaurant, go to a ball game, and take advantage of the many opportunities that most Americans take for granted.

This legislation changes the existing Medicaid Program by opening alternatives to individuals with physical or mental impairments. Under my bill, community group home services, in-home care with respite and attendant services, as well as institutional care would all be viable options for current and furture generations of persons with disabilities.

We are not wiping out institutional care. Institutionalization remains there as one of the options, but we open other options, as I have mentioned. This will truly be for current and for future generations.

I have been working on this legislation to reform the Medicaid Program since 1983. It has gone through many changes over the years, and it has been subject to a good deal of debate. These discussions have been helpful and productive in bringing us to where we are today.

I firmly believe that this Congress, the 101st Congress, will see these reforms enacted. The chairman of the Finance Committee—the committee to which this legislation will be referred—has agreed to a markup on it this year. I look forward to working with him and other members of the committee, a majority of whom are cosponsors of this legislation, and I look forward to working with the other cosponsors to address some of the concerns that have been raised. I would like to thank all the Senators who have joined me in introducing this legislation for their support and their hard work.

I especially thank both the Republican leader and the majority leader, both of whom are cosponsors of this legislation, for their continued efforts on its behalf. Also, I extend an invitation to all the Senators who are not yet cosponsors of this legislation to join us in our efforts. I urge those who are not yet signed on to review it carefully, because I believe it meets a crying need in our society.

Some States say, "Well, we can do this in our State. Medicaid pays for group homes. Medicaid will pay for respite care." The answer to that is, those States are operating under what we call a waiver. They have an exception that they have been granted because they have gone to HHS, the Department of Health and Human Services, and said, "Please, let us do this." HHS says, "Yes, you can try it and we will give you a waiver for 6 years. Then you can come back." But the trouble is, that waiver can be retracted at any time. It will not necessarily be a continuous one.

Let me cite an example from my own State of Rhode Island. We have a mother with two severely impaired youngsters and one youngster a little bit older, who is not disabled. She is a single parent. She cannot physically care for those two youngsters and also do justice to the third son.

All she asks for, and she does not ask for much, is a 2-week respite in the summer so she can get a break, and occasionally a weekend where she can just catch her breath.

Is that too much to provide? What is the alternative? To have those two youngsters who are severely impaired placed in an institution, where they are not going to receive the love and attention that she is giving them currently? That is all she is asking. It seems a perfectly legitimate request. It makes perfect sense in every respect.

I would like to commend the advocacy groups for persons with disabilities. Their grassroots efforts have been critical in bringing this legislation closer to enactment. I am greatly indebted to those organizations, and I would like to include a list of them at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, the American dream of fulfillment and personal growth must not and should not exclude those who are disabled. One of our greatest strengths as a nation is our belief that the future holds a better life, not only for ourselves and for our children, but for all Americans. That is what this country is all about.

Our challenge is to assure that our fellow citizens with disabilities share in that better future. I urge my colleagues to join me and the other 41 sponsors in support of this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the following materials printed in the RECORD: a copy of the bill; a list of the organizations supporting it; as well as short and long summaries of its provisions.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 384

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

Section 1905 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(r) INDIVIDUAL WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.—

"(1) The term 'individual with a severe disability' means an individual who is under a disability within the meaning of section 1614(a)(3) of this Act, the onset of which occurred before the individual attained the age that applies with respect to a fiscal year (as determined under paragraph (2)).

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the age that applies with respect to a fiscal year is the lesser of—

"(A) 22 plus the number of fiscal years after fiscal year 1989 and before the beginning of such fiscal year; and

"(B) 50.

"(s) COMMUNITY AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES.—The term 'community and family support services' means supportive services made available to an individual with a severe disability (or to such individual's natural, adoptive, or foster family or spouse) to enable such individual to begin, resume, or continue living in a family home, foster family home, or community living facility. Such supportive services shall include both in-home and out-of-home services (as needed) from among those enumerated in section 1921(a)(2).

"(t) FAMILY HOME.—The term 'family home' means a residence maintained by an individual (whether or not disabled) or a couple, or by a natural or adoptive family, in which one or more individuals with a severe disability are living who receive medical assistance which includes payment for some services enumerated in section 1921(a)(2).

"(u) FOSTER FAMILY HOME.—The term 'foster family home' means a residence maintained by an individual or couple—

"(1) in which not more than three individuals with a severe disability are living, are provided surrogate family services, and receive medical assistance which includes payment for one or more services enumerated in section 1921(a)(2); and

"(2) that is under contract with an agency licensed or designated to place individuals with a severe disability in such residence.

"(v) COMMUNITY LIVING FACILITY.—

"(1) The term 'community living facility' means a single household, other than a family home or foster family home, composed of related or unrelated persons, which—

"(A) provides living arrangements and one or more of the services enumerated in section 1921(a)(2) to one or more individuals with a severe disability;

"(B) has a number of beds (exclusive of beds occupied by staff members) not in excess of the product obtained by multiplying by three the greater of—

"(i) the number of individuals in an average family household in the area in which such facility is located (as determined in accordance with data from the 1980 decennial census), or

"(ii) the number of individuals in an average family household in such area (as determined in accordance with any decennial census conducted after the 1980 decennial census);

"(C) is located in a neighborhood which—

"(i) is representative of residential neighborhoods in such area, and

"(ii) is populated primarily by individuals other than individuals with a severe disability;

"(D) meets such standards of safety and sanitation, and other standards relating to services provided by the facility, as are promulgated by the State;

"(E) meets the requirements of section 1861(j)(14) of this Act with respect to the personal funds of individuals residing in such facility; and

"(F) is staffed by individuals who (i) are trained or retrained in accordance with the provisions of the State implementation strategy (submitted to the Secretary under section 1921(c)(1)) by the State in which such facility is located, and (ii) in providing such living arrangements and services to individuals with a severe disability, cooperate with other providers and with appropriate case managers in implementing a written habilitation plan for each such individual.

"(2) A facility that—

"(A) was in operation on September 30, 1989;

"(B) does not increase its number of beds after such date (exclusive of beds occupied by staff members); and

"(C)(i) does not contain more than fifteen beds (exclusive of beds occupied by staff members), or

"(ii) consists of a cluster of two or three facilities in proximity to one another, each of which has no more than eight beds and which otherwise meets the requirements of paragraph (1); shall be treated as a community living facility.

"(w) WRITTEN HABILITATION PLAN.—The term 'written habilitation plan' means a plan for medical assistance and other services for an individual with a severe disability which—

"(1) is developed by an interdisciplinary team consisting of—

"(A) such individual, persons requested to participate by the individual, and, when appropriate, the spouse, parent, guardian, other family member, or advocate of such individual, and

"(B) individuals who are representative of professional and other disciplines which are relevant to the habilitation of such individual, and have been involved in providing services to the individual or are likely to be involved in providing services to the individual (including the individuals responsible for providing case management services and case coordination services to the individual);

"(2) is based upon a comprehensive assessment of the strengths of the individual and the services and support necessary to—

"(A) enable such individual to attain or retain, to the greatest extent possible, capabilities for independence or self-care,

"(B) promote and increase interaction between disabled and nondisabled individuals within the community, and

"(C) in the case of any such individual who has attained the age of 18 and who is not engaged in supported employment (or other employment in an integrated employment environment), assess the services and support needed by the individual to engage in such forms of paid employment;

"(3) specifies—

"(A) the individuals responsible for providing services under the plan and the frequency and duration with respect to which such services are provided,

"(B) the particular objectives to be achieved with respect to an individual described in behavioral terms that provide measurable indices of performance,

"(C) the dates by which the particular objectives are to be achieved,

"(D) the services and program strategies for achieving the specific objectives, and

"(E) the priority with which the specific objectives are to be achieved; and

"(4) is reevaluated by such team at least once each year.

"(x) CASE MANAGEMENT SERVICES.—The term 'case management services' means, with respect to any individual with a severe disability, services rendered to such individual by a designated qualified individual who—

"(1) has a continuing relationship with such individual but who is neither associated with nor employed by (nor has any other conflict of interest with respect to) the community living facility, foster family home, family home, or any other provider of ongoing direct services to such individual;

"(2) coordinates and monitors the development and implementation of the written habilitation plan for such individual;

"(3) provides such individual (or such individual's spouse, parent, guardian, other family member, or advocate, as appropriate) with information about, and referral to, appropriate social, educational, vocational, medical, advocacy, or other services which are among or in addition to those for which payment may be made under this title;

"(4) provides assistance and serves as an advocate in procuring such services as necessary;

"(5) periodically reviews the changing needs of such individual and the appropriateness of the medical assistance and other services provided to such individual;

"(6) cooperates with personnel in school, employment related, habilitation, or treatment settings who have specific responsibilities for developing or implementing any individual education plan, plan of vocational services, plan of habilitation, or plan of treatment designed for such individual, so that all such plans are coordinated and complementary; and

"(7) is available to such individual or such individual's family for consultation or crisis intervention when required.

"(y) INDIVIDUAL AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES.—The term 'individual and family support services' means—

"(1) those services provided to an individual with a severe disability which the individual's interdisciplinary team (described in subsection (w)(1)) determines are appropriate for carrying out those activities of daily living which the individual cannot perform for himself, including nonmedical personal assistance, attendant services, assistance in ambulating or transferring, limited domestic services, and assistance with assistive devices and communicative devices and aids; and

"(2) services provided to the family of an individual with a severe disability which the individual's interdisciplinary team determines are appropriate for assisting the family in providing services described in paragraph (1) to the individual, including respite care.

"(z) SPECIALIZED VOCATIONAL SERVICES.—

"(1) The term 'specialized vocational services' means services designed to enhance the independence, productivity, and integration of an individual with a severe disability, including—

"(A) prevocational services for such an individual whose earning capacity (as determined on the basis of a current vocational assessment or other objective measure of work performance) is less than 50 percent of the minimum wage established under section 14(c) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; and

"(B) supported employment services for such an individual for whom competitive employment—

"(i) has not traditionally occurred, or

"(ii) has been interrupted or intermittent as a result of such disability (and for whom ongoing support services are needed to perform such employment).

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'prevocational services' means services that are designed to assist an individual in acquiring and maintaining basic work and work-related skills necessary to acquire and retain work in an integrated work setting, which services shall include—

"(i) training the individual to follow directions, adapt to work routines, and carry out assigned duties in an effective and efficient manner,

"(ii) helping the individual to acquire appropriate attitudes and work habits, including instruction in socially-appropriate behaviors on and off the job site,

"(iii) assisting the individual to adjust to the productive and social demands of the work place,

"(iv) familiarizing the individual with job production and performance requirements,

"(v) providing transportation between the individual's place of residence and the workplace when other forms of transportation are unavailable or inaccessible,

"(vi) providing mobility training, including the utilization of public and para-transit systems,

"(vii) training the individual in the use of assistive devices and aids, and

"(viii) instructing individuals in appropriate use of job-related facilities (e.g., break areas, lunch rooms, cafeterias and rest rooms); and

"(B) the term 'supported employment services' means services designed to assist an individual in procuring and maintaining integrated, paid employment, which services shall include—

"(i) individualized assessment,

"(ii) individualized and group counseling,

"(iii) individualized job development and placement services that produce an appropriate job match for the individual and such individual's employer,

"(iv) on-the-job training in work and work-related skills required to perform the job,

"(v) ongoing supervision and monitoring of the individual's performance on the job,

"(vi) ongoing support services necessary to assure job retention,

"(vii) training in related skills essential to obtaining and retaining employment, such as the effective use of community resources and transportation,

"(viii) transportation between the individual's place of residence and the work place when other forms of transportation are unavailable or inaccessible, and

"(ix) adaptive equipment necessary to obtain and retain employment.

"(aa) HABILITATION SERVICES.—

"(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the term 'habilitation services' means those services (including specialized vocational services and educationally-related services) provided to an individual with a severe disability which the individual's interdisciplinary team (described in subsection (w)(1)) determines are appropriate in assisting the individual to acquire, retain, regain, or improve the self-help, socialization, decisionmaking, and adaptive skills necessary to achieve independence, productivity, and integration and to live successfully in home and community based settings.

"(2) The term 'habilitation services' does not include—

"(A) special education services (as defined in section 602(16) of the Education of the Handicapped Act) which otherwise are available to the individual through a local educational agency; and

"(B) vocational rehabilitation services which otherwise are provided to the individual through a program funded under section 110 or 633 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

"(bb) CASE COORDINATION SERVICES.—The term 'case coordination services' means, with respect to any individual with a severe disability, services rendered to such individual by a designated qualified individual who—

"(1) is employed by an agency directly responsible for providing habilitation services to such individual; and

"(2) in cooperation with the individual responsible for providing case management services, is responsible for coordinating the agency's responsibilities for implementing such individual's written habilitation plan.

"(cc) EDUCATIONALLY-RELATED SERVICES.—The term 'educationally-related services' means, with respect to an individual with a severe disability who is eligible to receive services under parts B and H of the Education of the Handicapped Act, services covered as medical assistance under the State plan and required by such individual in order to receive a free appropriate public education (as defined in section 602(18) of such Act) or appropriate early intervention services (as defined in section 672(2) of such Act), including those services appropriate in assisting the individual to acquire, retain, regain, or improve the self-help, socialization, decisionmaking, and adaptive skills necessary to achieve independence, productivity and integration.

"(dd) ASSISTIVE TECHNOLOGY.—The term 'assistive technology' means the systematic application of technology, engineering methodologies, or scientific principles to meet the needs and address the barriers confronted by an individual with a severe disability (including physical, sensory, and cognitive functional limitations in such areas as employment, recreation, independent living and other home and community living arrangements).

"(ee) INDEPENDENCE, PRODUCTIVITY, AND INTEGRATION.—The terms 'independence', 'productivity', and 'integration' when used in reference to the provision of community and family support services under this title have the same meaning with respect to individuals with a severe disability as the meaning given to such terms with respect to persons with developmental disabilities in section 102 of Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act.".

SEC. 3. COMMUNITY AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.

(a) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENT.—Section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (46);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (47) added by section 9407(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 and inserting a semicolon and transferring and inserting such paragraph after paragraph (46);

(3) by striking the period at the end of the paragraph (47) added by section 11005(b) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 and inserting "; and", by redesignating such paragraph as paragraph (48), and by transferring and inserting such paragraph after paragraph (47); and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (48) the following new paragraph:

"(49) effective not later than the first day of the second fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989, provide that with respect to any individual with a severe disability who is entitled to medical assistance under such plan and who resides in a family home, foster family home, or community living facility, such assistance shall include an array of community and family support services which the State determines are appropriate, when combined with other medical assistance available under the plan and with other available resources, to assist in providing for the health, safety, and effective habilitation or rehabilitation of such individual, including at a minimum case management services, individual and family support services, specialized vocational services, and protective intervention.".

(b) INCLUSION AS MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 1905(a)(13) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", including community and family support services for individuals with a severe disability".

(c) SERVICES FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.—Title XIX of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 1921 as section 1922; and

(2) by inserting after section 1920 the following new section:

"MEDICAL ASSISTANCE, HABILITATION, AND REHABILITATION FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY

"SEC. 1921. (a) COMMUNITY AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES.—

"(1) For purposes of section 1903, amounts expended by a State under its State plan for community and family support services may be included as medical assistance if such services are provided—

"(A) to an individual with a severe disability residing in a family home, foster family home, or community living facility, and

"(B) in accordance with the individual's written habilitation plan.

"(2) The following types of services may be included as community and family support services:

"(A) Case management services (as defined in section 1905(x)).

"(B) Individual and family support services (as defined in section 1905(y)).

"(C) Specialized vocational services (as defined in section 1905(z)).

"(D) Protective intervention.

"(E) Habilitation services (as defined in section 1905(aa)).

"(F) Case coordination services (as defined in section 1905(bb)).

"(G) Educationally-related services (as defined in section 1905(cc)).

"(H) Periodic interdisciplinary diagnostic and assessment services.

"(I) Personal assistance and attendant care.

"(J) Domestic assistance necessitated by the individual's disability.

"(K) Services to enable the individual to improve or maintain functional capacities (including physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech and language pathology and audiology, respiratory therapy, and non-aversive behavior intervention therapy).

"(L) Prostheses, orthoses, supplies, appliances, adaptive equipment, communicative aids, and other functional assistive technologies and devices (including sensory aids) and rehabilitative technology services to evaluate, design, assemble, repair, and maintain such equipment, aids, assistive devices, and systems and to train the individual, family, and provider agency staff in their use.

"(M) Preventive and therapeutic dental services.

"(N) Design and necessary and reasonable adaptation or modification of equipment and vehicles, and of housing or other space, to be used by an individual with a severe disability.

"(O) Comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility services.

"(P) Purchase and maintenance of guide dogs and similar trained animals.

"(Q) Services (other than board, lodging, and basic foster care) provided to any individual with a severe disability by members of a family or household in which such individual is living.

"(R) Support services to families and caregivers, including specialized training and respite care in or out of the home or usual residence.

"(S) Special transportation services.

"(T) Homemaker and home health services.

"(U) Chore services.

"(V) Crisis intervention.

"(W) Personal guidance, supervision, counseling, representation, and advocacy.

"(X) Appropriate preventive services to decrease the needs of individuals with a severe disability for future services.

"(Y) Any other services identified by the State and approved by the Secretary as conforming with the purposes of this section.

"(3) The following services may not be included as community and family support services:

"(A) Room and board, other than room and board provided for less than six consecutive weeks and less than twelve weeks in a year as an integral but subordinate part of a service described in paragraph (2). However, auxiliary payments may be made as medical assistance to cover extraordinary costs of food or housing attributable to the disabling condition of a particular individual or individuals.

"(B) Any service for which payment is made under section 403 or 422 of this Act.

"(C) Cash payments as a service.

"(D) Aversive behavior intervention, management, or therapies.

"(E) Any service to any individual to the extent that the provider of the service or the individual receiving the service is eligible to receive payment under title XVIII with respect to the provision of the service.

"(F) Any educational service which the State makes generally available to its residents without cost and without regard to their income except for educationally-related services (as defined in section 1905(cc)).

"(G) Any service to any individual with a severe disability living in any hospital, skilled nursing facility, or intermediate care facility (including any such hospital or facility for mental diseases).

"(4) Amounts expended by the State or by a provider of services to administer the provision of community and family support services pursuant to this section shall be treated as administrative costs of the State plan.

"(b) SERVICES ARE IN ADDITION TO OTHER MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—Community and family support services provided pursuant to this section shall be in addition to any other medical assistance for which an individual with a severe disability is otherwise eligible under the State plan.

"(c) STATE REQUIREMENTS.—In order to receive payment under section 1903 with respect to community and family support services provided under the State plan to any eligible individual with a severe disability, such plan shall provide that the State—

"(1) submit to the Secretary a State implementation strategy (as described in subsection (d)) that is annually reviewed and updated (as appropriate);

"(2) ensure that community living facilities are not unduly concentrated in any residential area (except as provided in section 1905(v)(2));

"(3) report to the Secretary on the implementation of the State's implementation strategy (submitted to the Secretary under paragraph (1)) in such form and with such frequency as the Secretary may prescribe and comply with the requests of the Secretary to correct or verify such report;

"(4) cooperate with the Secretary in carrying out the Secretary's responsibility (under section 11(d) of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989) to assess the State's compliance with its State implementation strategy (submitted to the Secretary under paragraph (1)), including making available to the Secretary such records as the Secretary may reasonably require to assess such compliance;

"(5) promulgate standards governing each element of community and family support services covered under its plan, monitor on an annual basis all providers of such services to assure that such providers comply with applicable standards, and take necessary steps to assure that such standards are promptly and effectively enforced;

"(6) meet the maintenance of effort requirement described in subsection (e);

"(7) safeguard the rights of all individuals with a severe disability who are participating in services for which payment is made under this title;

"(8) ensure that individuals with a severe disability are granted equal access to available community and family support services without regard to their place of residence or the nature or degree of their disability;

"(9) ensure that any individual with a severe disability for whom a public agency (or an agency under contract with a public agency) arranges a residential placement is placed in a foster family home or community living facility that is located as close to the home of the natural, adoptive, or foster family of the individual as is consistent with the best interests of the individual; and

"(10) ensure that in the case of any individual with a severe disability who has attained the age of 18 for whom a public agency (or an agency under contract with a public agency) arranges specialized vocational services for which payment is made under this title, priority will be given to providing such services in an integrated work environment.

"(d) STATE IMPLEMENTATION STRATEGY.—The State implementation strategy submitted to the Secretary under subsection (c)(1) shall—

"(1)(A) describe—

"(i) the extent and scope of community and family support services provided to individuals with a severe disability which are financed (in whole or in part) under—

"(I) the State's plan under this title,

"(II) other Federal or Federally-assisted State programs or social entitlement programs, and

"(III) non-Federal sources, and

"(ii) the extent and scope of services provided to individuals with a severe disability who are residing in a facility that is an acute care hospital, a skilled nursing facility, an intermediate care facility (including a facility that is certified in accordance with section 1905(d)), a board and care facility, or other public or private facility having 16 or more beds and in which a significant number of recipients of supplemental security income benefits reside or are likely to reside, which are so financed;

"(B) set forth specific objectives and a projected schedule for expanding and improving community and family support services for individuals with a severe disability over the succeeding five-year period, which objectives shall outline the expansion in the number of individuals served and community and family support services provided and identify the extent to which such services will be financed under the State's plan under this title and from other funding sources;

"(C) in the case of any individual with a severe disability who is residing in a facility described in subparagraph (A)(ii), provide that—

"(i) the service needs of such individual and the types of services the individual would require if transferred to a family home, foster family home, or community living facility, are identified not later than 18 months after the date on which community and family support services are first covered under the State plan (and annually thereafter), and

"(ii) such individual and, as appropriate, such individual's spouse, parent, guardian, appropriate family member, or advocate, are afforded an opportunity to participate in the process under clause (i);

"(D) in the case of any individual with a severe disability who is residing in a skilled nursing facility or an intermediate care facility (other than a facility that is certified in accordance with section 1905(d)) and who is determined (in accordance with subparagraph (C)) to be in need of alternative residential placement, provide that (subject to subparagraph (F)) such individual is transferred from such facility not later than 40 months after the date on which the process described in subparagraph (C) is completed with respect to such individual;

"(E) set forth specific objectives and a projected schedule, over the succeeding five-year period, for transferring individuals with a severe disability (who are residing in a facility described in subparagraph (A)(ii) and are not transferred pursuant to subparagraph (D)) to more appropriate residential settings where they will be eligible to receive community and family support services;

"(F) provide that in transferring any individual with a severe disability from a facility described in subparagraph (A)(ii)—

"(i) such individual is transferred only to a facility or program that is capable of providing an appropriate array of community and family support services (or in the case of an individual transferred to a facility certified in accordance with section 1905(d), active treatment) consistent with such individual's written habilitation plan,

"(ii) priority is given to transferring such individual to a family home, foster family home, or community living facility (including a facility certified in accordance with section 1905(d) that either meets the size and locational requirements for a community living facility under section 1905(v)(1) or is treated as such a facility under section 1905(v)(2)),

"(iii) to the extent the services required by the individual are unavailable in the community in which such individual would otherwise reside, such individual is transferred to a facility certified under section 1905(d) that serves 16 or more individuals with a severe disability, and

"(iv) in the case of an individual transferred pursuant to subparagraph (D), during any period of time during which the individual is awaiting transfer the individual is furnished active treatment consistent with such individual's written habilitation plan; and

"(G) provide that prior to transfer of any individual with a severe disability from a skilled nursing facility, an intermediate care facility, or a board and care facility to a family home, foster family home, or community living facility deemed to be capable of meeting the individual's needs—

"(i) a community services transfer plan is developed through a process which—

"(I) identifies the specific community and family support services, as well as other services, that such individual will require and will have available when such individual is transferred to a family home, foster family home, or community living facility,

"(II) involves the interdisciplinary team (or other professional group) responsible for the written habilitation plan with respect to such individual while residing in the facility from which transfer is to be made, and the professional responsible for providing case management services and other appropriate professional personnel who are likely to be involved in providing services to the individual in the community, and

"(III) provides to the individual and, as appropriate, to such individual's spouse, parent, guardian, appropriate family member, or advocate, an opportunity to participate in developing such plan;

"(ii)(I) such individual and such individual's spouse, parent, guardian, appropriate family member, or advocate, are notified in writing at least 60 days before the date of any proposed transfer,

"(II) procedures are established for granting to such individual (or, as appropriate, to such individual's spouse, parent, guardian, appropriate family member, or advocate) an opportunity for an appeal regarding the transfer plan developed under clause (i) with respect to the individual, and for a fair hearing before an impartial hearing officer designated by the State, on the grounds that the types of health related services, habilitation, rehabilitation, housing, or other services specified in the community services transfer plan developed with respect to such individual are inappropriate or inadequate, or a particular type of health related service, habilitation, rehabilitation, housing, or other service specified in such plan is not yet available in the area in which such individual will reside, and

"(III) if such individual initiates an appeal under subclause (II), the individual remains in the facility from which such individual is to be transferred pending the outcome of the appeal (unless protective intervention is determined to be necessary with respect to the individual);

"(2) provide that, not later than 18 months after the date on which community and family support services are first covered under the State plan, the State has in place a preadmission screening program (using criteria specified by the Secretary) to prevent the inappropriate placement of individuals with a severe disability in skilled nursing facilities and intermediate care facilities (other than facilities certified under section 1905(d));

"(3) set forth—

"(A)(i) the component parts of a comprehensive, integrated quality assurance system that affords individuals with a severe disability expanded opportunities for independence, productivity, and integration and which includes standards to govern the quality of each element of community and family support services covered under the State plan, as well as each class of residential facilities or living arrangements (except for a family home) in which a significant number of individuals with a severe disability reside, which standards assure that such services—

"(I) are based on timely assessments of the individual's needs and are organized systematically to assure optimal individual development, independent functioning, productivity, and community integration,

"(II) are furnished in accordance with the provisions of the individual's written habilitation plan and reflect the strengths of the individual and the services necessary to assist the individual to achieve more independent functioning with respect to health and physical development, receptive and expressive communication, cognitive learning, mobility, self-direction, socialization, leisure time, and vocational activities,

"(III) are provided in a manner that maximizes opportunities for and fosters the development of relationships between the individual and other members of the community (including individuals who are not disabled),

"(IV) are provided in the home or at school, a job site, or other community setting where existing and newly acquired skills can be put to practical use,

"(V) are designed to ensure that (if the individual resides in a community living facility) services, other than residentially-related services, are provided in settings other than the facility in which the individual resides (unless medically contra-indicated), and

"(VI) are designed to assist the individual to acquire the functional life skills necessary to enhance the capacity of the individual to achieve independent living, to integrate into the community, to increase productivity, and to socially interact with individuals who are not disabled;

"(ii) the methods and procedures to be used in instituting and maintaining the quality assurance system described in subparagraph (A), and

"(iii) the methods and procedures for—

"(I) providing the same opportunity for public input with respect to the standards developed under such system as exists under the State plan amendment process,

"(II) requiring review of such standards by the State Planning Council established under section 124 of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act and the protection and advocacy system established under section 142 of such Act, and

"(III) responding to any comments made by such Council, such protection and advocacy system, and the public with respect to such standards;

"(B)(i) a program for licensing and certifying all facilities and programs that provide community and family support services covered under the State plan, which program, at the option of the State, may include a requirement that a class or classes of facilities or programs are accredited by a national accrediting body that is designated by the Secretary, and

"(ii) a requirement that all physical structures (other than a family home) in which individuals with a severe disability reside, or in which community and family support services are provided, meet applicable State or local fire, safety, health, and sanitation codes, and have interior and exterior features that are comparable to other residential structures in the surrounding neighborhood;

"(C) a system for conducting an annual independent, third-party evaluation of a cross-section of community and family support services provided under the State plan, which system shall include (at a minimum)—

"(i) an analysis and validation of client-based data,

"(ii) periodic visits to a statistically valid sample of agencies or individuals providing such services,

"(iii) an assessment (conducted with respect to a statistically valid sample of individuals with a severe disability and, where available, through the use of valid and reliable instruments) to determine the extent to which the services contribute to reduced dependency, enhanced opportunities to make choices, the acquisition of positive social behaviors, improved social integration and participation in community life, increased productivity, consumer satisfaction, the physical comfort of the individual and the attractiveness and appropriateness (in view of the individual's age) of such individual's living environment, and the achievement of the written goals and objectives set forth in the individual's written habilitation plan, and

"(iv) a summary of findings and recommendations with respect to needed changes in State laws and the administrative policies and practices of responsible State and local agencies (and any other provider of such services);

"(D) an annual assessment of consumer satisfaction with community and family support services provided under the State plan;

"(E) a program of periodic assessments of the adequacy of the physical and social environment of residential settings serving individuals with a severe disability conducted by a review body composed of parents, guardians, relatives, or neighbors of such individuals, except that—

"(i) the parents, guardians, and relatives of such individuals shall comprise a majority of the body,

"(ii) no member of the body shall be affiliated with the facility or home being reviewed or with any agency responsible for providing funds with respect to such facility or home, and

"(iii) no member of the body shall take part in an assessment with respect to any individual with a severe disability if such member is a parent, guardian, or relative of such individual;

"(F) a systematic methodology for assuring prompt correction of any deficiency identified with respect to the provision of community and family support services under the State plan, which methodology shall include—

"(i) a procedure under which the affected entity may appeal a determination that there is such a deficiency,

"(ii) a requirement that any such entity with respect to which a deficiency is identified submit a plan of correction to the appropriate State agency which sets forth a schedule for promptly eliminating the deficiency, and

"(iii) a program for providing training and technical assistance to assist such entity in eliminating a deficiency; and

"(G) a hierarchy of penalties with respect to any such entity that fails to comply with any standard promulgated pursuant to subparagraph (A) (including a penalty for terminating such entity's participation in the program under this title);

"(4)(A) in the case of individuals with a severe disability who are living in residential facilities which are not family homes, foster family homes, community living facilities, provide that—

"(i) admissions to such residential facilities are restricted through the use of community and family support services, and

"(ii) the service needs of any such individual are identified in accordance with paragraph (1)(C);

"(B) provide that alternate provisions are made for (and priority given to the development of) appropriate care (including basic maintenance if needed) and services for any individual with a severe disability eligible for medical assistance who has been living in a facility or institution which has been receiving payments for care, treatment, or maintenance of such individual under this title and which ceases to receive such payments, or ceases to provide such care and services to such individual, other than at the request of the individual or such individual's representative; and

"(C) set forth procedures for ensuring continuity of funding and the provision of services to an individual with a severe disability when an entity providing services to such individual for which payment is made under this title voluntarily discontinues operations or is terminated in accordance with paragraph (3)(G);

"(5)(A) provide that, as part of a plan to afford the public an adequate opportunity to comment on the State's implementation strategy (submitted to the Secretary under subsection (c)(1)) prior to when such strategy is submitted to the Secretary (or prior to each annual revision)—

"(i) copies of such strategy are distributed to individuals, agencies, and organizations in the State that are interested in the welfare of individuals with a severe disability,

"(ii) such individuals, agencies, and organizations are afforded not less than 45 days to comment on the strategy,

"(iii) public hearings are conducted on the contents of the strategy (and the date of any such hearing is published in general circulation newspapers across the State not less than 10 days prior to the hearing),

"(iv) the comments of the State Planning Council established under section 124 of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act and the protection and advocacy system established under section 142 of such Act are solicited, and

"(v) a summary of the comments received from the general public, such Council, and such protection and advocacy system, is prepared, indicating any revisions made as a result of such comments (or explaining why such revisions were not made);

"(B) set forth the methods and procedures to be used to ensure that, with respect to every organization or agency responsible for providing services to individuals with a severe disability for which any payment is made under this title—

"(i) each member of the staff of such organization or agency is fully qualified to perform any assigned duty and has received or will receive adequate and continuing training or retraining in the provision of services to such individuals sufficient to allow such member to remain informed of the latest developments in serving such individuals and to assist the organization or agency in correcting any deficiencies in the provision of community and family support services under this section,

"(ii) such agency or organization maintains written personnel policies, and

"(iii) such agency or organization has access to needed technical assistance services;

"(C) set forth the methods and procedures to ensure that any entity responsible for providing protective intervention services to an individual with a severe disability or to an individual who is (or except for such individual's income and resources would be) eligible to receive such services under this section—

"(i) has daily, 24-hour access to every organization or agency responsible for providing services to such an individual for which any payment is made under this title,

"(ii) is independent of each such organization or agency, and

"(iii) has the legal capacity to intervene on behalf of such an individual when necessary to protect such individual's rights;

"(D) set forth the methods by which training and needed technical assistance services are made available to natural, adoptive, and foster parents of individuals with a severe disability who are eligible for medical assistance;

"(E) set forth the methods by which protective intervention services are made available, as necessary, to any individual with a severe disability who is, or would except for such individual's income or resources be, eligible to receive services under this title;

"(F) set forth the steps by which the State ensures that each individual with a severe disability receiving community and family support services under the State plan has access to case management services which are provided—

"(i) by an entity that is organizationally independent of (and free of any conflict of interest with respect to) any entity furnishing ongoing direct services to individuals with a severe disability,

"(ii) with sufficient frequency and intensity to ensure that the objectives in an individual's written habilitation plan are achieved within the period of time specified in such plan, and

"(iii) by a trained individual with a caseload capability to visit each individual under such individual's responsibility not less than once a month;

"(G) provide that the State has in effect a management information system capable of collecting, storing, and retrieving data with respect to individuals with a severe disability who receive (or who are eligible to receive) community and family support services under this section, which system shall—

"(i) be based on information derived from an individual's written habilitation plan or from any other needs-assessment data source,

"(ii) provide client-based data with respect to the nature and extent of service needs, the type and duration of services provided, the cost and outcome of such services, and any gaps in available services, and

"(iii) use (where available) valid and reliable instruments for collecting such data;

"(H) set forth procedures for—

"(i) granting an opportunity for a timely appeal and a speedy hearing before an impartial hearing officer—

"(I) to any individual who believes himself to be inappropriately served or who is denied an appropriate service, or who is being scheduled for transfer (other than under the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection and other than on such individual's own initiative) from one living arrangement (including such individual's own home) to another, or

"(II) as appropriate, to the individual's spouse, parent, guardian, appropriate family member, or advocate acting on such individual's behalf,

"(ii) giving written notice to affected parties at least 60 days before such proposed transfer except in an emergency, and

"(iii) advising individuals with severe disabilities, their families, and their advocates of available alternative arrangements and services, of the right to choose among available licensed or certified providers of services, and of the right to a fair hearing under section 1902(a)(3);

"(J) describe the methods to be used in administering community and family support services under the State plan, including—

"(i) the specific roles and responsibilities of—

"(I) specified State and local governmental agencies in establishing policies governing the provision of such services and in providing such services (either directly or under arrangements with other public or private entities),

"(II) the agency responsible for providing protection and advocacy in accordance with subsection (j), and

"(III) the community organizations and agencies responsible for providing such services, and

"(ii) the steps to be taken in recruiting and selecting such provider organizations and agencies;

"(K) set forth criteria to govern the use of psychotropic and anti-convulsant medications and behavior management techniques, as well as monitoring methods to be used to ensure compliance with such criteria;

"(L) set forth the methods by which the number and types of integrated work settings and the range of supportive services available to individuals with a severe disability who have attained the age of 18 are developed and expanded; and

"(M) set forth the methods to assure that the provision of specialized vocational services and educationally-related services under this title to individuals with a severe disability is coordinated (by use, where necessary, of interagency agreements) with the activities of responsible State and local vocational rehabilitation and educational agencies (and other agencies as appropriate); and

"(6) set forth methods and procedures to assure—

"(A) fair and equitable provisions (as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Labor) to protect the interests of public employees who will be affected by the transfer of individuals with a severe disability from public institutions, including public medical institutions, to community or family living facilities under the implementation strategy, and that maximum efforts will be made to provide for the employment of such employees, including arrangements designed to preserve employee rights and benefits and arrangements to provide (where necessary) for the training or retraining of such employees, and

"(B) application of fair employment standards and equitable compensation to workers in private programs and facilities offering care and services for which payments are made under this title.

"(e) STATE MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—

"(1) A State meets the maintenance of effort requirement of this subsection for any quarter in a fiscal year in which community and family support services are provided if for such quarter the total amount of the funds expended by the State (and political subdivisions thereof) from non-Federal funds for these services for eligible individuals with a severe disability is at least equal to the base amount, increased by the inflation factor that applies with respect to the fiscal year in which such services are provided.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'base amount' means the average quarterly amount of the funds expended (during the four-quarter period ending September 30, 1989) by the State (and political subdivisions thereof) from non-Federal funds under the plan for services that are community and family support services; and

"(B) the inflation factor that applies with respect to the fiscal year in which such services are provided is the amount (expressed as a percentage) by which the Consumer Price Index for the third quarter of the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year exceeds the Consumer Price Index for the third quarter of the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(f) REVIEW BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall, from time to time, review State plans approved by the Secretary pursuant to section 1902 in order to ensure the compliance of such plans with the provisions of this section and the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989.

"(g) WAIVER OF STATEWIDE REQUIREMENT AND REQUIREMENT OF COMPARABILITY.—For any one three-year period, a State may provide any new service under this section without regard to the statewide requirement of section 1902(a)(1) or the requirement of section 1902(a)(10)(B).

"(h) WAIVER OF FREEDOM OF CHOICE REQUIREMENT.—A State may provide case management services under this section without regard to the requirement of section 1902(a)(23) to the extent that the State determines that waiving such requirement is necessary to the effective and efficient provision of such services.

"(i) STATE ADMINISTRATION.—The Governor of each State may assign the responsibility for performing specified management functions regarding services provided to individuals with a severe disability under this section to State agencies other than the agency administering the plan under this title.".

(d) INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITY SERVICES IN AN INSTITUTION FOR THE MENTALLY RETARDED.—Section 1905(d) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "a public" and inserting in lieu thereof "an";

(2) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (2); and

(3) by striking out paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) the individual needs of each newly admitted individual are ascertained by an interdisciplinary team within 30 days, and an individual written habilitation plan is developed for the individual, including an assessment of such individual's needs for community and family support services; and

"(4) the institution, if not operated by the State, has a written agreement with an appropriate State agency to cooperate in carrying out the State implementation strategy required to be submitted to the Secretary under section 1921(c)(1).".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1903(a)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting after "professional medical personnel" the following: "or personnel skilled in the delivery of community and family support services needed by individuals with a severe disability"; and

(2) by inserting after "other public agency" the following "or any agency under contract to the State to provide services under section 1921".

SEC. 4. LIMITATION ON PAYMENTS FOR SERVICES PROVIDED IN LARGE FACILITIES.

Section 1903 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(w) LIMITATION ON PAYMENTS FOR SERVICES PROVIDED IN LARGE FACILITIES.—

"(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (2), effective for any fiscal year beginning after the date of the enactment of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989, the aggregate amount payable under this title to any State for any quarter beginning in such fiscal year for skilled nursing facility services and intermediate care facility services furnished to any individual described in subparagraph (C) in facilities having more than 15 beds shall not exceed 25 percent of the maximum expenditure amount determined with respect to the State under subparagraph (B) for such fiscal year.

"(B)(i) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'maximum expenditure amount' means, with respect to a State for a fiscal year, an amount equal to the aggregate amount payable under this title to the State for the services described in subparagraph (A) for the fiscal year ending after the date of the enactment of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989, increased by the percentage (if any) by which CPI percentage increase for the fiscal year exceeds 6.0 percent (and by any amounts expended for the fiscal year for which payment would otherwise be made under this title that are attributable to the cost of implementing a plan of correction which includes a reduction plan approved under section 1919).

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the 'CPI percentage increase' for a fiscal year is the amount (expressed as a percentage) by which the Consumer Price Index for the third quarter of the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year exceeds the Consumer Price Index for the third quarter of the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(C) An individual described in this subparagraph is an individual who—

"(i) is under the age of 65, and

"(ii) who is under a disability within the meaning of section 1614(a)(3) of this Act, the onset of which occurred before the individual attained the age of 22.

"(D) For purposes of applying this subsection, aggregate amounts paid under this title shall be determined without adjustments for amounts recovered from third parties considered as overpayments.

"(2) The limitation on payments in paragraph (1) shall not apply to any of the following payments for skilled nursing facility services or intermediate care facility services provided in a facility which unconditionally meets all requirements applicable to such type of facility (including appropriateness of admissions):

"(A) Payments for such services for individuals in a facility which meets the size and location requirements for a community living facility.

"(B) Payments for such services for individuals in a facility which is in operation on September 30, 1989, does not increase its number of beds after such date, and has no more than 15 beds (exclusive of beds occupied by staff members).

"(C) Payments for such services for individuals in a facility treated as a community living facility under section 1905(v)(2).

SEC. 5. PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.

Section 1921 of the Social Security Act (as added by section 3(c) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) PROTECTION OF RIGHTS.—

"(1) Subject to paragraph (3), in order to receive any payments for community and family support services provided under this section, the State must have in effect a system to protect and advocate those rights of individuals with a severe disability who are eligible for medical assistance which relate to the provision of such assistance.

"(2) Such system must be implemented by an agency which—

"(A) is independent of any agency which provides services to individuals with a severe disability under the State plan;

"(B) has the authority to pursue legal, administrative, and other appropriate remedies to insure the protection of the rights of individuals with a severe disability who are eligible for medical assistance; and

"(C) has the authority to obtain access to records of individuals with a severe disability who are eligible for medical assistance in order to carry out such agency's duties under this subsection.

"(3)(A) In the case of a State that has in effect a system for providing protection and advocacy under part C of the Development Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act, such State shall take appropriate steps to ensure that such existing system is used to perform the protection and advocacy functions required by this section.

"(B) The State must provide assurances to the Secretary that the amounts paid to the State under this title that are attributable to the use of the system in effect under part C of such Act shall be used only for the purposes of providing protection and advocacy relating to the provision of medical assistance to individuals with a severe disability.

"(4) For purposes of section 1903(a)(1), amounts expended by the State under this subsection shall be treated as amounts expended as medical assistance under the State plan.".

SEC. 6. PRIVATE ENFORCEMENT.

Section 1921 of the Social Security Act (as added by section 3(c) of this Act and amended by section 5 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) PRIVATE ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (3), any person injured or adversely affected or aggrieved by a violation of this section, or of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989, by a State agency administering the State plan may bring an action to enjoin such violation.

"(B) An action brought under this paragraph shall be brought in the appropriate district court of the United States within the State in which such State plan is in operation.

"(C) The party bringing such action may elect, by so stating in the complaint filed at the commencement of such action, to recover reasonable attorney's fees and costs from the defendant in the event that such party prevails.

"(2) Not less than 15 days before commencing an action under this subsection, an interested party shall give notice by registered mail to the Secretary, the Attorney General of the United States, and the State agency administering the State plan alleged to be in violation of this section or of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989. Such notice shall state the nature of the alleged violation and the court in which such action will be brought.

"(3) The approval of the State plan under section 1902(b) shall not be a bar to the bringing of an action under this subsection, nor shall it constitute a defense to any such action.".

SEC. 7. RATES OF PAYMENT FOR SERVICES.

Section 1902(a)(13) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D), by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (E), and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) for payment for community and family support services for individuals with a severe disability, described in section 1921 and provided under the plan, through the use of rates (determined in accordance with methods and standards developed by the State) which the State finds, and makes assurances satisfactory to the Secretary, are reasonable and adequate to assure the provision of care and service in conformity with applicable State and Federal laws and regulations, and applicable quality and safety standards, and to assure that individuals with a severe disability eligible for medical assistance have reasonable access (taking into account geographic location and reasonable travel time for family and friends) to community and family support services of adequate quality;".

SEC. 8. MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.

(a) OPTIONAL ELIGIBILITY.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act is amended by redesignating the subsection (l) added by section 3(b) of the Employment Opportunities for Disabled Americans Act as subsection (o) and by inserting after such subsection the following new subsection:

"(p) ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.—

"(1) At the option of the State, any individual who has not attained the age of 19 and who—

"(A) qualifies as a disabled individual under section 1614(a),

"(B) as determined by the State, is an individual who requires (or whose family requires) community and family support services, and

"(C) if the individual were in a medical institution, would be an individual with respect to whom supplemental security benefits (or a State supplementary payment) could be paid under title XVI; shall be deemed, for purposes of this title only, to be an individual with respect to whom a supplemental security income payment, or State supplementary payment, respectively, is being paid under title XVI.

"(2) A State electing the option under paragraph (1) shall set forth in its State plan and its State implementation strategy (submitted to the Secretary under section 1921(c)(1)) the criteria which the State will use in identifying eligible individuals or reasonable classifications of such individuals, and the extent of the services for which payment may be authorized under this subsection.".

(b) EXEMPTION FROM FAMILY INCOME LIMITATION.—Section 1903(f)(4) of such Act is amended—

(1) by adding "or" at the end of subparagraph (C); and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) who meets the requirements of section 1902(p),".

(c) UNIFORM INCOME STANDARD, AND EXPANDED ELIGIBILITY.—Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting before the comma at the end of subclause (V) the following new matter: ": Provided That if the State establishes such a separate income standard for individuals who are in any medical institution, the State must establish the same separate income standard for all individuals with a severe disability,";

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (IX);

(3) by striking out the semicolon at the end of subclause (X) and inserting in lieu thereof ", or"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(XI) who are disabled children or disabled spouses who, except for resources deemed to them, would be eligible for supplementary security income benefits under title XVI;".

(d) ELIGIBILITY OF DISABLED CHILD.—Section 1634(c)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "the effective date of this subsection" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1957".

SEC. 9. REMOVAL OF CERTAIN LIMITATIONS ON REDUCTION AND CORRECTION PLANS FOR INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITIES FOR THE MENTALLY RETARDED.

Section 1919 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (d)—

(A) by striking "(d)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(d)", and

(B) by striking paragraph (2); and

(2) by striking subsection (f).

SEC. 10. SPECIAL ELIGIBILITY EXCEPTION FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY.

Section 1902(f) of the Social Security Act is amended:

(1) by inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation;

(2) by inserting "paragraph (2)," before "subsection (e)"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), an individual with a severe disability receiving benefits under title XVI or deemed to receive such benefits under this title shall be entitled to receive medical assistance as long as such individual remains severely disabled and continues to receive benefits under title XVI or is deemed to receive benefits under this title.".

SEC. 11. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF A BUREAU OF DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES SERVICES.—

(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") shall establish, within the Health Care Financing Administration, a Bureau of Developmental Disabilities Services (referred to in this subsection as the "Bureau"). The Bureau shall be the principal office in the Department of Health and Human Services for administering and carrying out programs under title XIX of the Social Security Act relating to the furnishing of quality services to individuals with a severe disability in order to promote their independence, productivity, and integration into the community, and to provide coordinated leadership, guidance, and support to assist States in developing such services.

(2) The Bureau shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the Secretary in consultation with the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. The position of Director shall be placed in Level IV of the Executive Schedule in section 5318 of title 5, United States Code and shall be designated a career reserved position in the Senior Executive Service. The Director shall have training and experience in the furnishing of services to individuals with developmental disabilities.

(3) The additional staffing of the Bureau shall be in sufficient numbers to meet program needs, and at levels which shall attract and maintain the most qualified personnel. Such personnel shall include individuals who have training and experience in the provision of services to individuals with developmental disabilities.

(4) The Bureau shall be established and staffed not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(5) The Bureau shall be responsible for—

(A) preparing all necessary regulations and other administrative policies governing the provision of services under sections 1921 (as added by this Act), 1905(d), and 1915(c) of the Social Security Act as such services relate to individuals with a severe disability;

(B) coordinating the activities of responsible regional office personnel related to the provision of services to individuals with a severe disability under titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act;

(C) conducting periodic studies to determine the consistency, reliability, and validity of surveys of intermediate care facilities certified or requesting certification under section 1905(d) conducted under section 1902(a)(33)(B) of such Act (and, based on such studies, developing policies and procedures governing such surveys);

(D) preparing and issuing policies governing the conduct of utilization reviews under section 1902(a)(30)(A) of the Social Security Act, onsite inspections of care under section 1902(a)(31)(B) of such Act, and the preparation of professional review reports under section 1902(a)(31)(C) of such Act (as such reports pertain to care provided in facilities certified or requesting certification under section 1905(d) of such Act);

(E) advising the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration on all aspects of policies that may impact upon individuals with a severe disability and recommending (in consultation with such Administrator) policy initiatives and modifications necessary to improve services provided under titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act in order to promote the independence, productivity, and integration of such individuals (as such terms are defined under section 1905(dd) of the Social Security Act);

(F) developing policies and procedures governing the conduct of periodic assessments of the status of individuals with a severe disability who are receiving services under any title of the Social Security Act;

(G) reviewing State compliance with the provisions of, and amendments made, by this Act in such periodic and random fashion as the Bureau deems necessary, making recommendations to the Secretary based on such reviews; and

(H) performing such other functions relating to the provision of services to individuals with a severe disability as the Secretary may assign (including any function related to a responsibility of the Secretary under subsection (b), (c), (d), or (e) of this section).

(b) TRAINING OF SURVEY PERSONNEL.—The Secretary shall—

(1) with respect to Federal and State personnel who perform surveys under sections 1902(a)(33)(B) and 1910(c)(1) of the Social Security Act of facilities that are certified under section 1905(d) of such Act—

(A) not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, develop a standardized curriculum for training such personnel which places particular emphasis on valid and reliable methods for assessing the provision of active treatment provided to residents of such facilities in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary;

(B) in accordance with the curriculum developed under subparagraph (A), design and initiate a comprehensive training program for such personnel which provides—

(i) initial training not later than 30 months after the date of enactment of this Act in the case of personnel assigned to survey such facilities on or before the date of enactment of this Act,

(ii) initial training not later than six months after the date on which personnel are assigned to survey such facilities in the case of personnel assigned to survey such facilities after the date of enactment of this Act, and

(iii) continuing education to such personnel at least every 36 months; and

(C) develop standards regarding the qualifications of such personnel, including a standard requiring that at least one member of any survey team be a qualified developmental disabilities professional (as defined by the Secretary);

(2) on the basis of a randomly selected sample of Federal and State surveys conducted, periodically conduct studies of the reliability of survey findings to determine the compliance of facilities certified under section 1905(d) of the Social Security Act with the standards prescribed by the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such section;

(3) make such changes in Federal regulations, administrative policies or procedures (or initiate such specialized training programs) as are—

(A) consistent with the findings of studies conducted under paragraph (2), and

(B) necessary to improve the reliability and consistency of survey findings and certification decisions with respect to facilities certified under section 1905(d); and

(4) with respect to Federal and State personnel who perform surveys regarding State compliance with the provisions of, and amendments made, by this Act, design and initiate a comprehensive training program for such personnel that provides for an amount of training at least equal to that described in paragraph (1)(B).

(c) DEVELOPMENT, TESTING, AND DISSEMINATION OF INSTRUMENTS AND STANDARDS.—

(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary shall support the development, field testing, and dissemination of—

(A) reliable and valid instruments to assess service outcomes in the provision of care and services under this Act, including outcomes in such areas as community integration, individual and family satisfaction, and the impact of environmental factors; and

(B) competency-based personnel standards with respect to every agency or organization involved in providing services to individuals with a severe disability for which any payment is made as a result of the amendments made by this Act.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) shall be construed to allow the Secretary to require that a State use a specific outcome indicator or personnel standard selected by the Secretary.

(d) ASSESSMENT OF STATE COMPLIANCE WITH STATE IMPLEMENTATION STRATEGY.—

(1) Beginning with the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of Education and study of any recommendations made by the Bureau of Developmental Disabilities under subsection (a)(5)(G), shall conduct an annual assessment of each State's—

(A) compliance with the provisions of section 1921(c) of the Social Security Act (as added by section 3(c) of this Act); and

(B) progress in carrying out its implementation strategy (required to be submitted under section 1921(c)(1) of such Act), including the steps taken to—

(i) expand the quantity and improve the quality of community and family support services;

(ii) develop essential support services necessary to maintain a responsive network of community and family support services (including the provision of training, technical assistance, and crisis intervention services); and

(iii) promulgate standards governing community and family support services and monitor compliance and take necessary steps to enforce such standards.

(2) The Secretary shall conduct annual assessments of the adequacy of the quality assurance components established by States under such implementation strategy. Such assessments shall include a review of community and family support services provided pursuant to such strategy and visits to community living facilities and entities providing such services.

(3) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require the approval of the Secretary of any State implementation strategy submitted under section 1921(c)(1) of the Social Security Act, if such strategy meets the requirements of section 1921(d) of such Act (as added by section 3(c) of this Act).

(e) REPORT.—Not later than January 15, 1994, and biennially thereafter, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress that is based on the assessments, studies, and other activities conducted under subsections (b), (c), and (d) (and such other information as the Secretary may gather). Such report shall contain an analysis of the findings of such assessments, studies, and activities, a description of all relevant fiscal, programmatic, and demographic data, and recommendations regarding the need for any changes in Federal law.

(f) REGULATIONS.—

(1) Prior to the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue final regulations with respect to all amendments to the Social Security Act made by this Act, including regulations which govern the preparation, public review, distribution, and annual revision of the State implementation strategy (required to be submitted to the Secretary under section 1921(c)(1) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 3(c) of this Act).

(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to promulgate standards governing the provision of community and family support services.

(3) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit payments under section 1903 of the Social Security Act prior to the issuance of regulations under this subsection to States which comply with the requirements of the amendments made to the Social Security Act by this Act.

SEC. 12. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning after the date of enactment of this Act.

Any individual who meets the state's means test; became disabled prior to age 22 and meets the federal SSI test of disability. The bill includes a provision to phase-in, on an annual basis, individuals who become disabled after the age of 22.

SERVICES

The list of home and community based services outlined in the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1987 remains the same. These services will be eligible for full federal matching funds.

The legislation provides that the following services are mandatory—in other words, the states must provide them in order to receive Medicaid reimbursement:

Protective intervention services;
case management;
individual and family support services (such as respite care and attendant care); and specialized vocational services (designed to help disabled individuals learn job skills).

LIMITATIONS

The amount of federal dollars the state spends on intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded (ICF/MR) will be frozen at the level of spending in the fiscal year preceding the enactment of the bill. In future years, states will receive increases in this amount only when inflation (as determined by the CPI) exceeds six percent in a given year.

ICF/MR and other residential facilities with less than fifteen individuals will be grandfathered—this means that the limitation will not apply to them. In addition, "cluster homes"—facilities which consist of three or fewer small homes with eight or less individuals per home which are located next to each other—are also grandfathered.

There will be no limitation on federal funds used for the community based services outlined in the legislation.

QUALITY AND MONITORING

The bill contains a detailed section on quality and monitoring provisions designed to ensure that the services provided in all residential settings are of high quality and are appropriate.

The bill also requires the Secretary of HHS to establish a Bureau of Developmental Disabilities Services which is designed to be the central office in HHS for administering and carrying out programs relating to individuals with disabilities.

PLANNING

Within two years of enactment, states will be required to amend their state Medicaid plan to comply with the provisions outlined in the legislation. The proposed plan must be available for public comment and must be reviewed by the state's Development Disabilities Council.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF SENATOR JOHN H. CHAFEE'S MEDICAID REFORM LEGISLATION—THE HOME AND COMMUNITY QUALITY SERVICES ACT

NOTE: All dates referred to in this summary assume that the bill will be passed and signed into law in 1989.

SECTION 1—TITLE

SECTION 2—DEFINITIONS

Individual with a severe disability.—Any individual who meets the state's means test; became disabled prior to age 22 and meets the federal SSI test of disability. The bill includes a provision to phase-in, on an annual basis, individuals who become disabled after the age of 22.

Community and Family Support Services.—Services made available to an individual with a severe disability (or his or her family) to enable the individual to begin, resume or continue living in a family home, foster family home, or community living facility such services are outlined in the section allowing Medicaid to pay for them.

Family Home.—A residence maintained by an individual, couple or a natural or adoptive family in which one or more individuals with a severe disability are living who receive community and family support services.

Foster Family Home.—A residence maintained by an individual or couple in which not more than three individuals with a severe disability live and receive community and family support services and that is under contract with an agency licensed to place individuals with a severe disability in such residence.

Community Living Facility.—A single household (not a family home or foster family home) composed of related or unrelated persons which:

(a) provides living arrangements and one or more community and family support services; has a number of beds not greater than three times the average family size in the area in which the facility is located; is located in a neighborhood which is representative of residential neighborhoods in such area and which is populated primarily by individuals other than individuals with a severe disability; meets such standards of safety and other standards relating to services provided by the facilities are developed by the state; is staffed by individuals who are trained and retrained according to later requirements in the act and who cooperate with appropriate case managers and other providers in implementing a written habilitation plan for each individual.

(b) A facility that is in operation on Sept. 30, 1987; does not increase its number of beds after such date; and which either does not contain more than 15 beds or consists of a cluster of two or three facilities in proximity to one another, each of which has no more than eight beds and which meets all of the other requirements outlined above, shall be deemed to be a community living facility.

Written Habilitation Plan.—A plan for medical assistance and other services for an individual with a severe disability which:

(1) is developed by an interdisciplinary team consisting of individuals requested to participate by the individual and the spouse, parent, guardian, other family member or advocate of such individual—where appropriate; individuals who are representative of professional and other disciplines which are relevant to the habilitation of such individual and have been or are likely to be involved in providing services to the individual

(2) is based on a comprehensive assessment of the strengths of the individual and the services and support necessary to enable such individual to attain or retain to the greatest extent possible capabilities for independence and to assess the services and support needed by the individual to engage in supported employment or other paid employment in an integrated employment environment

(3) specifies the individuals responsible for providing service under the plan and the frequency and duration with respect to which such services are provided; the objectives to be achieved with respect to an individual; the dates by which such objectives are to be achieved; program strategies for obtaining such objectives and the priority with which each objective is to be achieved;

(4) is reevalutated by such team at least once a year.

Case Management Services.—Defined page 8 of bill.

Individual and Family Support Services.—Defined page 10 of bill.

Specialized Vocational Services.—Defined page 10 of bill.

Habilitation Services.—Defined page 14 of bill.

Case Coordination Services.—Defined page 15 of bill.

Educationally Related Services.—Defined page 15 of bill.

Independence, Productivity and Integration.—Defined page 16 of bill.

SECTION 3.—COMMUNITY AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY

This section requires each state to amend its state Mdeicaid plan by October 1, 1991. If a state does not amend its plan (in accordance with the requirements of all of the provisions in this Act), the state will loose all of its Medicaid funding. In addition, it requires the state to provide an array of community and family support services to eligible individuals—at a minimum the array must include: Protective intervention services; case management; individual and family support services; and specialized vocational services. These services are defined in Section Two.

PAYMENT FOR SERVICES

The section amends the Medicaid statute to treat community and family support services as medical assistance—thereby allowing federal matching funds to be provided to the states for such services.

The list of reimbursable services is: case management, individual and family support services, specialized vocational services, protective intervention, habilitation services, case coordination, educationally related services, occupational therapy, physical therapy, speech therapy, nonaversive behavior intervention therapy, diagnostic and assessment services, personal assistance and attendant care, homemaker and chore services, respite care, crisis intervention, specialized training for families and care givers, special transportation, personal guidance, supervision and representation, preventive services and such other services proposed by the state and approved by the Secretary.

Payment for this list of services will be made only to an individual with a severe disability who is living in a family home, foster family home or community living facility and in accordance with the individual's written habilitation plan.

The following services may not be included as community and family support services: Room and board (except in certain special situations), cash payments as a service, aversive behavior intervention, management or therapies; services provided in a skilled nursing home or intermediate care facility; and any services (such as education, hospital, vocational rehabilitation etc. . .) which the individual would normally receive under another title.

STATE REQUIREMENTS.

A. In order to receive Medicaid funds for community and family support services, the state must make a series of assurances to the Secretary regarding the provision of such services in the state. These assurances include: reports to and cooperation with the Secretary; development of standards for individual and family support services which comport with principles outlined in the bill; development of a state implementation strategy for community services; maintenance of effort for state expenditures; safeguarding of rights of eligible individuals; equality of access to services regardless of the severity of disability or place of residence; residential services near the individual's family home; and planning for specialized vocational services in integrated environments. The Secretary must review these assurances to ensure that they are in compliance with the requirements of the Act.

B. The implementation strategy referred to above is a five-year plan (updated annually) which the state is required to develop with public participation and comment. The bill outlines the issues that must be addressed in the implementation strategy in great detail. They include the following: strategy for expanding community services and identifying the dollars required; methods for administering community services for those living at home or in other non-institutional settings; methods to protect employees affected by movement of disabled individuals from institutions; appropriate placement of individuals currently living in nursing homes; education, training and retraining of all staff; methods to track individual and system development/progress; due process safeguards for parents and individuals; standards governing the operation and provision of community and family support services; monitoring and quality review. The Secretary has authority to review the implementation strategy; however, only to the extent of determining whether the elements of the strategy meet the requirements of the Act.

WAIVER OF STATEWIDENESS

States are allowed to provide any new community and family support service for up to three years without meeting the Medicaid requirements for statewideness and comparability. After the three year period if the state wishes to continue to provide the services it must do so on a statewide basis and the service must be comparable in all parts of the state. This provision also applies to the mandatory services—in effect, it means that states will three years after their state plan is amended to provide the four mandatory services on a statewide basis.

SECTION 4—LIMITATIONS ON PAYMENTS FOR SERVICES PROVIDED IN LARGE FACILITIES

Beginning on October 1, 1990 the amount payable to any state under the Medicaid program for skilled nursing facility services and intermediate care facility services furnished to any individual who is under the age of 65 and who is under a disability within the meaning of SSI and the age of onset of such disability occurred before the individual reached the age of 22 in facilities having more than 15 beds shall not exceed the amount the state received for such services in such facilities between October 1, 1989 and October 1, 1990.

States will receive an increase in such funds only in a fiscal year in which the rate of inflation (as determined by the CPI) exceeds 6%—the increase will be equal to the difference between 6% and the inflation rate at that time.

The limitation will not apply to ICF/MR facilities which meet the size and location requirements for a community living facility; grandfathered facilities; and payments for services for an individual in a facility treated as a community living facility.

SECTION 5—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY

The state is required to have a system in effect which is designed to protect and advocate those rights of individuals with severe disability who are eligible for medical assistance which relate to the provision of such assistance.

The services provided by this system for individuals with a severe disability will be eligible for matching funds through the Medicaid program.

SECTION 6—PRIVATE ENFORCEMENT

This section gives private individuals the legal right to bring an action based on this Act.

SECTION 7—RATES OF PAYMENT

Allows the states to set rates of payments for services outlined under the Act.

SECTION 8—ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH A SEVERE DISABILITY

This section deals with some of the common problems associated with the issue of deeming of parental income to individuals with severe disabilities.

Requires the states to treat parental income for individuals living in institutions in the same way as individuals living in community living arrangements.

Allows states, at their option, to deem children under the age of 19 who are living at home, to be eligible regardless of parental income.

SECTION 11—RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY

Establishment of a Bureau of Developmental Disabilities.—The Secretary is required to establish (within HCFA) a Bureau of Developmental Disabilities. The section deals with how such a Bureau should be set up and what its responsibilities should be. The intent of the provision is to create a central organization within HCFA to deal with services provided to individuals with developmental disabilities under the Medicaid program and to ensure that there is input from experts in this area into Secretarial decisions regarding Medicaid funding for these individuals.

Training of Survey Personnel.—The Secretary is required to set up education, training and retraining requirements for those who conduct look-behinds and survey state services for individuals with developmental disabilities.

ASSESSMENT OF STATE COMPLIANCE WITH STATE IMPLEMENTATION STRATEGY

The Secretary is required to make annual assessments of each state's compliance with its state plan amendment.

REGULATIONS

The Secretary is required to issue final regulations by October 1, 1990.

SECTION 12—EFFECTIVE DATE

October 1, 1990.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE, in cosponsoring the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989. I commend Senator CHAFEE for his diligent work on this legislation and for his commitment to improve the quality of life for citizens with developmental disabilities.

Senator CHAFEE has worked tirelessly over a period of many years to move this legislation through the Congress. During this time he has won many supporters for this legislation both inside and outside of the Congress. At the end of the 100th Congress this bill had 48 cosponsors in the Senate. Surely the time has come to enact this bill into law.

The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989 will assist States in providing expanded home and community-based facilities for the developmentally disabled, a concept which has been enthusiastically supported in my home State of Maine for a number of years.

During the 100th Congress the Subcommittee on Health held a number of hearings to examine Medicaid financing of services for developmentally disabled persons in general, and the Chafee bill in particular. At these hearings, witnesses expressed their concerns about the Medicaid program's lack of flexibility in funding which would allow States to expand home and community-based living situations for the developmentally disabled.

Medicaid is the primary Federal program providing State with funding for long-term care for the disabled. Under current law, most of these funds are channeled to large institutions, only a limited amount is available for small home and community-based facilities.

As understanding of the capabilities and needs of developmentally disabled have changed in recent years, it has become apparent that traditional long-term care services provided in large institutions are no longer appropriate for the majority of disabled persons.

The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989 is intended to restructure the Medicaid Program to better meet the needs of the developmentally disabled, while promoting greater independence and productivity for these citizens.

The bill freezes the amount of Medicaid funding States are allocated for large intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded at the level of spending in the fiscal year preceeding enactment. In future years, States will receive increases in this amount only when inflation exceeds 6 percent per year.

Eligibility for funding will be determined by a State's means test and will include persons who became disabled before age 22. The bill also includes an important provision to phase-in, on an annual basis, individuals who become disabled after age 22. This will begin to address the critical need for long-term care for young adults who become disabled with spinal cord and head injuries.

The bill mandates a number of services States must provide in order to receive Medicaid reimbursement. These services include protective intervention, case management, individual and family support services and specialized vocational services.

I am particularly pleased that the bill includes quality and monitoring provisions designed to ensure that services provided in all facilities serving the disabled are appropriate and of high quality. The attention to the quality of care provided should be our highest priority when examining the programs which serve the most frail members of our society.

Many States, including Maine and Rhode Island, have developed a system of home and community-based care for the developmentally disabled which has proven to be highly successful and widely supported by the disabled and their familes. Passage of this legislation will support those efforts and encourage other states to develop similar models.

This legislation has been carefully developed over a long period of time, taking into account the needs and concerns of the developmentally disabled and their familes. It is an important step toward reforming the Medicaid Program to better meet the needs of this population and to encourage their independence and productivity.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important reform and to work for passage of this legislation during the 101st Congress.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of Senator CHAFEE's Medicaid Home and community Quality Services Act of 1989. I do so because I endorse the bill's goal of creating more opportunities for personal growth and independence for individuals with severe disabilities.

In recent years, the trend in care for people with severe disabilities in my own State of Kansas and across the Nation has shifted from institutions to home and community-based settings. These less restrictive environments have proven to be very effective in encouraging such individuals to realize their full potential and become integrated into community life. The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act recognizes and promotes this trend.

While I support providing more noninstitutional options to individuals with severe disabilities, I also believe we must do what we can to ensure that quality care is given to people living in institutions. I expect that careful consideration will be given to this and other issues of concern to institutional residents and their families. What is important is that we give people options—including the option of an institution—and that we make sure that, whatever the setting, the services provided are appropriate and of high quality.

Mr. President, we all support providing greater opportunities to people with disabilities to become productive and independent members of our society. Increasing options for quality care will give such individuals more control over their own lives, and for this reason I believe that the legislation we are introducing today deserves consideration.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator CHAFEE and my other colleagues today as an original cosponsor of this measure. I believe this bill directs Medicaid funding in the right direction, which is toward community-based services for individuals with severe disabilities.

I strongly support Federal; assistance for disabled Americans who reside in community-based settings. However, I remain concerned about a number of provisions of this bill which have yet to be worked out in the Finance Committee. I am joining as a cosponsor of this bill with the understanding that although it is identical to S. 1673, which Senator CHAFEE introduced in the 100th Congress, I will be working with my colleagues to modify some provisions as we review the bill in committee.

This measure restructures the system of funding Medicaid services in order to assist people with disabilities to increase their independence, productivity and integration into the community. This bill will help families stay together by giving States added flexibility to provide community and in-home care, which can supplement the current system of institutional care.

How we treat individuals with disabilities is an issue which deeply touches their lives and the lives of their families, and reflects on the values we stand for as a nation. In recent years, care for these individuals has been shifting from institutions to community based settings.

This legislation embodies the best hopes of all of those who have promoted that trend. It rearranges Federal financial support in recognition and encouragement of these changes.

Mr. President, I am proud to note that Michigan has been a pioneer in the effort to provide community care for disabled citizens. Over the past 10 years, the percentage of Michigan citizens in institutions has decreased significantly. This measure will encourage further progress.

Versions of this legislation which were introduced prior to the 100th Congress created concerns among some parents groups, caregivers and others that residents might be inappropriately forced from current care situations, and that operating institutions with a record of quality care would lost needed support. Senator CHAFEE introduced S. 1673 in the 100th Congress which went a long way toward meeting those concerns. I believe there are significant improvements which are yet to be made.

The most troubling provision of this measure is the cap on the total amount of Medicaid funds States could receive for reimbursement of institutional services for individuals with a severe disability. We should not take away from some Medicaid beneficiaries to help pay for others. Rather, we need to consider new ways of financing expansions in the program.

Michigan has been a proud leader in the movement toward successful deinstitutionalization. I am concerned, however, about those parts of the country that still have far to go. I remain unconvinced that community-based alternatives are readily available in all parts of the country to accommodate a significant portion of the individuals would be transferred from an institution under this bill.

I am pleased that the bill requires States to develop an implementation strategy which would be designed to expand community and family support services. This does not ensure, however, that the physical investment in homes and other settings will be made to accommodate individuals who are leaving institutions. Although we are making more funding available for individuals in need of services, we are not committing new resources to develop the physical plant that people will need. This should be taken into account before we consider major reductions in funding for institutionalized individuals.

This measure does not adequately address programming and staffing requirements for Medicaid eligible facilities. I intend to work on clarifying provisions of the bill to train and protect direct care staff so that they are not adversely affected by the changes proposed by this measure. We must ensure that quality staffing is maintained as we shift the focus of Government resources, so that residents in large and small settings are provided consistent, quality care.

We must protect the access of developmentally disabled persons to a full continuum of services where appropriate and needed. While I agree with the focus of this bill on expanding options available in the community, I think it is also important to continue our support for facilities which have demonstrated a record of comprehensive, quality care.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor of this important Medicaid reform legislation. I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Finance Committee and the Senate to enact the critical improvements in this bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague Senator CHAFEE in introducing legislation which will assist individuals with severe disability in attaining or maintaining their maximum potential for independence and capacity to participate in community and family life. I cosponsored this legislation last session, and am pleased that the Senate Finance Committee has committed to move this legislation quickly.

The Rocky Mountain News ran a letter I wrote to the editor in October 1987, and I would like to share that with my colleagues at this time. It underscores the timely need for this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Rocky Mountain News, Oct. 16, 1987]

GROUP HOMES MEAN BRIGHTER LIVES FOR THE RETARDED

(By William L. Armstrong)

A short time ago, I heard the story of a man named Bill, a 62-year-old living in Denver, who is mentally retarded. Bill was placed in a state institution at age 30, and stayed there for 32 years. He was written off as incapable of living in a community, unable to make friends or even participate in the institution's own day activities.

But thanks to a program funded by the state Division of Developmental Disabilities, Bill got a chance to leave the institution last March. His story is really quite incredible.

For years, all that was heard from Bill were unintelligible mumbles; no one believed he would ever talk. But on the very day he was placed in the community, a young woman overheard his mumbling and stopped in her tracks. She realized Bill was not just mumbling, but trying to say a few words in his native Polish. When she responded with the few words of Polish she knew, Bill started to cry. For the first time in 32 years, someone was trying to communicate with him.

Today, Bill is living in an apartment with a roommate to help care for him. He is out in the community, participating in senior citizen groups and enjoying a vastly improved quality of life.

I wonder if we can fully appreciate Bill's story. For most of us, the simple things in life come easy. Living in a community and making friends, joining with neighbors at Sunday worship, going out for pizza and a movie, or rooting for the Broncos each weekend are all things we do routinely. For the mentally retarded, doing the simple things in life are cherished dreams.

It doesn't have to be this way. A big part of the problem is that government programs do not adequately support and encourage the kind of community living people like Bill can so greatly benefit from. That is why earlier this month I joined with Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., in sponsoring legislation to help make the dream of community living a reality for retarded citizens. The bill, called the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act, would provide Medicaid benefits for retarded citizens who seek care in community settings—group homes or apartments shared with a roommate—rather than in institutions.

Medicaid is the principal federal program providing long-term care to the retarded and it is way behind the times. While care for the retarded has steadily shifted to community settings, Medicaid pays primarily for institutional services. That is really an unfortunate bias.

Living in a community, having access to the normal flow of life, and performing routine domestic tasks can be a tremendous boost to retarded citizens trying to achieve their greatest potential. More importantly, community living gives the retarded a chance to develop the friendships so crucial to personal development.

In Colorado, many others like Bill stand as testimony to the benefits of community care. In Greeley, a 35-year-old woman named Mary lived in a state institution for over 25 years due to a severe physical handicap and was deemed incapable of living in a community. Today she is living in an apartment active in church and community affairs and doing clerical work for a local nonprofit organization. More amazingly, she is on a lecture circuit of sorts, traveling around the state telling others of how community care has worked for her. She speaks very slowly, just one or two sentences at a time. But she is out trying to tell her story, something she never had a chance to do before.

Finally, there is the story of another Denver man, a 31-year-old named Jack, who has a fervent desire for life. Jack is quadriplegic—paralyzed from the neck down—and also has cerebral palsy. He lived in an institution from age 3 to age 25 and was given very little hope of ever making it. How many of us could face the odds Jack confronted? In 1984, Jack got the chance to live in a community and he said at the time he wanted only three things out of life.

First, he wanted an apartment, because to him having his own place was an important part of growing up and being a man. Today, he shares an apartment with a roommate who happens to be paraplegic. Second, he wanted a job in the community. Today, he is training for a job answering phones, and soon will join the ranks of the taxpayers. Finally, Jack said he wanted a girlfriend. I'm told he is working very hard on that right now and, given his track record, is certain to succeed.

That is what all mentally retarded citizens want: a chance to live in a community, contribute to society as normal people do and find the friendship and love we all need in our daily lives.

On a small scale, the state of Colorado has tried to make community care for the retarded work. But as state institutions continue to close, sufficient funding for community care will be essential. Now is the time to establish a sensible community-care alternative under Medicaid to meet the emerging needs of retarded citizens.

The legislation introduced in the Senate will help the most deserving among us become successful and independent members of their communities. That is a policy all Americans can be proud of, one that can make life so much more worthwhile for those who, in Camus' words, ask only for the chance to live beside us and be our friends.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be joining the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] in introducing the proposed "Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989." This measure is substantively identical to S. 1673, legislation which Senator CHAFEE introduced and I cosponsored in the 100th Congress. The bill would significantly reform the Medicaid program as it relates to services for individuals with developmental disabilities, such as mental retardation, cerebral palsy, and autism.

Under current law, the vast bulk of Medicaid funding for the care of developmentally disabled individuals is spent on services in intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded [ICF/MR]. Although a waiver program does exist to enable Medicaid funding to be used for community-based programs, only about 8 percent of Medicaid dollars for the developmentally disabled population is used for that purpose.

The Chafee bill would dramatically alter the proinstitutional bias in the Medicaid Program by providing States with more flexibility in establishing a broad range of community and home-based services for persons with developmental disabilities.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island has worked tirelessly on this initiative for many years—modifying the legislation in each Congress to address concerns of the families and service providers of developmentally disabled individuals. I first joined as a cosponsor of this legislation last year, when I became convinced that it had struck a reasonable balance between the need to develop community services—a most pressing need in my view—and the need to continue the availability of some institutional care.

Nevertheless, I believe that additional modifications are still needed—particularly in the area of quality assurance. The legislation currently would require the States to establish comprehensive quality assurance systems, including community service standards, methods and procedures for monitoring and for licensing providers, methods for correcting deficiencies, and procedures for continuity of services. It would also establish in the Health Care Financing Administration a Bureau of Developmental Disabilities which would have substantial authority and responsibility for monitoring the development of State standards and for the State's implementation of its plan.

Mr. President, although I generally support this approach, I am concerned that an active role on the part of the Federal Government may be needed to ensure that a minimum level of standards is adhered to by the States and am concerned that Federal standards may be necessary. It is essential, in order for this effort to succeed, that families have confidence that their relatives will receive quality services in the community.

LOS ANGELES TIMES ARTICLES

Mr. President, the Los Angeles Times published a series of articles on January 8, 9, and 10 of this year regarding the quality of community-based services for developmentally disabled individuals. The articles described deplorable programs—far from the kind envisioned when the effort to place mentally retarded individuals in the least restrictive environment began in California nearly two decades ago. The program described by the Times resulted in the needless endangerment, and in some cases death, of their residents.

Clearly these are the worst situations and are the products of lax monitoring and enforcement. However, I am aware that many excellent programs also exist in California and elsewhere, in which individuals with developmental disabilities thrive and grow and become active members of society. These programs are fulfilling the promise of providing the best opportunities for these developmentally disabled individuals.

Mr. President, families should not have to rely on luck for placement of their relatives into good programs and not bad ones. I understand the deep concerns that some parents have regarding the Chafee bill, which I believe stem from uneasiness about the variability of the quality of existing community programs.

However, I do not believe that the problem lies in the community model. The problem lies in the implementation of the model—in the commitment of States to make certain that good standards are rigorously enforced. The Chafee bill would help significantly improve the quality and stability of community programs. By providing Medicaid funding for these programs, the Federal Government should have a greater say in ensuring the quality of services provided.

CAP ON INSTITUTIONAL FUNDING

Finally, Mr. President, I am concerned about the bill's proposed "cap" of funding to large institutions. The California chapter of the Association for Retarded Citizens, which supports this legislation, believes that funding to such facilities should be indexed to reflect changes in inflation and State population growth. Although I believe that most individuals with developmental disabilities can function and develop their potential better in community settings, there may be situations where community settings are not the most appropriate or are unavailable. The option of institutionalization should be preserved for individuals in those situations. I plan to pursue this issue with the author of the bill.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, in expanding the availability of funding for home and community-based services, we must take great care to ensure that the services provided are of high quality. I am supporting this legislation because I believe that it would help eliminate the kinds of detestable situations described in the L.A. Times article, and I will be working with the sponsor of the bill to ensure that the quality-assurance provisions in the bill meet that goal.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act. I cosponsored this legislation in the last Congress and I am pleased to offer my support again in the 101st Congress.

This bill addresses itself to the issue of independence. Currently, half of all Medicaid funds flow to long-term care for the elderly and disabled; they also go primarily to large facilities—hospitals or nursing homes. In order for Medicaid funds to be used for community care the State must receive a waiver, which is not permanent. By encouraging States to develop plans for community-based care, this bill removes the built-in Medicaid bias toward institutional care.

In my own State of North Dakota, Medicaid waivers were key to the deinstitutionalization of many residents of the State hospital. This act would allow for the continuation of the important community care allowed by the Medicaid waiver, would also strengthen the network of community-based care facilities, and set the correct precedent for the future.

North Dakota's experience with deinstitutionalization is instructive. Former residents of the Grafton State school live in communities throughout the State. According to the North Dakota Association of Retarded Citizens, many of the former patients hold jobs and receive paychecks, contributing to and participating in their communities. Without Medicaid reform, these citizens may be unable to live on their own and may be forced to return to institutional care.

Mr. President, the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act would do much to promote the sort of independent living that mental health professionals encourage. This bill would allow a more flexible Medicaid system, one that can be tailored to the needs of each individual's disabilities.

Mr. President, I strongly support this long-overdue legislation. I urge my Senate colleagues to support it and I hope the 101st Congress will enact it expeditiously.

By Mr. ROTH (for himself and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 385. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on Bendiocarb; to the Committee on Finance.

SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON BENDIOCARB

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill with Senator RIEGLE to temporarily suspend the duty on a chemical, 2,2-dimethyll-1,3-benzodioxol-4-yl methyl carbamate, also known as Bendiocarb.

I am introducing this bill on behalf of Nor-Am Chemical Co. of Wilmington.

Bendiocarb is a pesticide which is authorized for use by pest control companies in controlling fleas, ants, and roaches. It is widely used in hospitals, nursing homes, and other institutions.

I understand that there is no domestic production of this chemical in the United States.

Suspending the 8.6-percent duty will assist Nor-Am to keep prices down, lowering the cost of production, thereby strengthening the U.S. economy and enabling Nor-Am to be a stronger competitor in international markets. It will also assure that this product is more readily available for pest control purposes.

I hope the Congress will act expeditiously to approve this duty suspension bill.

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. PELL and Mr. CRANSTON):

S. 386. A bill to control the sale and use of assault weapons; to the Committe on the Judiciary.

ASSAULT WEAPON CONTROL ACT OF 1989

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will ban the importation and sale of new semiautomatic assault weapons.

These weapons of war can be found at gun dealers across the country, and can be purchased over the counter without any waiting period or background check of the buyer.

One of these weapons, an AK-47 assault rifle, was used last month by a gunman in a schoolyard in Stockton, CA. It was reported that he fired over 100 rounds of ammunition in less than 2 minutes. The result was 5 children killed, 29 children and 1 teacher wounded.

The Stockton gunman, despite an extensive arrest record, misdemeanor convictions, and a history of mental illness, was able to walk into a gun shop, fill out a simple Federal firearms form with no background check, pay his money and walk out with a weapon designed by the Soviet Union for its combat troops.

These assault weapons in the hands of criminals put our law enforcement officers at a great disadvantage in any exchange of gunfire. In 1986 eight FBI agents in Miami became involved in a gunfight with two bank robbers, one of whom was armed with a Ruger mini 14 assault weapon. The result was two agents killed, and five wounded.

Last year in Los Angeles, a police officer was shot and killed by a gang member armed with an AR-15, an assault weapon similar to the U.S. Army's M-16. Three years earlier, another Los Angeles police officer was killed, when ambushed by a gunman armed with a MAC-10.

These semiautomatic assault firearms have become the weapons of choice of drug dealers. The easy availability of these weapons dangerously tips the balance of power away from our law enforcement officers, who are on the frontline in our Nation's war on drugs. These weapons are not designed for hunting game but for killing human beings.

The legislation I am introducing today would ban the manufacture, importation, possession, and transfer of new assault weapons. This step would halt the rapid growth in the number of these weapons in circulation. Second, it would require the registration of assault weapons lawfully possessed prior to the bill's effective date. Persons who own these weapons now would be allowed to keep them, but through registration, law enforcement authorities would be able to keep records of the owners and persons to whom they are transferred. Third, any transfer or sale of a lawfully possessed assault weapon would be subject to a thorough background check of the buyer, comparable to that now employed when a machinegun is sold.

Before a potential buyer could take possession of the firearm, he or she would have to submit an application with photograph and fingerprints to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms. Before BATF could approve the sale, the buyer would have to obtain a signed certificate from his local chief of police, sheriff of the county, head of the State police, or State or local district attorney or prosecutor. The local law enforcement official must state that he has no information indicating that the receipt or possession of the semiautomatic assault weapon would place the buyer in violation of State or local law, and that he has no information that the buyer will use the assault weapon for other than lawful purposes.

This certification would allow a local law enforcement official to stop the sale of an assault weapon to an individual known to the local police as someone who would present a risk to the community if armed with that firearm. Had such a procedure been in effect last August when Patrick Edward Purdy bought the AK-47 he used in the Stockton shooting, the local police would not have allowed that sale.

This bill does not in any way limit the ability to purchase a legitimate hunting rifle or handgun. The bill's coverage is limited to a specific list of the most dangerous military weapons now available and to firearms with large fixed magazines.

This bill specifically identifies the most dangerous assault weapons now available to the general public, including the AK-47, the Uzi, Mac 10 and Mac 11, Tec 9 and Tec 22, Ruger mini 14, AR-15, FN-FAL, FN-FNC, Steyr Aug, Beretta AR 70, and the street sweeper shotgun. These weapons and any other firearms which are substantially identical to them, are automatically defined as assault weapons. They are all designed and marketed to use large capacity magazines, which enable them to fire a large number of rounds in a matter of seconds. For example, the Stockton gunman managed to fire over 100 rounds in less than 2 minutes sending a hail of gunfire through a group of children on the school's playground. The street sweeper shotgun, originally designed as a crowd control weapon in South Africa, is advertised as capable of firing 12 shotgun blasts in 3 seconds. These firearms in the hands of criminals are a danger to society and a problem for law enforcement. An Uzi, which can fire 30 rounds in 5 seconds, or a street sweeper capable of firing 12 shotgun shells in 3 seconds is a machine intended to kill people, not deer.

The bill also prohibits the transfer, possession, and importation of detachable magazines and ammunition belts with a capacity of more than 10 rounds. A magazine or belt is the mechanism for feeding ammunition into a firearm. By limition their size, this legislation prevents any person or manufacturer from selling to the general public large capacity magazines or belts for use in semiautomatic weapons. As for large capacity magazines and belts already in the hands of the general public, the bill allows for the sale or donation of them to the Government, for use by the military or law enforcement. The bill does not seek to restrict in any way sales or possession of semiautomatic rifles or handguns which do not come within the precise terms of the bill.

The Secretary of the Treasury is specifically precluded from designating as an assault weapon any firearm that does not have semiautomatic action, or which cannot employ a detachable magazine or ammunition belt with a capacity greater than 10 rounds. These and other specific exclusions in the bill ensure that firearms designed for, and used specifically for hunting, target practice, or other sports or recreational activity will not be restricted in any way by this legislation.

The weapons of war targeted by this bill have no place on the streets and in the schoolyards of America. I believe that most Americans would agree with the Director of the FBI William Sessions, who said in the aftermath of the Stockton tragedy, "Where there seems to be no rationale for having those types of weapons for any purpose other than making war and killing people, it would seem to me that there is some rationale for limitation of that type of weapon."

Support for Federal legislation on assault weapons has been voiced in the past few weeks by groups such as the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National Association of Police Organizations, and the American Bar Association.

The American people are fed up with the death and violence brought on by these assault weapons. They demand action. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 386

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act shall be known as the "Assault Weapon Control Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(p)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any person to transfer, import, transport, ship, receive or possess any assault weapon.

"(2) This subsection does not apply with respect to—

"(A) transfer, importation, transporting, shipping or receiving to or by, or possession by or under, authority of the United States or any department or agency thereof, or of any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; or

"(B) any lawful transfer or possession of such a weapon that was lawfully possessed before the effective date of this subsection.".

"(q)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall be unlawful for any person to transfer, import, transport, ship, receive or possess a large-capacity detachable magazine or large-capacity ammunition belt, which can be employed by a semi-automatic firearm.

(2) This subsection does not apply with respect to—

(A) any transfer, importation, transporting, shipping or receiving to or by, or possession by or under, authority of the United States or any department or agency thereof, or of any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; or

(B) within 60 days of the date of enactment of this Act—

(i) any possession of such magazine or ammunition belt that was lawfully possessed before the date of this subsection; or

(ii) any transfer, transporting, shipping, or receiving to or by any person for the purpose of sale or donation of such magazines or ammunition belts to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or any State or any department, agency or political subdivision thereof."

SEC. 3. Section 921(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(25) The term 'assault weapon' means all firearms designated as assault weapons in this paragraph and all other semi-automatic firearms which are determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Attorney General, to be assault weapons, as provided in this Act. Such term shall include, in addition to any other firearm identified by the Secretary, all versions of the following, including firearms sold under the designation provided in this subsection and firearms which are substantially identical sold under any designation:

(A) Avtomat Kalashnikov semi-automatic firearms;

(B) Uzi semi-automatic firearms;

(C) Ingram Mac 10 or 11 semi-automatic firearms;

(D) TEC 9 and TEC 22 semi-automatic firearms;

(E) Ruger Mini 14 semi-automatic firearms;

(F) AR-15 semi-automatic firearms;

(G) Beretta AR 70 semi-automatic firearms;

(H) FN-FAL and FN-FNC semi-automatic firearms;

(I) Steyr Aug semi-automatic firearms

(J) shotguns with revolving cylinders known as the Street Sweeper and Striker 12;

(K) any other semi-automatic firearm with a fixed magazine capacity exceeding ten rounds; and

(L) any other shotgun with a fixed magazine, cylinder or drum capacity exceeding six rounds.

(26) The term 'large-capacity magazine' means a box, drum or other container which holds more than ten rounds of ammunition to be fed continuously into a semi-automatic firearm, or a magazine which can be readily converted into a large-capacity magazine.

(27) The term 'large-capacity ammunition belt' means a belt or strip which holds more than ten rounds of ammunition to be fed continuously into a semi-automatic firearm, or an ammunition belt which can be readily converted into a large-capacity ammunition belt.

(28) The term 'semi-automatic' means a firearm capable of firing a series of rounds by a successive depression of the trigger without additional slide, bolt or other manual action.

SEC. 4. Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new section to chapter 44.

"Sec. . Identification of Assault Weapons.

"(a) The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General shall, within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, determine which firearms sold, or potentially sold in the United States, in addition to those specifically designated in this Act, shall be designated as assault weapons under the provisions of Section 3 of this Act. The Secretary shall publish the list of firearms so designated and take steps to make the list and explanatory information widely available to the public.

"(b) The Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General, may periodically modify the list of firearms designated as assault weapons consistent with this Act.

"(c) The Secretary may issue an emergency order, for not longer than 90 days, barring importation and sale of any firearms, which the Secretary has reason to believe may be designated an assault weapon.

"(d) Notwithstanding any provision of this Act, no firearm shall be designated as an assault weapon which:

"(1) does not employ fixed ammunition;

"(2) was manufactured prior to 1898;

"(3) operates by manual bolt action;

"(4) operates by lever action;

"(5) operates by slide action;

"(6) is a single shot weapon;

"(7) is a multiple barrel weapon;

"(8) is a revolving cylinder weapon other than a shotgun;

"(9) employs a fixed magazine with a capacity of ten rounds or less;

"(10) is rim fire weapon that employs a tubular magazine with a magazine capacity of six rounds or less;

"(11) cannot employ a detachable magazine or ammunition belt with a capacity greater than ten rounds; or

"(12) was modified so as to render it permanently inoperable or so as to make it permanently a device which may not appropriately be designated as an assault weapon.

"(e) The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General, shall, when appropriate, recommend to Congress any appropriate modification of this Act, including the addition or deletion of firearms to be designated as assault weapons, provided that the Secretary shall submit an initial report containing any recommendations regarding the type of firearms designated as assault weapons no later than three months after the date of enactment of this Act.".

SEC. 5. Title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new section to chapter 44:

"Sec. . Use of Assault Weapons."

(a) Whoever, during and in relation to the commission of a crime of violence or drug trafficking crime (including a crime of violence or drug trafficking crime, which provides for an enhanced punishment if committed by the use of a deadly or dangerous weapon or device) for which he may be prosecuted in a court of the United States, uses or carries an assault weapon, shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the commission of such other crimes committed by the defendant, be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for not less than five years.

(b) For purposes of this subsection, the term "drug trafficking crime" means any felony violation of Federal law involving the distribution, manufacture, or importation of any controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act).

SEC. 6. (a) Section 5812 of Title 26, United States 26, United States Code, is amended by inserting the phrase "or assault weapon" after "firearm" wherever it appears.

(b) Section 5822 of Title 26, United States Code, is amended by inserting the phrase "or assault weapon" after "firearm" wherever it appears.

(c) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of Section 5841 of Title 26, United States Code, is amended by adding the phrase "or assault weapons" after "firearms" wherever it appears and adding the phrase "or assault weapon" after "firearm" wherever it appears.

(d) Section 5841 of Title 26, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(f) Any person in the possession of an assault weapon on the date of enactment of this Act shall register such firearm with the Secretary under such regulations as he may prescribe. Such registration shall be required for any type of assault weapon not later than 30 days from the date the Secretary provides public notice that the type of firearm is designated as an assault weapon or promulgates regulations for registration, whichever is later; provided that any firearm specifically designated as an assault weapon in paragraphs 921(a)(25)(A)-(I), as added by this Act, shall be registered within 30 days of the promulgation of regulations for registration by the Secretary.

(e) Section 5861 of Title 26, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(m) to fail to register an assault weapon in violation of the provisions of this chapter."

(f) Section 5845 of Title 26, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(i) Assault Weapons. The term 'assault weapon' shall have the meaning provided in Section 921 of Title 18."

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.—Unless otherwise provided, this Act shall become effective thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. DIXON:

S. 387. A bill to provide a one-time amnesty from criminal and civil tax penalties and 50 percent of the interest penalty owed for certain taxpayers who pay previous underpayments of Federal tax during the amnesty period, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to increase by 50 percent all criminal and civil tax penalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

FEDERAL TAX DELINQUENCY AMNESTY ACT OF 1989

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, tomorrow night, President Bush will address the Nation to present his budget for fiscal year 1990. I would hope that included in the President's budget proposal would be a call for a tax amnesty program that has proven extremely successful in many States, including my State of Illinois.

Mr. President, for the past 8 years, the Federal deficit has averaged an appalling $177 billion, representing 4.5 percent of the gross national product. A Federal budget deficit of this magnitude ultimately results in slower economic growth and a lower standard of living for our citizens. As many of us in Congress clearly recognize, the budget deficit is one of the most pressing problems confronting our Nation.

There are many factors that have contributed to our budget crisis. One very important factor that has not received nearly the attention it deserves has to do with tax compliance levels.

Compliance with our Federal tax laws is declining, creating what is referred to as the "tax gap." The tax gap is the difference between the amount of taxes that would be collected if there was 100 percent compliance with our tax laws, and the amount that is actually collected. This tax gap exacerbates our mounting budget deficit, as well as increases the burdens upon all taxpaying citizens.

A number of important provisions designed to improve tax compliance were contained in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Indeed, incorporated in that bill was an attempt to deal with the interrelated problems of fairness, complexity, and noncompliance. In my view, however, tax reform speaks only to future compliance. It fails to address the issue of collecting even some part of the lost revenue dollars due our Government.

Today, almost one-sixth of the taxes legally owed and due the United States are currently not being collected. A 1988 study, conducted by the Internal Revenue Service, reveals that the tax gap in 1987 is almost three times higher than it was in 1973. The IRS projects that in 1987, lost revenue to the Government will amount to $84.9 billion. Furthermore, it is estimated that the tax gap will reach $113.7 billion by 1992.

Every year, billions and billions of dollars are lost to our tax collection system. Increased IRS collection efforts alone cannot recover the vast majority of these outstanding delinquent balances.

It should not be assumed, however, that there is no way to recover a large portion of these lost revenues from prior years.

The increasing awareness of this tax gap has contributed to the growing interest and support for tax amnesty legislation. A number of States—including Illinois; Massachusetts; New York; Connecticut, where the Presiding Officer [Mr. LIEBERMAN] served ably as attorney general; Kansas, Alabama, Texas, Missouri, Minnesota, North Dakota, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Idaho, and Maryland have enacted tax amnesty programs. The success of these State tax amnesty programs has demonstrated the potential of this idea at the National level.

In my own State of Illinois alone, approximately $150 million was collected, far more than the Illinois Department of Revenue originally estimated. I want to depart from my text to say this: In Illinois the Department of Revenue opposed a tax amnestry program, said it would not raise any money at all. It raised $150 million.

The president of the Illinois State Senate, Phil Rock, is in town today for a meeting of the DNC we just discussed a moment ago. He said it was a remarkbly successful program in our State. The IRS opposed it, I think, on similar grounds and I think the IRS, like the Department of Revenue in Illinois, would be pleasantly surprised what a tax amnesty at the Federal level would mean. These were revenues Illinois otherwise would not be able to collect.

It is true that Federal tax collection efforts are more sophisticated than those of the States. At the same time, however, the Federal Government is losing billions of tax dollars—roughly $85 billion in 1987. Of this $85 billion, underreported income—that is, overstated deductions and credits, as well as unreported income, represent $48 billion. The largest portion of this unreported income is from sole proprietorships, informal supplier income, and capital gains.

Mr. President, the State amnesty programs have demonstrated that many individuals and companies will come forward if they can pay their back taxes and not be prosecuted. The State programs have also revealed that amnesty programs have enabled the States to collect significant amounts of currently uncollectable revenue with a minimal amount of resources.

Amnesty is a simple concept. It provides an opportunity for delinquent taxpayers to fully pay their overdue tax liability without being subject to criminal or civil prosecution. In Illinois, for example, the State collected approximately $150 million—far more than the Illinois Department of Revenue originally estimated. In addition, other States have also demonstrated impressive results. Over 130,000 delinquent taxpayers came forward in California and over $72 million was collected in Massachusetts.

The State programs were not giveaways: They did not reward tax cheaters. They did not reward tax cheaters. Rather, the State programs were balanced. Following the amnesty period, compliance efforts and penalties for noncompliance were increased. However, the State programs have resulted in placing additional taxpayers back on the rolls. These are additional revenues that the State would otherwise not have been able to collect.

At the Federal level, revenues from a tax amnesty/enforcement package can be utilized to help reduce our budget deficits. At the same time, these revenues can help preserve high-priority Federal programs that are currently facing drastic cuts or elimination. A tax amnesty/tougher enforcement program can help break the current budget gridlock by generating essential revenues to comply with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction targets while preserving our ability to met both essential defense and domestic needs.

The bill that I am introducing today establishes a 6-month amnesty period, to begin on the July 1 after the bill is enacted. The amnesty period would cover all tax years through 1987 still subject to collection by the IRS.

The amnesty itself would be simple and straightforward. It would include amnesty from criminal and civil penalties and from 50 percent of any interest penalty owed. All Federal taxes would be covered by the amnesty, not just the Federal income tax.

As we battle headlong to reduce our uncontrolable budget deficit, debating over whether to cut essential programs or impose unwanted taxes on our citizens, we should take advantage of the benefits that a tax amnesty program yields. I urge my colleagues to carefully examine the amnesty concept. I remain confident that a thorough and fair-minded review of this proposal will result in large, bipartisan support for such a program.

Mr. President, from time to time after the remarks of the President and his State of the Union Address tomorrow, I will be heard again on what I continue to feel is an excellent opportunity to bring in substantial revenue and, read my lips, without a tax increase.

I ask unanimous consent that this tax amnesty bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 387

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Tax Delinquency Amnesty Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. WAIVER OF CRIMINAL AND CIVIL PENALTIES AND 50 PERCENT OF INTEREST PENALTY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of any underpayment of Federal tax for any taxable period, the taxpayer shall not be liable for any criminal or civil penalty (or addition to tax) or 50 percent of any interest penalty provided by the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with respect to such underpayment if—

(1) during the amnesty period—

(A) the taxpayer files a written statement with the Secretary which sets forth—

(i) the name, address, and taxpayer identification number of the taxpayer,

(ii) the amount of the underpayment for the taxable period, and

(iii) such information as the Secretary may require for purposes of determining the correct amount of the underpayment for the taxable period, and

(B) the taxpayer agrees to a waiver of any restriction on the assessment or collection of such underpayment,

(2) when filing the statement described in paragraph (1), the taxpayer pays the amount of the underpayment shown on such statement, and

(3) not later than 30 days after the date on which the taxpayer is notified by the Secretary of the amount which equals 50 percent of the interest payable with respect to the underpayment (and the amount of any tax delinquent amount with respect to the taxpayer), the taxpayer pays the full amount of such interest (and such tax delinquent amount).

(b) INSTALLMENT PAYMENT OF TAX PERMITTED IN CERTAIN CASES.—The requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) shall be treated as met if—

(1) the taxpayer in the statement filed under subsection (a)(1) requests the privilege of making installment payments under this subsection, and

(2) the taxpayer enters into an agreement with the Secretary for the payment (in installments) of the amounts required to be paid under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) within 30 days after contacted by the Secretary for purposes of entering into such an agreement (or in any case where the Secretary determines that permitting the payment in installments of such amounts is not appropriate, the taxpayer pays the entire amount of such amounts within 30 days after notified by the Secretary of such determination).

(c) AMOUNT OF UNDERPAYMENT DISPUTED.—If the amount under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) is disputed by the taxpayer, such amount must be paid within the period described in subsection (a). If the taxpayer is entitled to a refund as a result of the resolution of the dispute through normal administrative and judicial procedures, the Secretary shall refund the amount plus interest at the 6-month Treasury bill rate in effect as of the date the dispute is resolved.

(d) AMNESTY NOT TO APPLY IN CERTAIN CASES.—

(1) WHERE TAXPAYER CONTACTED BEFORE STATEMENT FILED.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any underpayment of Federal tax for any taxable period to the extent that before the statement is filed under subsection (a)(1)—

(A) such underpayment was assessed,

(B) a notice of deficiency with respect to such underpayment was mailed under section 6212 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or

(C) the taxpayer was informed by the Secretary that the Secretary has questions about the taxpayer's tax liability for the taxable period.

(2) WHERE FRAUD IN SEEKING AMNESTY OR WHERE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION PENDING.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any taxpayer if—

(A) any representation made by such taxpayer under this section is false or fraudulent in any material respect, or

(B) a Justice Department referral (within the meaning of section 7602(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) is in effect with respect to such taxpayer as of the time the statement is filed under subsection (a)(1).

(3) ILLEGAL SOURCE INCOME.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any underpayment of Federal tax with respect to income resulting from a criminal offense under Federal, State, or local law.

(e) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

(1) AMNESTY PERIOD.—The term "amnesty period" means the 6-month period which begins on July 1, 1989, or on the first July 1 after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) FEDERAL TAX.—The term "Federal tax" means any tax imposed by the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(3) TAXABLE PERIOD.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "taxable period" means—

(i) in the case of a tax imposed by subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the taxable year, or

(ii) in the case of any other tax, the period in respect of which such tax is imposed.

(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR TAXES WITH NO TAXABLE PERIOD.—In the case of any tax in respect of which there is no taxable period, any reference in this section to a taxable period shall be treated as a reference to the taxable event.

(4) ADDITION TO TAX INCLUDES ADDITIONAL AMOUNT.—The term "addition to tax" includes any additional amount.

(5) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary's delegate.

(6) FORM OF STATEMENT.—Any statement under subsection (a)(1) shall be filed in such manner and form as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(7) NOTICE TO RELATED PERSONS TREATED AS NOTICE TO THE TAXPAYER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (d)(1)(C), any notice to a related person with respect to a matter which may materially affect the tax liability of the taxpayer for any taxable period shall be treated as notice to the taxpayer with respect to such taxable period.

(B) RELATED PERSON.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term "related person" means—

(i) any person who during the taxable period bore a relationship to the taxpayer described in section 267(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986,

(ii) any partnership in which the taxpayer was a partner during the taxable period, or

(iii) any S corporation (as defined in section 1361 of such Code) in which the taxpayer was a shareholder during the taxable period.

(f) PERIODS FOR WHICH AMNESTY AVAILABLE.—The provisions of this section shall apply only to underpayments of Federal tax for taxable periods ending before January 1, 1988 (or, in the case of a tax for which there is no taxable period, taxable events before January 1, 1988).

(g) ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(1) AMNESTY PROGRAM.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to administer the amnesty program, using special efforts to publicize such program including direct-mail contacts and radio, television, and print-media advertising.

(2) ADDITIONAL IRS AGENTS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to employ 3,000 additional Internal Revenue Service agents.

SEC. 3. CRIMINAL AND CIVIL TAX PENALTIES INCREASED BY 50 PERCENT.

(a) CIVIL PENALTIES.—

(1) Subsections (a)(2), (a)(3), and (d)(1) of section 6651 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure to file tax return or to pay tax) are each amended by striking out "0.5 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "0.75 percent".

(2) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "1 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1.5 percent":

(A) Section 6651(d)(1) (relating to increase in penalty for failure to pay tax in certain cases).

(B) Subsection (b) of section 6706 (relating to original issue discount information requirements).

(C) Paragraph (2)(A) of section 6707(a) (relating to failure to register tax shelter).

(3) Section 6657 of such Code (relating to bad checks) is amended by striking out "2 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "3 percent".

(4) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "5 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "7.5 percent":

(A) Paragraph (5)(A)(i) of section 6013(b) (relating to joint return after filing separate return).

(B) Paragraph (1) of section 6038(c) (relating to penalty of reducing foreign tax credit).

(C) Subsection (a)(1) of section 6651 (relating to file tax return or to pay tax).

(D) Subsections (c)(1) and (f)(3)(B) of section 6652 (relating to failure to file certain information returns, registration statements, etc.).

(E) Paragraph (1) of section 6653(a) (relating to additions to tax for negligence).

(F) Subsection (a) of section 6677 (relating to failure to file information returns with respect to certain foreign trusts).

(G) Subsection (a) of section 6689 (relating to failure to file notice of redetermination of foreign tax).

(5) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "10 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "15 percent":

(A) Subsection (m)(5)(B) of section 72 (relating to annuities; certain proceeds of endowment and life insurance contracts).

(B) The heading and paragraph (1) of section 72(q) (relating to 10-percent penalty for premature distributions from annuity contracts).

(C) The heading and paragraph (1) of section 72(t) (relating to 10-percent additional tax on early distributions from qualified retirement plans).

(D) The heading and paragraph (1) of section 72(v) (relating to 10-percent additional tax for taxable distributions from modified endowment contracts).

(F) Subsection (a) of section 5608 (relating to penalty and forfeiture for fraudulent claims for export drawback or unlawful relanding).

(G) Subsection (a) of section 5661 (relating to penalty and forfeiture for violation of laws and regulations relating to wine).

(H) Section 5671 (relating to penalty and forfeiture for evasion of beer tax and fraudulent noncompliance with requirements).

(I) Subsection (a) of section 5762 (relating to criminal penalties).

(J) Section 7201 (relating to attempt to evade or defeat tax).

(K) Section 7202 (relating to willful failure to collect or pay over tax).

(L) Section 7203 (relating to willful failure to file return, supply information, or pay tax).

(M) Section 7208 (relating to offenses relating to stamps).

(N) Subsection (a) of section 7213 (relating to unauthorized disclosure of information).

(O) Subsection (a) of section 7214 (relating to offenses by officers and employees of the United States).

(P) Section 7232 (relating to failure to register, or false statement by manufacturer or producer of gasoline, lubricating oil, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel).

(Q) Subsections (c)(3), (d)(2), and (e)(2) of section 9012 (relating to criminal penalties).

(R) Section 9042 (relating to criminal penalties).

(18) Section 5685 of such Code (relating to penalty and forfeiture relating to possession of devices for emitting gas, smoke, etc., explosives and firearms, when violating liquor laws) is amended—

(A) by striking out "10 years" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "15 years", and

(B) by striking out "20 years" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "30 years".

(19) Section 5871 of such Code (relating to penalties) is amended by striking out "ten years" and inserting in lieu thereof "15 years".

(c) OTHER PENALTIES.—

(1) Section 7273 of such Code (relating to penalties for offenses relating to special taxes) is amended by inserting "150 percent of" after "equal to".

(2) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "double" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "triple":

(A) Section 7268 (relating to possession with intent to sell in fraud of law or to evade tax).

(B) Section 7270 (relating to insurance policies).

(C) Section 7273 (relating to penalties for offenses relating to special taxes).

(3) Section 7304 of such Code (relating to penalty for fraudulently claiming drawback) is amended by striking out "triple" and inserting in lieu thereof "450 percent of".

(4) Section 7273 of such Code (relating to penalties for offenses relating to special taxes) is amended by striking out "$10" and inserting in lieu thereof "$15".

(5) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "$50" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$75":

(A) Section 7271 (relating to penalties for offenses relating to stamps).

(B) Section 7272 (relating to penalty for failure to register).

(6) Subsection (c) of section 7275 of such Code (relating to penalty for offenses relating to certain airline tickets and advertising) is amended by striking out "$100" and inserting in lieu thereof "$150".

(7) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "$500" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$750":

(A) Section 7268 (relating to possession with intent to sell in fraud of law or to evade tax).

(B) Section 7269 (relating to failure to produce records).

(C) Section 7304 (relating to penalty for fraudulently claiming drawback).

(D) Section 7342 (relating to penalty for refusal to permit entry or examination).

(8) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "$1,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500":

(A) Section 7261 (relating to representation that retailers' excise tax is excluded from price of article).

(B) Section 7262 (relating to violation of occupational tax laws relating to wagering—failure to pay special tax).

(9) Section 7262 of such Code (relating to violation of occupational tax laws relating to wagering—failure to pay special tax) is amended by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500".

(d) EXCISE TAX PENALTIES.—

(1) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4701 of such Code (relating to tax on issuer of registration—required obligation not in registered form) is amended by striking out "1 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "1.5 percent".

(2) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "2½ percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "3.75 percent":

(A) Subsection (a)(2) of section 4941 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(B) Subsection (a)(2) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(C) Subsection (a)(2) of section 4951 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(D) Subsection (a)(2) of section 4952 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(E) Subsection (a)(2) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(3) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "4 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "6 percent":

(A) Subsection (a) of section 4981 (relating to excise tax on undistributed income of real estate investment trusts).

(B) Subsection (a) of section 4982 (relating to excise tax on undistributed income of regulated investment companies).

(4) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "5 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "7.5 percent":

(A) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4941 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(B) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4943 (relating to taxes on excess business holdings).

(C) Subsections (a) and (b)(2) of section 4944 (relating to taxes on investments which jeopardize charitable purpose).

(D) Subsection (a) of section 4953 (relating to tax on excess contributions to black lung benefit trusts).

(E) Subsection (a) of section 4971 (relating to taxes on failure to meet minimum funding standards).

(F) Subsection (a) of section 4975 (relating to tax on prohibited transactions).

(G) Subsection (a) of section 5684 (relating to penalties relating to the payment and collection of liquor taxes).

(H) Subsection (b) of section 5761 (relating to civil penalties).

(5) Subsection (a) of section 4973 of such Code (relating to tax on excess contributions to individual retirement accounts, certain section 403(b) contracts, and certain individual retirement annuities) is amended by striking out "6 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "9 percent".

(6) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "10 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "15 percent":

(A) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(B) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4951 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(C) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4952 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(D) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(E) Subsection (a) of section 4971 (relating to taxes on failure to meet minimum funding standards).

(F) Subsection (a) of section 4972 (relating to tax on nondeductible contributions to qualified employer plans).

(G) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4978 (relating to tax on certain dispositions by employee stock ownership plans and certain cooperatives).

(H) Subsection (a) of section 4979 (relating to tax on certain excess contributions).

(I) Subsection (c)(4)(A)(I) of section 4980B (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans).

(7) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "15 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "22.5 percent":

(A) Subsection (a) of section 4942 (relating to taxes on failure to distribute income).

(B) Subsection (a) of section 4980 (relating to tax on reversion of qualified plan assets to employer).

(C) Subsection (a) of section 4980A (relating to tax on excess distributions from qualified retirement plans).

(8) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "25 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "37.5 percent":

(A) Subsection (a)(1) of section 4911 (relating to tax on excess expenditures to influence legislation).

(B) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4944 (relating to taxes on investments which jeopardize charitable purpose).

(9) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "30 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "45 percent":

(A) Subsection (a) of section 4977 (relating to tax on certain fringe benefits provided by an employer).

(B) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4978A (relating to tax on certain dispositions of employer securities to which section 2057 applied).

(10) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "50 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "75 percent":

(A) Subsection (b)(2) of section 4941 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(B) Subsection (b)(2) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(C) Subsection (b)(2) of section 4951 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(D) Subsection (b)(2) of section 4952 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(E) Subsection (b)(2) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(F) Subsection (a) of section 4974 (relating to excise tax on certain accumulations in qualified retirement plans).

(G) Subsection (a) of section 4979A (relating to tax on certain prohibited allocations of qualified securities).

(H) Subsection (a) of section 5881 (relating to greenmail).

(11) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "100 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "150 percent":

(A) Paragraph (6)(A) of section 857(b) (relating to method of taxation of real estate investment trusts and holders of shares or certificates of beneficial interest).

(B) Subsection (b) of section 4942 (relating to taxes on failure to distribute income).

(C) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(D) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4951 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(E) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4952 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(F) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(G) Subsection (b) of section 4971 (relating to taxes on failure to meet minimum funding standards).

(H) Subsection (b) of section 4975 (relating to tax on prohibited transactions).

(I) Subsection (a) of section 4976 (relating to taxes with respect to funded welfare benefit plans).

(12) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "200 percent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "300 percent":

(A) Subsection (b)(1) of section 4941 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(B) Subsection (b) of section 4943 (relating to taxes on excess business holdings).

(13) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by inserting "150 percent of" after "equal to" each place it appears:

(A) Paragraph (5) of section 857(b) (relating to method of taxation of real estate investment trusts and holders of shares or certificates of beneficial interest).

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 4976(c) (relating to tax on funded welfare benefit funds which include discriminatory employee benefit plan).

(14) Subsections (b)(1) and (c)(3) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$100" and inserting in lieu thereof "$150".

(15) Subsection (c)(3)(B) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$200" and inserting in lieu thereof "$300".

(16) Subsection (a) of section 5761 of such Code (relating to civil penalties) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500".

(17) Subsection (b)(3)(A) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$2,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,750".

(18) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "$5,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500":

(A) Subsection (d)(2) of section 4944 (relating to taxes on investments which jeopardize charitable purpose).

(B) Subsection (c)(2) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(C) Subsection (c)(2) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(19) The following provisions of such Code are each amended by striking out "$10,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$15,000":

(A) Subsection (c)(2) of section 4941 (relating to taxes on self-dealing).

(B) Subsection (d)(2) of section 4944 (relating to taxes on investments which jeopardize charitable purpose).

(C) Subsection (c)(2) of section 4945 (relating to taxes on taxable expenditures).

(D) Subsection (c)(2) of section 4955 (relating to taxes on political expenditures of section 501(c)(3) organizations).

(20) Subsection (b)(3)(B) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$15,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$22,500".

(21) Subsection (c)(4)(A)(II) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$750,000".

(22) Subsection (c)(4)(C) of section 4980B of such Code (relating to failure to satisfy continuation coverage requirements of group health plans) is amended by striking out "$2,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,000,000".

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988 (or, in the case of a tax for which there is no taxable period, taxable events occurring after such date).

(2) AMNESTY PERIOD.—At the expiration of the amnesty period described in section 2, in the case of any taxpayer remaining liable for any underpayment of Federal tax, the amendments made by this section shall apply to any taxable year (or any taxable event occurring during such taxable year) for which any period of limitation has not expired.

(3) EXCEPTION.—Paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not apply to any judicial or administrative proceeding with respect to any underpayment of Federal tax pending on the date of the enactment of this Act in which a judgment was entered before such date.

S. 388. A bill to provide for 5-year staggered terms for members of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

STAGGERED TERMS FOR MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of myself, Senator JOHNSTON, and Senator BOREN, to introduce legislation that will provide greater continuity in the terms of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commissioners. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission [FERC] is an important agency to my constituents in New Mexico and to others from oil and gas producing States. The FERC sets rates and charges for the transportation and sale of natural gas and for the transmission and sale of electricity. In addition, the Commission establishes rates of charges for the transportation of oil by pipeline, as well as the valuation of such pipelines. With this significant mandate, the FERC must be organized in a matter that ensures the effectiveness and timeliness of its decisionmaking activities.

Although various reforms have been proposed for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission over the years, the single most important reform would provide for greater continuity at the decisionmaking level of the Commission. This could be done by lengthening and properly staggering the terms of FERC Commissioners.

The Department of Energy Act provides that the five members of FERC serve for 4-year terms. Members may serve after the expiration of their terms until a successor takes office, but not longer than a year. Because the terms of FERC members are not fully staggered, it is possible to have four members leave the Commission in less than 2 years, with a corresponding loss of experience and continuity in decisionmaking.

The failure to properly stagger the terms of FERC members contributed to the situation last year in which the terms of two sitting Commissioners has expired, the terms of the other two Commissioners were about to expire, and the fifth member had resigned. The Commission could have been left without a quorum to conduct business had successors not been confirmed by the end of October. It is imperative that we not allow this situation to occur again.

My legislation addresses this problem by providing for 5-year staggered terms for FERC Commissioners. One member's term would expire each year. It also eliminates the period a Commissioner may serve after the expiration of his or her term.

The transition to fully staggered 5-year terms is set up so that the initial appointments to FERC after the bill is enacted will be for 3-, 4-, or 5-year terms ending in 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997. Thereafter, all terms will be 5-year terms.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

S. 389. A bill to amend the Department of Energy Organization Act to establish the position of Assistant Secretary for Natural Gas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ESTABLISHMENT OF POSITION OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF ENERGY FOR NATURAL GAS

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of myself and Senator BOREN to introduce legislation to establish within the Department of Energy an Assistant Secretary for Natural Gas.

INTRODUCTION

When the Department of Energy was initially formed in 1978, natural gas was in short supply in the interstate market. This shortage was the result of Federal wellhead price controls that discouraged production and subsidized consumption. The NGPA did begin the gradual phaseout of price controls, but the official governmental view—as reflected in the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act—was that reserves were limited to the point that major new industrial or utility uses of gas should be prohibited. In short, gas was thought to be part of the problem not part of the solution. Thus at the time of the Department's creation, little thought was given to the role of natural gas in the future.

For example, the first National Energy Plan submitted at the same time contained statements such as:

The choices now for electric utilities are basically coal and nuclear power.

Conserving scarce oil and natural gas is far more important than saving coal.

Supplies [in the short term] for the residential and commercial sector will have to be obtained by diverting gas from electric utilities.

Federal pricing policy would also discourage use of gas by industry and utilities . . . In addition to these wellhead pricing changes, taxes would be levied on the use of oil and gas by industry and utilities, in order to encourage conservation and conversion to coal and other fuels.

Furthermore, the plan set forth goals to be achieved by 1985. Not one of those goals mentioned natural gas.

For years, natural gas policy consisted of seeking legislation to decontrol or otherwise reform the regulatory structure governing the industry.

While that goal was appropriate, and indeed could be pursued further, the need for a high-level focus on gas policy is now becoming greater than ever.

THE IMPORTANCE OF NATURAL GAS

It is now apparent that natural gas can play a critical role in our energy future. The country faces a looming shortfall in electric generation capacity, increasing dependence on imported oil, and likely new emission controls on existing utility and industrial emissions. Natural gas can be at least part of the solution to all of these challenges.

Years ago, when the prevailing departmental view was that natural gas was a diminishing resource, the prominence given to nuclear energy, conservation, renewable energy, and coal research programs perhaps made sense. Clearly, however, the hopes that these fuels offer a quick solution to our energy and environmental needs have been greatly tempered. Meanwhile, the Department's own studies, have reversed the pessimistic thinking concerning the size and economics of the natural gas resource base. Congress responded to the new reality by virtually repealing the natural gas restrictions in the Fuel Use Act in 1987.

Today it is more important than ever that natural gas receive the departmental attention and support necessary to adequately integrate natural gas planning into the country's energy and environmental goals.

For example, using advance technology, gas can be burned in certain boilers in conjunction with coal and achieve substantial reductions of both SO_2 and NO_x as well as other positive environmental results. Yet there seems to be little explicit recognition of this in the consideration and debate on environmental policy. Also, funding for R&D into these areas has paled in comparison to the money poured into coal technologies.

Likewise there seems to be little or no linkage between the well recognized need to expand gas availability in areas such as the Northeast to fuel additional power generation and the FERC's certificate proceedings on that issue. Although the FERC is now moving expeditiously on those applications, proposals to this effect have languished for years and again, there seems to be no overall thought given to how the region's electric needs and gas needs are related. There are other areas of the country where additional pipeline capacity is needed, but the Department seems oblivious to these sorts of concerns.

Gas-fired combined cycle electric power generation is now widely expected to play a key role in meeting the rapidly approaching shortfall in generating capacity, yet apparently the Department has little if any effort under way to assist in this area.

The fact is, beyond occasional legislative initiatives, natural gas policy has been virtually nonexistent in the Department. Organizationally, natural gas is the responsibility of the Assistant Secretary for Fossil Fuels, but the attention and budget of this Department has focused almost entirely on coal programs and the strategic petroleum reserve.

It would appear that the creation of this position can put the natural gas policy initiatives and R&D guidance functions in one place and would assure more focused attention to overcoming any hurdles that might reduce the contribution natural gas can make to the environment, energy security and the trade balance.

IMPORTANCE TO NEW MEXICO

The natural gas industry is very important to my constituents in New Mexico. New Mexico ranks fourth among the States in natural gas production. There are 5,000 natural gas wells throughout the State that produce 200 million cubic feet per month. Approximately one-fourth of the revenues going into New Mexico's general fund comes from oil-and-gas-related taxes, royalties, and permanent fund earnings. The State revenues derived directly from oil and gas sources totaled 750.7 million in 1987. Employment in the industry totals approximately 10,000. Clearly, New Mexico benefits from the exploration and development of natural gas, and the citizens of the State strongly support any effective effort to continue the production of this clean burning energy resource.

ESTABLISHING AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR NATURAL GAS

Procedurally, there are two options for establishing the position of Assistant Secretary for Natural Gas within the Department. The DOE Organization Act provide, in section 203, that there shall be "eight Assistant Secretaries appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate * * *" Currently, the Assistant Secretaries include:

Assistant Secretary for Management and Administration.

Assistant Secretary for Congressional, Intergovernmental and Public Affairs.

Assistant Secretary for International Affairs and Energy Emergencies.

Assistant Secretary for Nuclear Energy.

Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy.

Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Energy.

Assistant Secretary for Defense Programs.

Assistant Secretary for Environment, Safety and Health.

Obviously, creating an Assistant Secretary of Natural Gas administratively would require a realignment of the existing responsibilities to remain with the statutory limitation of eight Assistant Secretaries. One option would be to place the responsibility for conservation programs directly with the Under Secretary, who is given responsibility for those activities by section 202(b) of the act.

In addition to this administrative approach, Congress could authorize the creation of an additional Assistant Secretary position within the Department. This would be a simple, straightforward legislative amendment to the DOE Organization Act.

The functions of this office could include the following:

Coordinate all departmental activities concerning natural gas policy;

Work with EPA to examine thoroughly the contribution gas can make toward achieving reductions of pollutants from both stationary and mobile sources and to incorporate the findings of such a study in clean air and other environmental initiatives of the administration;

Review current R&D funding for gas technologies such as natural gas vehicles, cofiring, reburn, emission controls, and various end use technologies and make appropriate recommendations;

Evaluate the potential for expanding research into improved drilling techniques and production of unconventional gas reserves;

Evaluate the health of the Nation's gas production infrastructure—including the impact of the Tax Code on domestic producers of natural gas—and policies that could be pursued to sustain that infrastructure—including the impact of potential tax incentives on exploration and production activity;

Coordinate with those responsible for electric policy to take initiatives to facilitate the use of gas in meeting regional power generation needs;

Convene a natural gas summit of Federal, State, local, and industry officials to review natural gas policies, markets, regulations and examine how natural gas use can be facilitated;

Coordinate a natural gas council of senior industry executives to advise DOE and the administration on natural gas issues, and develop research priorities and policy initiatives; and

Chair an interagency task force composed of representatives of DOE, FERC, EPA, DOI, DOD, and perhaps Commerce and DOT to examine how policies can be coordinated to promote the use of natural gas where appropriate both within the Government and in terms of national policy.

CONCLUSION

In summary, by creating an Assistant Secretary for Natural Gas, the new administration has an opportunity to refocus departmental attention on to natural gas policy. This shift would be consistent with the recognition that gas can and should play a much larger role in the country's energy picture. This opportunity must not be lost, for if gas policy continues to be neglected, the risk of more severe energy, environmental, and economic problems in the future will be magnified.

I ask my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. McCAIN):

S. 390. A bill entitled the Business Incubator Review Act of 1989; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

BUSINESS INCUBATOR REVIEW ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce legislation to support the creation and operation of small business incubators. I am pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation by Senator JOHN McCAIN.

This bill is essentially the same as the legislation Senator McCAIN and I introduced last year. Its aim is to focus and modernize Federal support for a proven tool for nurturing new companies and fostering economic development—small business incubators.

Incubators promote the startup and successful growth of new firms by offering an entrepreneurial environment, affordable office, warehouse and manufacturing space, and shared business services. In other words, they offer a supportive environment in which small business can grow—hence the term incubators. As important, incubators help small businesses get the management assistance they need in order to survive.

Recent experience has shown incubator increase the odds of a small business succeeding. So far, there are 317 incubator facilities nationally which have graduated more than 7,000 firms and created more than 29,000 new jobs. Incubators are located in over 40 States.

My home State of New Mexico is one where there are a number of successful business incubator facilities. Communities as diverse as Albuquerque, Taos, Los Alamos, Portales, Roswell, and Tucumari have found incubators to be a useful economic development tool. One of these incubators, the New Mexico Business Innovation Center in Albuquerque, has been recognized by the Economic Development Administration and the National Council for Urban Economic Development as one of the Nation's most successful economic development programs. I believe that the diversity of successful facilities we have in New Mexico proves the value of incubators in economic development. Clearly, small business incubators are important for all types of communities and all parts of the country.

Even though business incubators are one of the best community and economic development tools, there is no coherent or coordinated Federal policy to support these centers. The problem is not the lack of Federal funds for incubators. The real problem is the lack of access to Federal funds. There are numerous business and community development programs. Yet, incubators may not always qualify for these programs or qualify only under special circumstances.

For example, the Community Development Block Grant [CDBG] Program recently issued guidelines for business incubator funding. Because of the existing laws and regulations governing CDBG funds, incubators are eligible for funding if they meet the national CDBG objectives of benefiting low- and moderate-income persons or preventing or eliminating slums or blight. While incubators, through general economic development and job creation, will accomplish these ends, such requirements limit CDBG funding to incubators in certain areas. These requirements also impose strict documentation and additional paperwork burdens.

The heart of the problem is the fact that many of these economic and community development programs were created before incubators were fully developed as an economic development tool. There is a crying need to review and update our economic and community development programs to include incubators.

The legislation we are introducing today is very straightforward. First, it clearly enunciates the policy of the United States that the Federal Government should encourage and support the development and operation of business incubators as a tool of economic and community development.

Second, the bill sets up a Business Incubator Review Group, comprised of the Secretaries of Housing and Urban Development, Health and Human Services, Energy, Defense, Commerce, Agriculture, and Labor, and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration. This group will review all policies and programs of the Federal Government touching business incubators and report to Congress the changes needed in existing law to make business incubator centers eligible for current Federal grant or loan programs.

Third, the bill directs the members of this review group to take such steps necessary to insure that business incubators are eligible for existing grants and loans for community development, business promotion, research and development, and export promotion. Members of the review group are required to consult with incubator operators and State and local economic and community development leaders.

Finally, the bill designates the Commerce Department's clearinghouse for State and local initiatives on productivity, technology and innovation as the Federal Government's central point for information on Federal programs in support of business incubators. It also requires the clearinghouse to undertake a study of business incubator centers, including a description of State and local programs.

Mr. President, this legislation will strengthen our economic and community development efforts. Business incubators are a proven job creation tool. We should do all we can to support them. I ask that a copy of this legislation be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 390

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Business Incubator Review Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) business incubators provide economic development and promote startup and growth of new firms, by offering an entrepreneurial environment, affordable and efficient workspace, business consulting services, and equipment;

(2) communities which have little economic activity, aging industrial districts, declining commercial areas, and high unemployment can be revitalized by business, incubators which combat disinvestment, renovate old and deteriorated buildings, provide employment, and encourage business ownership opportunities, thus fostering a community's long-term economic development;

(3) business incubators help nurture existing economic activity which leads to future growth by helping to stabilize declining industries or by advancing new industries;

(4) business incubators help communities create new firms which have the potential to become high growth industries and provide enhanced employment possibilities; and

(5) business incubators help communities create startup firms to diversify and strengthen the local economy and foster a stable employment base.

SEC. 3. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that the Federal Government should encourage and support the development and operation of business incubators as a tool of economic and community development.

SEC. 4. INTERAGENCY REVIEW GROUP.

(a) COMPOSITION.—The President shall establish a Business Incubator Review Group (herafter referred to as "the Review Group"), to be comprised of—

(1) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development,

(2) the Secretary of Health and Human Services,

(3) the Secretary of Energy,

(4) the Secretary of Defense,

(5) the Secretary of Commerce,

(6) the Secretary of Agriculture,

(7) the Secretary of Labor,

(8) the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, and

(9) any other Federal officials which the President may consider appropriate.

(b) CHAIRPERSON.—The Administrator of the Small Business Administration shall serve as chairperson of the Review Group and shall provide administrative and clerical support.

(c) REVIEW.—The Review Group shall undertake a review of all policies and programs of the Federal Government with respect to business incubators.

(d) REPORT.—The Review Group shall, within 90 days of the date of enactment of this Act, submit a report to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate containing the findings of its review, including—

(1) a description of existing Federal grant and loan programs, which involve community development, business promotion, research and development, and export promotion, for which business incubators are currently eligible;

(2) recommendations regarding changes to existing law which may be needed to make business incubators eligible for current Federal grant and loan programs for community development, business promotion, research and development, and export promotion; and

(3) recommendations for any additional legislation that may be required to foster and support business incubators.

(e) TERMINATION.— Upon the expiration of the 30-day period following the date on which the report is submitted pursuant to subsection (d), the Review Group shall terminate.

SEC. 5. REGULATORY REVIEW.

Each member of the Review Group is directed to review regulations promulgated by the member's respective department or agency which involve grants and loans for community development, business promotion, research and development, and export promotion and to take such action as may be necessary to ensure that business incubators are eligible for such grants or loans.

SEC. 6. CONSULTATION WITH INCUBATOR OPERATORS AND GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS.

In conducting the reviews under section 4 and section 5, members of the Review Group shall regularly consult with representatives of incubator operators, officials of State and local government, and others involved in small business promotion and economic development.

SEC. 7. AUTHORITY FOR CLEARINGHOUSE ON STATE AND LOCAL INITIATIVES.

(a) STUDY OF STATE AND LOCAL PROGRAMS.—The Secretary of Commerce, through the Clearinghouse for State and Local Initiatives on Productivity, Technology and Innovation, shall conduct a study of business incubators, including a description of available State and local programs.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce shall submit the results of the study conducted under subsection (a) to the appropriate Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

(c) CLEARINGHOUSE RESPONSIBILITIES.—Section 6(b) of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3710 et seq.), as amended by section 5122 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-418), is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (7),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(9) collect information on Federal programs that support business incubators and provide technical assistance and advice to State and local governments with respect to such programs.".

(d) AUTHORIZATION.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of this section $100,000 to be available until expended.●

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I would like to thank my good friend, the Senator from New Mexico. He has put in a great deal of effort into this bill, and I am as committed as he is to see it through.

Small business incubators are an international phenomenon that have sprung up in the United States, Canada, and even Europe. They promote the startup and growth of new firms by providing essential management assistance—experience new entrepreneurs rarely have but that is essential. They also provide affordable office space, warehouse and manufacturing facilities, and shared business services as basic as receptionists.

Small business incubators have been so successful that a tremendous amount of support for them has burgeoned among business communities, State and local governments, and small business people around the country. Each incubator is unique because each is designed to meet the needs of the community it serves, and most are supported by larger businesses around them. Right now there are 317 incubators in over 40 States. They have spawned 7,000 new firms and 29,000 new jobs.

Because of their success—80 percent to 93 percent of business graduating from incubators survive—the demand for these programs is strong. Moreover, there are waiting-lists of entrepreneurs who want to avail themselves of incubators—and those lists are growing longer all the time. There are simply not enough incubators to serve the new businesses that are struggling to make it through their first year. Survival during that first year, when 80 percent of small business fail, is crucial.

We believe that small business incubators are a successful and proven economic development tool that should be eligible for existing economic development and small business programs provided by the Federal Government. For this reason our bill is designed to modernize existing economic development programs and small business programs so that small business incubators can participate in them. We hope to achieve this by changing existing regulations, not by establishing new Federal programs or earmarking new funds. We also hope to learn whether additional statutory changes are necessary.

Finally, our bill would ensure that there is one central point in the Federal Government which collects and maintains information about small business incubators. Our bill would designate the Department of Commerce's clearing house for State and local initiatives on productivity, technology, and innovation as the central information point.

I have seen the success of incubators in my own State of Arizona where two are well under way. The Tucson Business and Technology Center and the Valley Center for Innovation, which will be a state-of-the-art incubator, have been carefully developed to serve their communities and reflect the accumulated experience of established incubators in the United States and Canada.

Mr. President, I think this may be one of the most exciting developments in our economy, and I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

I ask unanimous consent that the following letters be printed in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL BUSINESS INCUBATION ASSOCIATION,

Athens, OH, February 7, 1989.

U.S. Senator JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. Senator MCCAIN: The National Business Incubation Association wishes to express its support for the Business Incubator Review Act of 1989 to be introduced in the United States Senate this week. The Association represents 425 small business incubators, incubators developers and economic development officials across the United States.

Our membership and all individuals and agencies involved in development of the nation's fast-growing business incubation industry believe this bill is of vital importance. It represents the first national legislation giving recognition to this industry's role in economic development and the creation of new businesses and employment and it provides a broad policy statement whereby the Federal Government may act on regulations, policies and programs affecting small business incubators.

Of central importance to this legislation is the creation of a federal review group whose purpose is to review federal programs for which business incubators are currently eligible and make recommendations regarding changes to existing law that would be necessary to improve incubators' access to other federal programs. These recommendations and additional recommendations for new legislation that will serve to foster and support business incubators will provide a tremendous impetus to the industry.

Only 5 years ago, there were 50 or fewer business incubators in operation in the United States. Today, some 330 to 350 incubators are providing valuable resources to small businesses, offering avenues for technology transfer and fostering new job creation. By 1992, the National Business Incubation Association estimates as many as 1,000 incubators will be operating.

This industry is so new that little comprehensive research has been conducted in this area. Some 4,000 to 5,000 small businesses are probably currently operating out of incubators. The total employment of these incubators is still unknown. However, there can be no question that incubators have already given a positive impetus to the creation of new business, which in turn has influenced job creation. And it is also well-known that incubators located on university campuses have resulted in tangible benefits in terms of technology transfer. The incubator as an economic development tool has provided benefits to inner city neighborhoods, large metropolitan areas and small cities.

The benefits of incubation are dramatically apparent at such institutions as the Advanced Technology Development Center at Georgia Institute of Technology and at Rennsalaer Polytechnic Institute in Pennsylvania, which has nearly 40 incubators in operation. However, incubation offers benefits in rural settings as well. According to Anthony M. Robinson of the U.S. Small Business Administration ("Trends in Incubator Development and Management Assistance Strategies for Incubators," 1988), "In smaller towns incubator results are likely to be more dramatic as several dozen new jobs created by the incubator can represent an important development in the community and can enhance its viability."

The United States Senate is to be applauded for its interest in small business incubation and this new industry's benefits to job creation and entrepreneurship. The National Business Incubation Association is pleased to support this bill.

Sincerely,

DINAH ADKINS,
Executive Director.

THE CENTER FOR BUSINESS INNOVATION,

Kansas City, MO, February 7, 1989.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: I am delighted to hear about your support for legislation that would allow small business incubators nationwide to compete for federal funding for specific grant and other development projects. This opportunity would be especially meaningful since the business incubator network has, over the last several years, become a nationwide versus a regional industry.

The Center for Business Innovation in Kansas City, Missouri, specializes in a high value-added, risk partnership approach to explosive growth potential, high-technology startups in our local area. A key to the success of our operation has been the careful approach we take to screening prospective tenant and client businesses. In this spirit let me refer you to the attached excerpts from our 1988 annual report. The Center screens for those businesses which, in addition to high growth potential, have the ability to create new employment in the Kansas City region.

We, therefore, seek those ventures in which both the business concept and the individuals associated with the businesses merit the intensive efforts of our staff and other resources. We believe this is the only vehicle to assure the most deserving ventures receive the assistance needed.

We measure the success of the Center's tenants and clients in a number of different ways. Of most immediate value to you, however, would be to note the economic impact of our tenant, client and graduate businesses on the area and state economy. The last two pages of the attached brochure highlight some of these statistics. I hope you will take a moment and note the significant economic return of our portfolio on the area's economy in terms of new job creation and return on the state's tax dollar investment.

Again I wish to express our support as a Midwestern business incubator for the efforts you are pursuing which can have national benefit. If you have questions or I may provide additional information to you in any form, please feel free to call me.

Sincerely,

STEVE BOWLING,
Vice President.●

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. DASCHLE):

S. 391. A bill to reform the budget process; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

BUDGET REFORM

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, tomorrow evening, President George Bush will come before a joint session of the Congress to lay out his budget ideas for fiscal year 1990 and beyond.

Some of those ideas—like concepts contained in President Reagan's final budget—will focus on the "process" by which we consider the budget.

To encourage further that debate and those improvements, my good friend from Louisiana, Mr. JOHNSTON, and I are introducing today legislation that we have termed simply the Congressional Budget Reform Act of 1989. I am pleased we are joined by Senator DASCHLE.

The title of our bill explains precisely what it is all about: A series of changes—evolutionary changes—in the existing budget process, changes to make it work more effectively and efficiently for the Federal Government and for the American people.

Before explaining to my colleagues some of the details of this legislation, I would like to talk for a few minutes about how we got here, and where we are going, as I see it.

Every Member of this body carries with him or her a sense of frustration over the process by which we raise, allocate, and spend tax dollars. Many blame it on the budget process: "If only we could go back to the good old days."

I was there in the "good old days," and I can tell you that they weren't so good. The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is a fundamentally sound law. Our problems stem from the policy conflicts that exist at the Federal level, not necessarily in the process we use to handle those conflicts.

I am convinced that the deficit problems confronting America would be far worse if we lacked the discipline of the Budget Act. Let me explain.

I arrived in the Senate in January 1973, the same day that my good friend from Louisiana, Mr. JOHNSTON, arrived, plus about 15 other new Members.

We had a lot to learn. And a lot of it we couldn't figure out. Later in 1973, after the Senate had considered four or five appropriations bills, these new kids on the block like DOMENICI and JOHNSTON and others started asking what in the world are we voting on? When will we know what the total Federal budget will be?

Don't worry, we were told, we'll let you know by the end of the year when we'll add it up for you. We'll give you the totals then.

Frankly, that wasn't a very helpful response. So all of us, those new Senators elected in 1972, got together and signed a letter to the leadership telling the leaders that we were not going to vote on another appropriations bill unless we received assurances that we had a game plan against which to measure appropriations bills.

What followed a year later was the Budget Act.

I'm not here to tell you that anyone in 1974 envisioned that the Budget Act would make things easier or streamline the process. It didn't then and it won't now. That is because the Budget Act was layered atop the existing process: appropriations and authorizations. We knew that.

But the Budget Act did give the Congress and the American people the one thing they lacked: a game plan, a yardstick for measuring spending.

Problems developed, so we began to tinker. In the final year of the Carter administration, we discovered the ability to force changes to cut back future spending with the process known as reconciliation. That process has been used virtually every year since to bring about major changes in entitlement and tax policy for the Nation. We then added the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, which has placed us on a glidepath toward balance.

It is my view that the 1974 budget process—despite some coughs and bumps, like an antique car—has generally worked well. It has moved us toward our destination. But, for many reasons, we have failed to achieve as much as everyone would like.

What are some of the problems? For one, the congressional process lacks the formal participation of the administration. Lacking an agreement with the White House, the Congress often has failed to report budget resolutions by the required date—or act on appropriations bills that may be threatened with a veto—until the arrival of the new fiscal year forces action in the form of a continuing resolution.

The one time we had the administration deeply involved—during the budget summit of 1987—we were able to move into a period of some budget tranquility the following year, since the two branches had agreed on the framework for the next year.

And then there is the reconciliation process. We all know the difficulties that have occurred when those ordered to comply with reconciliation instructions are not participants in the formulation of those instructions. There has been a tendency to resist those instructions, or use them as vehicles not for reductions, but expansion and new programs.

This broad issue has been examined in great detail in a new book, "Broken Purse Strings," by Rudolph G. Penner, the former Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and Alan J. Abramson of the Urban Institute. The book carries a foreword written by President Gerald R. Ford.

The concepts that Senator JOHNSTON and I have included in this bill—concepts we have been discussing for some time—have many similarities with the suggestions offered by President Ford and the authors of "Broken Purse Strings."

I am honored that President Ford on Sunday sent us a letter endorsing our approach. In it, he stated:

> I support your proposal. In my judgment it is a significant, constructive and essential move toward the refinement and simplification of this vital governmental function.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of President Ford's letter be printed following my statement, together with a letter from President Carter, also endorsing our efforts.

Mr. President, what the Domenici-Johnston bill offers is evolutionary changes, ones that we are convinced will improve the process, working toward three specific goals:

Reducing the workload of the budget process;

Simplifying the process; and Improving enforcement.

To achieve these goals, our bill offers five specific improvements in the budget process:

First, we would replace the existing Budget Committees with a new, 18-member Joint Committee on the Budget. This proposal goes to the heart of the "delays" in budgeting, and there have been delays, no doubt about it.

But the delays have not so much been in each body. The delays have been between the bodies. A joint committee should improve that situation. It will move the confrontation that is inevitable to an earlier point in the year, then go to both bodies with the same fiscal game plan, a game plan that far more likely to pass since it will have the endorsement of the congressional leadership.

As I know the structure of the joint committee will be of interest to my colleagues, let me explain what we see.

We would name the four top congressional leaders—the majority and minority leaders of the Senate and the Speaker and minority leader of the House—to the committee. I would hope each would assume membership. But our bill provides for the naming of a designee, should one or more of the leaders wish not to serve directly.

The joint committee would also include, by right, the chairman and ranking members of the two Appropriations Committees, as well as the chairmen and ranking members of the Finance and the Ways and Means Committees.

And there would be six "open seats." These open seats would include the current chairmen and the ranking members of the two Budget Committees—with future vacancies to be filled by the appropriate leaders—plus one member appointed each by the Speaker and the majority leader of the Senate.

Thus the majority party in each House would have 5 to 4 control over its membership. The chairman and vice chairman of the joint committee would come from those holding an "open seat," with the chairmanship rotating annually.

Second, we also move toward a longer term outlook on the budget. The President would be required to submit a 2-year budget at the beginning of each Congress, with revisions the second year. The joint committee would prepare a 2-year resolution that included binding totals for each category of spending: domestic, defense, and international affairs.

This is a very important change. The budget resolution is now fragmented into 20 different functions: defense, agriculture, education, and so on. These functions fail to correspond to either agency or committee jurisdictions. More importantly, they are in no way binding.

So our bill envisions those three simple categories of spending—defense, domestic, and international affairs—each to be subdivided into two components: discretionary spending, plus entitlements and mandatory spending. There would also be a category for offsetting receipts and net interest.

These allocations of defense, domestic and international affairs spending would replace the committee allocations currently required under section 302(a) of the Budget Act.

Let me explain it another way. Instead of a lot of detailed "guidance" that now comes in our budget discussions, we would develop a budget containing only broad allocations, but allocations that are binding. We would replace the current enforcement of section 302(b) with enforcement of these new 302(a) allocations.

Our third change would convert the annual budget resolution into a joint resolution, requiring the President's signature.

As I have mentioned, the lack of participation by the executive branch has proved an impediment to the process. Under the approach in this bill, any confrontation would occur up front—not in the days or weeks just prior to the new fiscal year—and we would have a simplified budget that carries the force of law.

And I would again point out that the successes of last year—when we passed all the appropriations bills before the start of the fiscal year—grow directly from the breakouts on spending contained in the budget summit agreement at the end of 1987.

The fourth point in our bill would force both years covered by the joint resolution to meet Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets. Should Congress fail to adopt a timely budget resolution that achieves those targets, an "automatic" budget would take effect on May 15, with the spending levels set consistent with the sequester process under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

These totals would hold until Congress was able to agree to a resolution under normal procedures.

Fifth, while our bill would not require 2-year appropriations bills, neither would it preclude them. It also calls for an automatic continuing resolution, at previous-year levels, for any regular appropriations bill that fails to become law by October 1.

In addition, this Domenici-Johnston bill includes a number of technical changes regarding enforcement, changes explained in material that I will include in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. These changes would further simplify the process and strengthen the enforcement of congressional budget agreements.

As one last point, our legislation includes "Sense of the Congress" language urging passage of legislation for new Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets after 1993 in order to eliminate gradually the non-Social Security deficit.

Under current practice, the Social Security reserves represent only a promise that in some future year the Government will raise taxes or cut non-Social Security spending enough to repay what is owned to Social Security. That's not good enough. It doesn't sound like the security I want for my children.

Balancing the non-Social Security budget in the years ahead will help ensure that the Social Security reserves now building are available when today's younger workers retire. That is the prudent way to go.

Why "Sense of the Congress" language? Frankly, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has too many question marks to try to rewrite it immediately. A "Sense of the Congress' commitment would allow us to learn from the current process and see how the economy fares over the next year or two, then set in place the procedures and targets we need to require balance of the non-Social Security budget beginning in the early 1990s.

As I noted earlier, Mr. President, President Bush will submit his budget plan tomorrow. I commend him and his administration. They have done an outstanding job in moving quickly to prepare and submit their budget.

But that still leaves us with far less time than normal—a month less—in which to budget and appropriate money for fiscal year 1990. With those deadlines, maybe Congress should attempt to undertake the reforms we suggest on an informal basis in order to accelerate the process this year, so we can do the Nation's business on schedule.

Mr. President, it is time for Congress to improve and strengthen a sound process that already exists, the budget process. It certainly is not time to junk it. We believe we need a process that gives the President, the Congress, and—most importantly—the American people assurance that we will get the job done on time.

This bill will achieve that goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that some additional material explaining the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD, as well as an article that appeared in the Albuquerque Journal. Further, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill itself also be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 391

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT OF 1974.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever any provision of this Act is expressed as an amendment to a section or other provision, the reference shall be deemed to be made to a section or other provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE.—Title I is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

"ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

"SEC. 101. (a) There is established a joint committee of the Congress to be known as the Joint Committee on the Budget (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'joint committee').

"(b) The joint committee shall be composed of 9 members of the Senate as provided in subsection (c) and 9 members of the House of Representatives as provided in subsection (d).

"(c) Members of the joint committee from the Senate shall be as follows:

"(1) The Majority Leader and the Minority Leader, or their designees.

"(2) The chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Finance.

"(3) The chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

"(4)(A) The chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on the Budget, as constituted on the day before the date of enactment of this title.

"(B) If the chairman designated in subparagraph (A) resigns, one member selected by the Majority Leader.

"(C) If the ranking member designated in subparagraph (A) resigns, one member selected by the Minority Leader.

"(5) One additional member selected by the Majority Leader.

"(d) Members of the joint committee from the House of Representatives shall be appointed as follows:

"(1) The Speaker and the Minority Leader, or their designees.

"(2) The chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

"(3) The chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

"(4)(A) The chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on the Budget, as constituted on the day before the date of enactment of this title.

"(B) If the chairman designated in subparagraph (A) resigns, one member selected by the Speaker.

"(C) If the ranking member designated in subparagraph (A) resigns, one member selected by the Minority Leader.

"(5) One additional member selected by the Speaker.

"(e)(1) A majority of the members of the joint committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but the joint committee may fix a lesser number as a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony.

"(2) Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the function of the joint committee and shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.

"(3) The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among the members designated pursuant to paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (c) and paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (d) at the beginning of each Congress. The vice chairman shall act in the place of the chairman in the absence of the chairman. The chairmanship shall alternate between the Senate and House of Representatives with each Congress. The chairman of the joint committee shall be selected by the Members from that House entitled to the chairmanship. The vice chairman shall be chosen by the members from the House other than that of the chairman.

"(4) No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the joint committee unless a majority of the members designated pursuant to subsection (c) and a majority of the members designated pursuant to subsection (d) assent.

"(f)(1) There shall be referred to the joint committee all joint resolutions on the budget (as defined in section 3(a)(4) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) and all other matters required to be referred to that committee under titles III and IV of that Act, and messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating thereto.

"(2) The joint committee shall have the duty—

"(A) to report the matters required to be reported by it under titles III and IV of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974;

"(B) to make continuing studies of the effect on budget outlays of relevant existing and proposed legislation and to report the results of such studies to the Congress on a recurring basis;

"(C) to request and evaluate continuing studies of tax expenditures, to devise methods of coordinating tax expenditures, policies, and programs with direct budget outlays, and to report the results of such studies to the Congress on a recurring basis;

"(D) to review, on a continuing basis, the conduct by the Congressional Budget Office of its functions and duties; and

"(E) to function as the committee of conference on matters required to be reported by it under titles III and IV of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

"POWERS OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE

"SEC. 102. (a) The joint committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized in its discretion (1) to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, (2) to make expenditures from funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (d), (3) to employ personnel, (4) to hold hearings, (5) to sit and act at any time or place during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate or the House of Representatives, (6) to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of correspondence, books, papers, and documents, (7) to take depositions and other testimony, (8) to procure the services of individual consultants or organizations thereof, in accordance with the provisions of section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and (9) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

"(b) The chairman of the joint committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

"(c) Subpenas authorized by the joint committee may be issued over the signature of the chairman, the vice chairman, or any member of the joint committee designated by the chairman, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman or any member signing the subpena.

"(d) To enable the joint committee to exercise its powers, functions, and duties under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by striking title I and inserting the following:

"TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

"Sec. 101. Establishment of Joint Committee.

"Sec. 102. Powers of Joint Committee.".

(c) STANDING RULES OF THE SENATE.—Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended—

(1) in paragraph 1, by striking subparagraph (e) and redesignating the succeeding subparagraphs accordingly;

(2) in paragraph 3(a) by striking the item relating to the Committee on the Budget; and

(3) in paragraph 3(c) by inserting after the item for "Indian Affairs" the following: "Joint Committee on the Budget .....9".

(d) AMENDMENTS IMPLEMENTING THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET.—(1) Section 201(a)(2) is amended by striking "Committees on the Budget of the House and the Senate" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget".

(2) Section 202(a) is amended by—

(A) striking "Assistance to Budget Committees" and inserting "Assistance to Joint Committee on the Budget";

(B) striking "Committees on the Budget of both Houses" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget";

(C) striking "such committees" both places it appears and inserting "the Committee"; and

(D) striking "their jurisdictions" and inserting "its jurisdiction".

(3) Section 202(d) is amended by striking "Committee on the Budget of either House" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget".

(4) Section 202(f) is amended by—

(A) striking "Budget Committees" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget"; and

(B) striking in paragraphs (1) and (2) "Committees on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate" both places it appears and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget".

(5) Section 301 is amended by striking subsections (c) and (h) and redesignating the remaining subsections accordingly.

(6) Section 301(d) is amended—

(A) by striking "shall submit to the Committee on the Budget of the House";

(B) by striking "Committee on the Budget of the Senate" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget";

(C) by striking "Committees on the Budget of both Houses" both places it appears and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget"; and

(D) by striking "Committee on the Budget of its House" and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget".

(7) Section 301(e) is amended by striking "Committee on the Budget of each House" both places it appears and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget".

(8) Section 302(g) is amended by—

(A) striking "Budget Committees" in the caption and inserting "Joint Committee on the Budget"; and

(B) striking beginning with "on" through the period and inserting "in each House on the basis of estimates made by the chairman or vice chairman for the Joint Committee on the Budget from such House.".

(a) ALLOCATION OF TOTALS.—The joint explanatory statement accompanying a conference report on a joint resolution on the budget shall include an estimated allocation of the appropriate levels of budget outlays, new budget authority, and new credit authority by major functional categories for each fiscal year in the biennium among each committee of each House which has jurisdiction over laws, bills and resolutions providing such new budget authority, or such credit authority.

"(b) REPORTS BY COMMITTEES.—As soon as practicable after a joint resolution on the budget for a biennium is agreed to the Committee on Appropriations of each House shall, after consulting with the Committee on Appropriations of the other House—

"(1) subdivide among its subcommittees the allocation of budget outlays, new budget authority, and new credit authority by major functional categories allocated to it in the joint explanatory statement accompanying the conference report on such joint resolution; and

"(2) further subdivide the amount with respect to each such subcommittee between controllable amounts and all other amounts.

"(c) POINT OF ORDER.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or resolution, or amendment thereto, providing—

"(1) new budget authority for a fiscal year;

"(2) new spending authority as described in section 401(c)(2) for a fiscal year; or

"(3) new credit authority for fiscal year;

within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations of either House which has received an appropriate allocation of such authority pursuant to subsection (a) for such fiscal year, unless and until such committee makes the allocation or subdivisions required by subsection (b), in connection with the most recently agreed to joint resolution on the budget for such fiscal year.

"(d) SUBSEQUENT JOINT RESOLUTIONS.—In the case of a joint resolution on the budget for a biennium referred to in section 304, the allocations under subsection (a) and the subdivisions under subsection (b) shall be required only to the extent necessary to take into account revisions made in the most recently agreed to joint resolution on the budget.

"(e) ALTERATION OF ALLOCATIONS.—At any time after the Committee on Appropriations of either House reports the allocations required to be made under subsection (b), such committee may report to its House an alteration of such allocations. Any alteration of such allocations must be consistent with any actions already taken by its House on legislation within the committee's jurisdiction.

"(f) LEGISLATION SUBJECT TO POINT OF ORDER.—At any time after the Congress has completed action on the joint resolution on the budget for a biennium, it shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution (including a conference report thereon), or any amendment to a bill or resolution, that provides for budget outlays or new budget authority in excess of the appropriate allocation of such outlays or authority by major functional category reported under subsection (a) in connection with such joint resolution.

"(g) DETERMINATIONS BY JOINT BUDGET COMMITTEE.—For purposes of this section, the levels of new budget authority, spending authority as described in section 401(c)(2), outlays, and new credit authority for a fiscal year shall be determined in each House on the basis of estimates made by the chairman or vice chairman for the Joint Committee on the Budget from such House.".

"(2) No report shall be required if the Congress has adopted a joint resolution on the budget before May 1.

"(b) AUTOMATIC BUDGET RESOLUTION.—

"(1) If on any May 15 of each odd numbered year, the Congress has not yet adopted a joint budget resolution pursuant to section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act for the biennium beginning October 1 of that year, the Congress shall be deemed for all purposes to have adopted a joint budget resolution for the biennium as described in this section.

"(2) The joint resolution shall have the following characteristics:

"(A) The amount of the deficit for each fiscal year shall equal the maximum deficit amount specified in section 3(7) of the Congressional Budget Act for the appropriate fiscal years.

"(B) The levels of Federal revenues for each fiscal year shall equal the current law estimate of total revenues set forth in the budget submitted by the President pursuant to subsection (a) of section 1105, United States Code.

"(C) The levels of total budget outlays for each fiscal year shall equal the difference between revenues and the deficit as required by this section.

"(D) Other levels and amounts in the budget resolution shall—

"(i) equal those that the Director of the Congressional Budget Office sets forth in his report pursuant to this section;

"(ii) be consistent with amounts of the deficits and the levels of Federal revenues required by this section; and

"(iii) display the effects by major functional category as calculated by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office of reductions in outlays that would be required by part C of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 if the Director of the Congressional Budget Office had prepared the report of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget pursuant to section 251(a)(2)(B) of that Act using the levels of Federal revenues required by this section.

"(3) The chairman and vice chairman of the Joint Committee on the Budget shall submit for the record in their respective Houses a statement of the allocation required by section 302(a) consistent with the joint resolution.".

(b) The table of contents for the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end of title III the following new item:

"Sec. 312. Automatic budget resolution.",

(c) CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.—Section 305 is amended by—

(1) striking subsection (d); and

(2) redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

SEC. 7. CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AMENDMENT TO TITLE 31.—(1) Chapter 13 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1310 the following new section:

"§ 1311. Continuing appropriations

"(a) Except as provided in paragraph (2), if any of the regular appropriation bills for a fiscal year does not become law before the beginning of such fiscal year, there are hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of applicable corporate or other revenues, receipts, and funds, such sums as may be necessary to continue any project or activity, provided for in a regular appropriation Act that has become effective for the preceding fiscal year, at a rate of operations not in excess of the rate of operations provided for such project or activity for such preceding fiscal year in such Act.

"(b) Amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) with respect to a fiscal year shall be available for the period beginning with the first day of such period and ending with the earlier of—

"(1) the day after the first date on which the regular appropriation bill for the program or activity funded under subsection (a) of this section has become law; or

"(2) the last day of such fiscal year.

"(c) For purposes of this section, 'regular appropriation bill' has the meaning given such term in section 307 of the Congressional Budget Act (2 U.S.C. 638).".

(2) The analysis of chapter 13 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1310 the following new item:

"1311. Continuing appropriations.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO THE BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985.—Section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(a)(6)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "For purposes of subparagraph (B), continuing appropriations made pursuant to section 1311 of title 31, United States Code, shall be treated as continuing appropriations for an entire fiscal year.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by this section shall apply to fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1991.

(2) For purposes of determining the application of section 1311 of title 31, United States Code, to the biennium beginning October 1, 1991, any project or activity provided for in a joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1990, shall be treated as having been provided for in a regular appropriation Act.

(3) For purposes of determining the rate of operations for a project or activity under section 1311 of title 31, United States Code, for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1991, the rate of operations for such project or activity in such fiscal year shall equal the rate provided for such project or activity in a regular appropriation Act for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1990 or a joint resolution making continuing appropriations for such fiscal year.

SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS SUPPORTING A UNIFIED BALANCED BUDGET NOT INCLUDING SOCIAL SECURITY.

It is the sense of the Congress that legislation should be enacted before October 1, 1993, establishing fiscal targets beyond those mandated by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. The goal of such legislation should be to eliminate, over a period of years, the deficit in that portion of the Federal budget which does not include social security and to produce a unified budget surplus.

DOMENICI-JOHNSTON CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET REFORM ACT OF 1989—EXPLANATION

1. JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

a. Replace the Senate and House Budget Committees with a Joint Committee on the Budget.

b. The Joint Committee would have the nine members from each House—5 from the majority and 4 from the minority. The 18 members of the Joint Committee would include the following:

(1) the Majority and Minority Leader of the Senate or their designees;

(2) the Speaker and Minority Leader of the House or their designees;

(3) the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees;

(4) the Chairman and Ranking Members of the Finance and Ways and Means Committee; and

(5) six open seats to be filled as follows:

(a) the current Chairmen and Ranking Members of Senate and House Budget Committees, with vacancies to be filled by Majority or Minority Leader, as appropriate; and

(b) one additional member to be appointed by the Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

c. The Chairman and Vice Chairman would be designated from the open seats, one representing each House. The Chairmanship of the Joint Committee would rotate between the Senate and House with each Congress.

d. The Joint Committee would assume all of the duties and responsibilities of the current Budget Committees.

e. The Chairman and Vice Chairman would be responsible for scoring legislation in their respective Houses.

2. BUDGET RESOLUTION

a. Reformulate as a two-year resolution, with planning totals for subsequent two years.

b. Convert to joint resolution, requiring Presidential signature.

c. Replace current function totals with the following:

(1) defense discretionary;

(2) defense entitlement and mandatory;

(3) domestic discretionary;

(4) domestic entitlement and mandatory;

(5) international affairs discretionary;

(6) international affairs entitlement and mandatory;

(7) offsetting receipts; and

(8) net interest.

d. Continue to include revenue totals and deficit projections, which would have to meet Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets for both the first and second years.

e. Committees would receive allocations by the major functional categories described above. This means committees would receive more than one allocation (e.g. defense discretionary, domestic discretionary, domestic entitlements and mandatory). These would replace the current 302(a) allocations.

f. Change reconciliation instructions to 4 years.

g. Provide that if Congress has not completed action on the budget resolution by May 15:

(1) the budget resolution will be deemed to be adopted at the GRH baseline level, reduced as if by sequester to meet the deficit targets and that

(2) these totals would govern all spending legislation until Congress adopted a budget resolution.

h. Provide for (but do not require) a revised budget resolution at the beginning of year 2.

3. APPROPRIATIONS

a. Maintain one-year appropriations, but do not preclude two-year bills.

b. Provide for an automatic continuing resolution at previous year's level if any regular appropriation bill has not been enacted by October 1.

4. ENFORCEMENT

a. Amend Section 302(f) of the Budget Act to make 302(a) totals binding on committees for the two years covered by the budget resolution.

b. Drop 302(b) allocations for all but the Appropriations Committee.

c. Maintain 302(c) point of order requiring Appropriations to file a 302(b) allocation.

d. Use 302(b) allocations only for purposes of 302(a) scoring—i.e. subcommittee total assumed to be at 302(b) level until bill is passed by Senate or House. Drop requirement in Section 302(f) which makes 302(b) allocations binding.

e. Revise Section 311 to enforce budget resolution totals (BA, outlays, revenues) for two years.

f. Amend Section 303 to provide that it is not in order to consider legislation which would cause the level of entitlement and mandatory spending to be exceeded for the two planning years covered by the resolution.

5. GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS TARGETS

a. Provide that it is the sense of the Congress that legislation should be enacted before October 1, 1993 to eliminate the deficit in that portion on the budget which does not include social security.

6. PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

a. Require the President to submit 2-year budget 15 days after the first day of the first session.

b. Require the President to submit budget revisions 15 days after the first day of the second session.

GERALD R. FORD,

Washington, DC, February 5, 1989.

Senator PETE V. DOMENICI,

Senator J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,

Senate Budget Committee,

U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS DOMENICI AND JOHNSTON: I am greatly pleased to learn of your proposal for reforming the Federal Budget process. I support your proposal. In my judgment, it is a significant, constructive and essential move toward the refinement and simplification of this vital government function. Legislative steps such as you propose must immediately be taken. Further delay invites more fiscal problems in the future.

Following 25 years in the House of Representatives, dealing with annual appropriations, I changed locations, as you know, and experienced the handicaps of initiating Presidential fiscal policy under the Budget and Reform Act of 1974. Its new procedures were not enough to provide solutions to our nation's fiscal problems. The new procedures did not give Congress adequate tools to balance the federal budget. Nor did the 1974 Act equip an Administration with processes to cope with unprecedented fiscal challenges. Instead, the additional committees and the added steps in the Congressional budget process complicated relations between the President and the Congress.

Also, the 1974 Act made room for competitive argument on the Hill between Committees over jurisdiction and seniority. It produced a stretched out, time consuming budget process. Regrettably, the Act of 1974, although well intended, did not, in itself, enable those in authority to produce an annual comprehensive balanced budget.

Based on my service in the Congress and the White House, I recognize and emphasize a complex budget procedure does not guarantee a sound project. Those who govern in the Executive and Legislative branches of government must give the highest priority to reasoned, responsible budget decisions in authorizations, appropriations and in the overall budget process or little will change. However, as an important step toward financial leadership and responsibility, an improved and cleaned up budget process is badly needed as soon as possible.

I strong endorse your efforts to achieve the required improvement. I wish you the very best.

Sincerely,

GERALD R. FORD.

[From the Albuquerque (NM) Journal, Jan. 16, 1989]

CONGRESS MUST STRENGTHEN THE BUDGET PROCESS, NOT JUNK IT

(By Pete V. Domenici and J. Bennett Johnston)

WASHINGTON.—America will soon swear in a new president and a new budget director. Now that the 101st Congress has convened, we have new chairmen heading the two congressional budget committees, to be followed soon by a new director of the Congressional Budget Office.

It's time we also had a new budget process.

We need that new process to streamline the way Congress allocates tax dollars. It's needed to keep America's prosperity humming, not mired in protracted political infighting.

We suggest six changes, ones we will propose in legislation. Between us, we have been a part of the Senate's legislative and budget process for 32 years. From that experience we are convinced these six changes will greatly improve the way Congress spends your tax dollars.

First, we need to fold the two existing budget committees into a single joint budget committee that includes the leadership of both the House of Representatives and the Senate, plus the current chairmen and ranking Republicans of the Appropriations, Budget, Finance, and Ways and Means committees. It would be a committee with—and this is key—leadership clout.

Second, the president must become more involved in the budget decisions. That can be accomplished by making the budget resolution the kind of resolution that requires the president's signature. That way, the "budget" would carry the force of law, not simply serve as a congressional "blueprint."

Third, the new joint committee should produce two-year budgets at the beginning of each Congress. President Reagan endorsed the multi-year approach in his final budget. President Bush will concur. The old and new chairmen of the House Budget Committee have supported two-year budgets. Such budgets would include mandatory targets for three general categories of spending: domestic, defense, and international affairs. It has proved too easy in the past to siphon money promised to defense and international affairs in the budget into domestic spending later in the annual cycle.

Next, what if Congress fails to adopt a joint budget resolution and slips back into business as usual? We suggest a simple alternative: an "automatic" budget that would take effect on May 15, setting the spending lid at a level consistent with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

Fifth, we need to strengthen enforcement of a two-year budget, however adopted. Different sets of rules now apply in the House, the Senate and at the Office of Management and Budget over how to "score" legislation. These current rules not only confuse, but permit manipulation to circumvent a budget agreement.

Finally, we should add new, tighter Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets beyond 1993, the year America is supposed to attain balance in the entire budget. It is well known that the Social Security Trust Fund is projected to run a surplus of around $100 billion in 1993. So even when we reach overall "balance" that year, we'll still run a deficit of $100 billion in non-Social Security spending. We need "surplus targets" beginning in 1994 to eliminate gradually the non-Social Security deficit.

It was 1974 when Congress approved a "new" budget process. Since then, it has received lots of criticism, both from inside and outside Congress.

But in our haste to criticize that process, we must not forget what preceded it. Does anyone really want to return to the days when neither the Congress nor the White House could track spending until long after the laws were adopted? We hope not.

President Reagan has called all of this a "magic show" and a "failure." But he, too, used the process to achieve some of his early successes redirecting federal spending priorities.

It's time for Congress to strengthen the budget process, not junk it. It is time we changed the way Congress budgets the dollars given us by the American taxpayers and create a process that the president, Congress, and—most importantly—the American people can really count on.

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, in introducing legislation to reform the budget process.

This bill is not a panacea for endless deficits. It also will not make any easier the tough decisions we must make about priorities in spending programs and revenues.

What it will do is help provide a framework for more orderly, more certain and more focused decisions.

I don't advocate eliminating the Budget Act or the budget process, Mr. President. In fact, I believe that the Budget Act has been very useful in many ways. It has forced us to focus on budget totals and the impact which discrete legislative actions have on such totals. This alone is no small accomplishment.

Since 1974, however, the changes we have made in the Budget Act and the inherent weaknesses in it have resulted in a labyrinthine process from presentation of budget estimates by the President in January until enactment of a budget months later. We have not had an orderly process dominated by a series of deliberate decisions which flow from one another or which adhere to a reasonable timetable. Only twice since the Budget Act came into play have all 13 appropriations bills been cleared by the Congress prior to the beginning of the new fiscal year. Even when they have cleared, until 1988 such clearances came so late, sort of short term, a special continuing resolution has been required to prevent the Federal Government from shutting its doors.

We have not had a process which encourages advance planning and sets a consistent direction early on for national policy. And we have not truly remedied the fragmented process by which the budget is considered, which makes it exceedingly difficult for Congress to either set overall budget policy or establish and maintain budget priorities.

This fragmentation has led to frustration by many Members of this body, frustration which in part is driven by the number of duplicative votes we take on priorities throughout the year, voting on the same issues on the budget resolution, the appropriations legislation, and authorizing legislation, often with inconsistent results.

What we are trying to do in this legislation is restore some order, reduce fragmentation and the duplication and overlap which result, and bring some certainty to budgeting so that the Congress, the President, and the American people will all have a budget process they can count on.

First, we try to bring in early on those actors who must be part of the decisions we make to set directions if those directions are to be maintained. We therefore create a joint committee composed of representatives from the leadership and key members of the spending and tax committees, and we make the President a part of the process by converting the existing concurrent resolution to a joint resolution.,

These changes will help alleviate two key problems we have faced. In the past those ordered to comply with reconciliation instructions developed by the Budget Committees have often tended to resist these instructions, or use them as vehicles for new programs, not reductions. Bringing those who must deliver in to the early decisions will help cure this. Second, the administration has not participated in the process and no agreement on priorities has been forthcoming until a crisis atmosphere hits with the beginning of the new fiscal year. A last minute, late continuing resolution has become the vehicle for reaching a consensus and we often become so mired down in extraneous details that we lose sight of the overall direction we should be taking. And if we in the Congress become confused, imagine the confused state of the American people about policy directions. Instead of focusing debate clearly on the major issues, the Congress and the President often have a debating match focused on blame, on small projects which none of us have spent much time or thought on, and the policy debate is thus lost in a constant barrage of minutiae.

Second we try to build in incentives for timely consideration of budget issues to provide a framework for thoughtful debate. Most important, we have tried to create a drop-dead date for action on the budget resolution. Our legislation provides a draconian penalty if no resolution is adopted by May 15. We provide for an automatic resolution set at Gramm-Rudman-Hollings totals to go into effect, allowing the Appropriations Committees to move forward at these reduced rates and put forth in concrete terms the consequences of continued stalemate. In effect this is what can happen right now. The difference is timing. By putting this into effect in May, rather than in late September, we allow time for thoughtful debate to work out a compromise while all the cards are still on the table; and we avoid the crisis atmosphere of imminent closings in which to have this debate. We also provide for an automatic CR, at prior-year levels, for any regular appropriations bill which fails to become law by October 1, to further protect against a crisis setting. Incentives will still be there to move forward, but we won't be facing midnight meltdowns as we move.

Third, we try to provide for more advance planning by requiring for budgeting on a 2-year basis. Many of our colleagues, particularly the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky, have argued forcefully and I believe convincingly for 2 year budgets to enable us to have time for needed oversight duties. I agree, and I think that the experience of the 2 year agreement reached in 1987 and under which we operated last year vindicates this view. We therefore require the President to submit a 2-year budget at the beginning of each Congress—with revisions the following year—and require the joint committee to prepare a 2-year resolution. Further, we remove Budget Act obstacles to, but do not require, 2 year appropriations bills.

We make other changes in enforcement and other areas as well, changes which have been addressed in detail in the dear colleague letter Senator DOMENICI and I circulated last week. We have not proposed a laundry list of every item either Senator DOMENICI or I believe should be changed, and we have not addressed some of the more far-reaching ideas that have been proposed before. Rather, what we are proposing is a refinement of the existing framework. At its heart our proposal is an attempt to make this framework work. I believe these and the changes I have tried to highlight above will strengthen the budget process, and more important focus the debate on key issues so that the President, the Congress, and the American people can follow and be part of the central debate.

I am extremely pleased that we have been able to bring forth this bipartisan proposal, and I believe it is a constructive effort to deal with the frustrations so many of us have felt over the last several years. I am also pleased to note that both former President Ford and former President

Carter have endorsed our approach. While we certainly do not encompass all the suggestions which either President Ford or President Carter would make, I am pleased that they too see it as a constructive vehicle for bridging the fragmented process we now have.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letters of endorsement from Presidents Carter and Ford be printed in full at the end of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1989.

TO SENATORS BENNETT JOHNSTON AND PETE DOMENICI: I strongly endorse your efforts to coordinate budgeting procedures in the Congress. The lack of cooperation during the last few years among the White House, the Budget Committees, Finance, Ways and Means, and Appropriations Committees in the House and Senate have prevented orderly consideration of our nation's fiscal policies.

Requiring early sharing of this responsibility by leaders in both houses of Congress, with acknowledgment by the President, would help to bring the enormous federal deficits under control and to permit better planning of long-range expenditures. This would also make it more likely that the President's budget will once again be considered seriously by the Congress.

The biennial budget proposal is also worthy of serious consideration. As you know, many states have long followed this procedure with annual modifications presented to legislatures by our Governors. I know from experience that this works well.

Best wishes for success in achieving these worthy goals.

Sincerely,

JIMMY CARTER.●

By Mr. COATS:

S. 392. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a refundable credit to parents for dependents under age 6, to provide child care assistance to low-income working parents, to provide incentives for employer-provided child care assistance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

PARENTAL CHOICES IN CHILD CARE ACT OF 1989

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, today I am introducing the "Parental Choices in Child Care Act of 1989." I do so because I believe that as Federal legislators we must do everything we can to provide parents with a wide range of choices concerning the care of their children. The legislation I am introducing addresses this concern by providing a refundable credit to parents with dependents under age 6 and by providing tax incentives for employer child care assistance.

In developing a Federal approach to child care I think it important that we keep certain basic principles in mind. First, we must remember that the child care needs of employed parents are diverse. One-half of the children under the age of 5 in America have mothers who are not employed, and fewer than 1 child in 3 has a mother employed full time.

A truly profamily Federal policy must maximize options available to parents and provide equal treatment of all types of child care available to families.

Mr. President, we need a policy which will provide relief to all families with young children, especially those families with low incomes. In my opinion, a sound Federal policy must rest on these major premises.

Last July, the National Governor's Association wrote to the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism expressing their concern about certain child care bills which limit—and even discriminate against a family that choose something other than institutionalized child care. They stated, "we believe that a national child care policy must support families in their primary role of nuturing and caring for children. It should enable parents to choose the most appropriate child care option—whether it is family, in-home, or center-based." I agree with the National Governor's Association. Parental choice is why I am introducing this legislation.

The bill I am introducing has three basic goals. First, to provide parents a greater range of choices with regard to care for their children. Second, to increase access of families with low and modest incomes to affordable, quality child care by providing a generous tax credit which will be available to more American families in low income brackets. And third, to encourage private employers to provide dependent care benefits to their employees.

The bill accomplishes these goals by creating a new refundable tax credit of up to $1,000 per child for individuals with dependents under age 6. The credit is designed to provide maximum relief to families who are most in need, those with incomes less than $25,000. The bill further provides a mechanism whereby employees may opt to receive a portion of the credit with every paycheck rather than wait until they file their annual income tax return.

This new refundable credit is available to parents without regard to their child care choice or their decision to have one spouse remain at home. Thus parental choice is protected and families who choose to have one spouse remain at home are not discriminated against, as they are under the existing dependent care credit.

Additionally, the bill makes certain reforms in the existing child care credit to target funds to those families in need. The bill reforms the existing credit to lower the age of an eligible child from 12 to 6 and provides that parents with incomes over $25,000 can no longer claim the credit. This was done in part to counter charges that the existing credit principally benefits those with moderate to upper level incomes.

Families with incomes below $25,000 would be able to choose between the larger of the existing credit—which is based on the amount spent for child care, and the new refundable credit—which is based on their earned income.

The bill also provides tax incentives for businesses to offer dependent care assistance—either by including child care in their employee's benefits package or by providing cash assistance or credits for offsite or at home care. This will encourage the private sector to help working families who need assistance but who may not qualify for Federal tax credits. Employees would not be taxed on this benefit and employers would be able to deduct it as an ordinary and necessary business expense.

Mr. President, as you can see the parental choices in child care act is very straightforward. It addresses the wide diversity in the kind of quality child care providers available in our society. It recognizes that child care is provided by relatives, by neighbors, by churches, by community day care centers, by private employers, by licensed public facilities, by nonprofit agencies, and by unlicensed providers. It protects a parent's right to choose the type of care provider that best meets the needs of their child and their family.

Mr. President, mothers of young children are often forced to take a job outside the home just to make the ends meet. They do not want to be forced to send their children to a designated child care center not to their liking. They don't want to see their hard earned savings used as taxes to subsidize a nationwide system of licensed, regulated child care centers. They do not want or need a Federal bureaucracy created to watch over their children. They would like some form of tax relief to help them make ends meet and provide for child care in or out of the home.

I believe this proposal offers a reasonable pro-family approach to a growing social problem. I don't claim this to be the solution to our nation's family crisis, but I do think it is an important beginning. Families need fairness. Families need choice. I urge my colleagues to suport this modest proposal to help families who really need our help. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 392

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Parental Choices in Child Care Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) there is an increasing demand for child care services in the United States as more women with young children enter the workforce;

(2) child care needs of employed parents are diverse, and the existing child care system reflects this diversity;

(3) according to the most recent data available, 68 percent of care for children under age 5 with employed mothers was provided either by a relative or by a nonrelative in another person's home, and that another 8 percent was provided by mothers during the hours of their employment;

(4) a pro-family Federal policy should—

(A) maximize options for parents in their choices for child care and provide equal treatment for all types of child care available to families, and

(B) not discriminate against families in which one parent remains at home to care for young children;

(5) low-income parents typically spend less on child care, but these expenditures represent a significantly greater proportion of their income;

(6) the current child and dependent care tax credit under section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 has proved to be of little benefit to low and middle income families and single parent families; and

(7) limited Federal resources should be targeted toward those families with the lowest incomes.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) provide parents a greater range of choices with regard to care for their children;

(2) increase access to families with low and modest incomes to affordable, quality child care by providing a tax credit which will be available to more American families in low income brackets; and

(3) encourage private employers to provide dependent care benefits to their employees.

TITLE I—TAX CREDIT FOR FAMILIES WITH YOUNG CHILDREN

SEC. 101. CREDIT FOR DEPENDENTS UNDER AGE 6.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating section 35 as section 36 and by inserting after section 34 the following new section:

"SEC. 35. DEPENDENTS UNDER AGE 6.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an individual who maintains a household which includes as a member 1 or more qualified dependents, there is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the earned income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for the taxable year shall not exceed the product of—

"(A) $1,000, multiplied by

"(B) the number of qualified dependents of the taxpayer.

"(2) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—The credit which would (but for this paragraph) be allowed by subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by 20 percent for each $1,000 by which the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $20,000.

"(3) NO CREDIT IF DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT ALLOWED.—No credit shall be allowed under this section for the taxable year if any credit is allowed under section 21 (relating to expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment) for such year.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—The term 'applicable percentage' means, for any taxable year, the sum of the rates under subsections (a) and (b) of section 3101 (relating to FICA tax on employees) for the calendar year ending with or within the taxable year.

"(2) QUALIFIED DEPENDENT.—The term 'qualified dependent' means any dependent of the taxpayer who is under the age of 6 and with respect to whom the taxpayer is entitled to a deduction under section 151(c).

"(3) EARNED INCOME.—The term 'earned income' has the meaning given such term by section 911(d)(2).

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 21(e) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(e) TAXABLE YEAR MUST BE FULL TAXABLE YEAR.—Except in the case of a taxable year closed by reason of the death of the taxpayer, no credit shall be allowable under this section in the case of a taxable year covering a period of less than 12 months.

"(f) AMOUNT OF CREDIT TO BE DETERMINED UNDER TABLES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the credit allowed by this section shall be determined under tables prescribed by the Secretary.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR TABLES.—The tables prescribed under paragraph (1) shall reflect the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) and shall have income brackets of not greater than $50 each—

"(A) for earned income between $0 and the amount of earned income at which the credit is phased down to the amount applicable under subsection (b)(1), and

"(B) for adjusted gross income between the dollar amount at which the phaseout begins under subsection (b)(2) and the amount of adjusted gross income at which the credit is phased out under subsection (b)(2).

"(g) COORDINATION WITH ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF CREDIT.—

"(1) RECAPTURE OF EXCESS ADVANCE PAYMENTS.—If any payment is made to the individual by an employer under section 3507A during any calendar year, then the tax imposed by this chapter for the individual's last taxable year beginning in such calendar year shall be increased by the aggregate amount of such payments.

"(2) RECONCILIATION OF PAYMENTS ADVANCED AND CREDIT ALLOWED.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit (other than the credit allowed by subsection (a)) allowable under this subpart.

"(h) REDUCTION OF CREDIT TO TAXPAYERS SUBJECT TO ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.—The credit allowed under this section for the taxable year shall be reduced by the amount of tax imposed by section 55 (relating to alternative minimum tax) with respect to such taxpayer for such taxable year."

(b) ADVANCE PAYMENT OF CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 25 of such Code is amended by inserting after section 3507 the following new section:

"SEC. 3507A. ADVANCE PAYMENT OF CREDIT FOR DEPENDENTS UNDER AGE 6.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, every employer making payment of wages to an employee with respect to whom a dependent tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect shall, at the time of paying such wages, make an additional payment to such employee equal to such employee's dependent tax credit advance amount.

"(b) DEPENDENT TAX CREDIT ELIGIBILITY CERTIFICATE.—For purposes of this title, a dependent tax credit eligibility certificate is a statement furnished by an employee to the employer which—

"(1) certifies that the employee will be eligible to receive the credit provided by section 35 for the taxable year,

"(2) certifies that the employee does not have a dependent tax credit eligibility certificate in effect for the calendar year with respect to the payment of wages by another employer, and

"(3) states whether or not the employee's spouse has a dependent tax credit eligibility certificate in effect.

For purposes of this section, a certificate shall be treated as being in effect with respect to a spouse if such a certificate will be in effect on the first status determination date following the date on which the employee furnished the statement in question.

"(c) DEPENDENT TAX CREDIT ADVANCE AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term 'dependent tax credit advance amount' means, with respect to any payroll period, the amount determined—

"(A) on the basis of the employee's wages from the employer for such period, and

"(B) in accordance with tables prescribed by the Secretary.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The dependent tax credit advance amount shall not exceed the sum of the following amounts for the payroll period:

"(A) the tax imposed by subtitle A (determined without regard to credits), plus

"(B) the tax imposed by section 3101 (relating to FICA tax on employees) on wages (as defined in section 3121(a)) received during such taxable year, plus

"(C) the tax imposed by section 1401 (relating to tax on self-employment income), plus

"(D) the amount deducted under section 218 of the Social Security Act from wages (as so defined) received during such taxable year which are equivalent to the tax imposed by section 3101."

"(3) ADVANCE AMOUNT TABLES.—The tables referred to in paragraph (1)(B)—

"(A) shall be similar in form to the tables prescribed under section 3402 and, to the maximum extent feasible, shall be coordinated with such tables,

"(B) shall take into account the limitation under paragraph (2),

"(C) if the employee is not married, or if no dependent tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 35 as if it were a credit of not more than the applicable percentage under section 35 of earned income not in excess of the amount of earned income which may be taken into account under section 35(a), and

"(D) if a dependent tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 35 as if it were a credit of not more than the applicable percentage under subsection (b) of section 35 of earned income not in excess of ½ of the amount of earned income which may be taken into account under such subsection.

"(d) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (d) and (e) of section 3507 shall apply for purposes of this section. Proper adjustments shall be made in the application of such rules under this section to take into account payments under section 3507."

(2) INFORMATION SHOWN ON W-2.—Subsection (a) of section 6051 of such Code (relating to receipts to employees) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (8), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting ", and" and by inserting after paragraph (9) the following new paragraph:

"(10) the total amount paid to the employee under section 3507A (relating to advance payment of dependent tax credit)."

(3) REQUIREMENT OF RETURN.—Subsection (a) of section 6012 of such Code (relating to persons required to make returns of income) is amended by inserting after paragraph (9) the following new paragraph:

"(10) Every individual who receives payments during the calendar year in which the taxable year begins under section 3507A (relating to advance payment of dependent tax credit)."

(4) CROSS REFERENCE.—Subsection (e) of section 6302 of such Code (relating to mode or time of collection) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) For treatment of dependent tax credit advance amount as payment of withholding and FICA taxes, see section 3507A(d)."

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table sections for subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 35. Dependents under age 6.

"Sec. 36. Overpayments of tax."

(2) The table sections for chapter 25 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3507 the following new item:

"Sec. 3507A. Advance payment of credit for dependents under age 6."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(2) The amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall apply to remuneration paid after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 102. CHANGES IN DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT.

(a) AGE RESTRICTION ON QUALIFYING INDIVIDUALS REDUCED.—Subparagraph (A) of section 21(b)(1) and subparagraph (B) of section 21(e)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualifying individual) are each amended by striking "the age of 13" and inserting "the age of 6".

(b) CREDIT NOT ALLOWED WHERE ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME EXCEEDS $25,000.—Subsection (a) of section 21 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) CREDIT NOT ALLOWED WHERE ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME EXCEEDS $25,000.—No credit shall be allowed under this section for any taxable year for which the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer exceeds $25,000."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

TITLE II—INCENTIVES FOR EMPLOYER PROVIDED CHILD CARE

SEC. 201. CREDIT FOR EMPLOYER EXPENDITURES FOR CERTAIN DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to business related credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 43. DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM CREDIT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 38, the amount of the dependent care assistance program credit determined under this section for the taxable year shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the qualified dependent care assistance program expenditures for such taxable year.

"(b) QUALIFIED DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM EXPENDITURES.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified dependent care assistance program expenditures' means the aggregate amount of expenditures paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year in providing for or contributing to a dependent care assistance program (within the meaning of section 129(d)).

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE.—The term 'dependent care assistance' means the payment of, or provision of, those services which if paid for by the employee would be considered employment-related expenses under section 21(b)(2) with respect to a qualifying individual (as defined under section 21(b)(1)(A)).

"(2) EMPLOYEE.—The term 'employee' includes an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1).

"(3) EMPLOYER.—An individual who owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business shall be treated as his own employer. A partnership shall be treated as the employer of each partner who is an employee within the meaning of paragraph (2).

"(d) SPECIAL AGGREGATION AND ALLOCATION RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) AGGREGATION OF EXPENDITURES.—

"(A) CONTROLLED GROUP OF CORPORATIONS.—In determining the amount of the credit under this section—

"(i) all members of the same controlled group of corporations shall be treated as a single taxpayer, and

"(ii) the credit (if any) allowable by this section to each such member shall be its proportionate share of the qualified employee assistance program expenditures giving rise to the credit.

"(B) COMMON CONTROL.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, in determining the amount of the credit under this section—

"(i) all trades or businesses (whether or not incorporated) which are under common control shall be treated as a single taxpayer, and

"(ii) the credit (if any) allowable by this section to each such trade or business shall be its proportionate share of the qualified employee assistance program expenditures giving rise to the credit.

The regulations prescribed under this subparagraph shall be based on principles similar to the principles which apply in the case of subparagraph (A).

"(2) ALLOCATIONS.—

"(A) PASS-THRU IN THE CASE OF ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsection (d) of section 52 shall apply.

"(B) ALLOCATION IN THE CASE OF PARTNERSHIPS.—In the case of partnerships, the credit shall be allocated among partners under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(3) CONTROLLED GROUP OF CORPORATIONS.—The term 'controlled group of corporations' has the same meaning given to such term by section 1563(a), except that—

"(A) 'more than 50 percent' shall be substituted for 'at least 80 percent' each place it appears in section 1563(a)(1), and

"(B) the determination shall be made without regard to subsections (a)(4) and (e)(3)(C) of section 1563.

"(e) NO DOUBLE BENEFIT.—No credit or deduction under any other provision of this chapter shall be allowed to a taxpayer for the taxable year for any expenditure with respect to which a credit is allowed under this section for such year.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 38(b) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking out "plus" at the end of paragraph (4),

(B) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5), and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "plus", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) the employee assistance program credit determined under section 43.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

S.J. Res. 56. Joint resolution designating April 23 through April 29, 1989, and the last week of April of each subsequent year as "National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL ORGAN AND TISSUE DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution to proclaim April 23 through April 29, 1989, as National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week. The joint resolution also designates the last full week of April of each subsequent year as such. I am pleased that many of my colleagues have joined as cosponsors to this legislation. I also would like to thank the staffs of these Senators for the prompt and positive response they gave my office in preparation of the resolution. Congressman SID MORRISON of Washington recently introduced companion legislation in the House of Representatives.

More than 2 years have passed since I found myself lying in a hospital bed in Georgetown University Medical Center. I'll never forget the apprehension I felt about the fact that the next morning I would go into surgery to donate a kidney to my then 26-year-old daughter, Susan Garn Horne. Sue had lost most of her renal function as a result of a long-term diabetic condition. As I look back, I was apprehensive that night because I was unsure about what the consequences of the surgery might be for me. Until then, I hadn't thought much about those consequences. Once I learned I was a good donor match for Sue, my only thoughts were, "She needs my kidney, I am going to give it to her and that is all there is to it."

In recognizing my own apprehension and fear, I realized the significant impact that the "National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week" can have. I believe too many people are either fearful of the prospects or ignorant about the process of freely donating an organ to someone in need. As a result, many people are dying, or at the very least continuing to suffer unnecessarily, every day because of a failure to obtain a needed organ for transplant.

I am sympathetic to the fear that exists among those who are eligible to be living, related donors. They can't help but wonder about the impact their donation might have on their own life, I did. However, I now know that the impact is minimal, if even noticeable. What I do not understand, however, is why anyone would be reluctant to authorize the donation of any of their vital organs or transplantable parts after they are dead. Of what use are those parts to them then? And what could they possibly have to fear?

That is why it is important for people to decide now whether, in the event of a future tragedy, they would consider being a donor, and letting their family know of their intentions. I am sure it is extremely upsetting to the loved ones of a deceased individual to have a medical professional ask if they would allow a particular organ or organs to be removed for transplantation purposes. This question could be avoided in many cases and a difficult situation could be made somewhat easier if the decision to be a potential donor has already been made.

I cannot help but believe that if people could understand the dire need for organ donors that now exists, enough of them would voluntarily sign donor authorization cards and get "donor" stamped on their driver's licenses, that there would be an adequate supply of organs for those in need. For example, if only 1 out of 4 brain-dead people in the Intermountain area authorized the donation of their organs, they would meet the transplant needs of the entire region. Only 1 out of 4.

People need to understand that they literally may give someone else the gift of life.

During my hospital stay, I was asked by a reporter how my donation of a kidney to my daughter compared to other so-called notable things I had done in my public and personal life. The answer was easy. There is simply no other thing I have ever done that has given me greater satisfaction, especially when I look at her today, and see what a significant difference receiving my kidney has made in her life. Donating a kidney to Sue was something I was able to do entirely alone, and it gave me immense personal satisfaction to be able to do that. It gave me an opportunity to express in actions, even beyond words, my love for my daughter and for all my children, since I would have done the same thing for any one of them, if I were a suitable donor.

What began as a personal struggle for Sue and for me has become a positive crusade. What we viewed as the gift of a kidney, we now see as a gift of life and renewed vitality, and it is something we simply must continue to share with others.

In introducing similar joint resolutions the past 2 years, I have challenged each Senator in this body to think carefully about his or her willingness to donate a life-saving organ and a to sign a donor card. Today I once again pose that challenge.

By reviewing our personal feelings about organ donation, we will become more aware of the potential to improve and save others lives. I am hopeful that as National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week approaches, we will be leaders in spreading the word about the gift of life.●

S.J. Res. 57. Joint resolution to establish a national policy on permanent papers; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

NATIONAL POLICY ON PERMANENT PAPERS

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am introducing today a Senate joint resolution to establish a national policy to encourage the publication on acid free permanent paper of books, records, and publications of enduring value. Joining me as original cosponsors of the resolution are Senators MOYNIHAN, MURKOWSKI, SARBANES, GRASSLEY, MCCAIN, DECONCINI, FORD, KENNEDY, EXON, SANFORD, HEFLIN, LIEBERMAN, STEVENS, SIMON, DODD, WARNER, CHAFEE, HATCH, AND GRAHAM.

The joint resolution, which is virtually identical to Senate Joint Resolution 394 which I introduced in the 100th Congress, reflects a growing concern about the impending loss of an enormous part of our historical, cultural, and scientific records and literature because of the self-destruction of the acidic papers on which books and other publications have been printed since the mid-19th century.

As chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library in the 100th Congress, I had the opportunity to review both the magnitude of this problem as well as the great efforts already being made, at considerable public expense, to limit the self-destruction. The Library of Congress, for example, is pioneering in the development of technology for the mass deacidification of its collections through the use of diethylzinc [DEZ]. The present goal is to begin treatment of all the Library's new acquisitions by 1991 and to start retrospective treatment at the same time of existing publications in American history.

The National Archives and Records Administration and the National Library of Medicine are also making vigorous efforts to deal with the problem, either through deacidification or through microfilming books and publications which are already too brittle to save.

Congress has already appropriated over $100 million in support of these efforts, and we should be prepared to provide more. At stake is nothing less than the preservation of the whole record and literary output of the most remarkable century of human experience to date.

However, it makes little sense to continue the remedy without attempting to curb the basic problem. And that is what the joint resolution I am offering today is designed to do. It establishes a national policy to promote and encourage the printing of books and other publications of enduring value on nonacidic paper. In a figurative sense, it locks the library door against prospective invasion by publications printed on acidic paper.

The joint resolution declares it to be a policy of the United States that all Federal records, books, and publications of enduring value be produced on acid free permanent paper. In furtherance of that objective, the joint resolution urgently recommends that Federal agencies require the use of such paper for publications of enduring value, and the use of archival quality papers for permanently valuable Federal records.

The joint resolution urges similar action in the private sector. It urgently recommends that American publishers voluntarily adhere to the American National Standard for permanent paper in printing publications of enduring value, and that the use of such paper be noted in the publication, in advertisements and in standard bibliographic listings.

Finally, the joint resolution would urge the compilation of reliable statistics on the production of acid free permanent paper and on the volume required to meet the objectives of the national policy established by the bill. And it would direct the Librarian of Congress and the Archivist of the United States, together with the directors of the national libraries of medicine and agriculture, to monitor progress in implementing the national policy and report annually to Congress.

It is worth noting, Mr. President, that some progress is already being made toward implementing the national policy. The recent excellent study of Book Preservation Technologies prepared by the Office of Technology Assessment estimated that 15 to 25 percent of the books currently being published in the United States are printed on acid free paper.

The Library of Congress and many university presses are among those already publishing on acid free papers, as is the National Historical Publications and Records Commission. As a former member of the commission, I am proud to have had a role in establishing its policy of publishing on permanent paper.

Fortunately, the technology exists to implement the national policy. More than 30 U.S. papermills are already producing nonacidic, alkaline papers, and there are major economic incentives for other mills now making only acid papers to convert, including potentially lowered manufacturing costs and substantially reduced environmental pollution.

Moreover, prices for acid-free, alkaline paper are comparable to those for acidic paper, according to a 1988 survey. The enactment of the national policy proposed in this resolution surely would stimulate an expansion of production of nonacidic papers and hopefully lead to increasingly competitive prices.

I particularly wish to emphasize that this resolution mandates no Government program, and should impose no significant costs on the Federal Government, assuming the accuracy of the economic estimates. If anything, the joint resolution could result in a net reduction in costs to the Government because it will have the effect of reducing the long-range costs of deacidification. Every book produced on acid free paper today reduces the total number of volumes requiring deacidification, and frees up preservation resources which can be used to attack the crumbling backlog of publications dating back to 1850.

Finally, I might just note that the basic problem which this resolution addresses is not limited to print media alone. Other kinds of historical records are deteriorating from a variety of causes that may require different public responses. I am advised in particular that thousands of feet of historical and archival films owned by the U.S. Government are in jeopardy and may properly be the subject of separate efforts comparable to that which we propose today with respect to acid paper.

I commend this joint resolution to the attention of the Senate, and I hope that it will receive the consideration which I believe it deserves in committee. We have the means at hand to prevent an indefinite proliferation of the acid paper problem and I only hope that it will not be said 100 years from now that we knew how to solve the problem but did nothing about it.

Mr. President, I ask that resolutions of the American Library Association and the Special Libraries Association in support of the resolution be printed in the RECORD, together with letters of support from the Association of Research Libraries, the Medical Library Association, and the libraries of the University of Michigan, Yale University, and D'Youville College of Buffalo, NY.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COUNCIL OF THE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON NATIONAL POLICY ON PERMANENT PAPERS

Whereas, a joint resolution to establish a national policy on permanent papers, S.J. Res. 394, was introduced in the Senate in October 1988 by Senator Claiborne Pell (D-RI), Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library and Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; and

Whereas, Senator Pell has announced his intention to reintroduce the resolution early in 1989, and similar legislation may be introduced in the House; and

Whereas, the American Library Association urged publishers and federal, state and local governments to use permanent paper for books and other publications of enduring value in a resolution passed by the ALA Council on January 13, 1988, (1987-88 CD #34); and

Whereas, the ALA resolution noted that about one-fourth of the books in research library collections have become so embrittled that pages will break or crumble with use, and that hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent to salvage brittle materials if they continue to be printed on the acidic paper in general use since about 1850; and

Whereas, extensive research conducted over the past several decades has demonstrated that alkaline papers have a significantly longer shelf life than acidic papers; and

Whereas, production of alkaline paper in the U.S. has increased steadily within the last two years, is expected to double over the next two years, and is priced competitively; and

Whereas, S.J. Res. 394 would resolve that it is the policy of the U.S. that federal publications of enduring value be produced on acid-free, permanent papers and would specifically: (1) recommend that federal agencies require use of permanent paper for publications of enduring value; (2) recommend that federal agencies require use of archival quality papers for permanently valuable federal records; (3) recommend that American publishers use permanemt papers for publications of enduring value, voluntarily comply with national standards, and note use of acid-free papers in publications and listings; (4) recommend that reliable statistics be produced on current and needed production of permament papers; (5) recommend that the State Department make known this national policy to foreign governments and international agencies; and (6) require that the Library of Congress, the National Archives and Records Administration, the National Library of Medicine, and the National Agricultural Library jointly monitor progress and report annually to Congress; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Library Association strongly support S.J. Res. 394, to establish a national policy on permanent papers, and its successor measures; and, be it further

Resolved, That the American Library Association express its appreciation to Senator Claiborne Pell, and offer support and assistance to Senator Pell and the chief sponsors of similar measures in the 101st Congress in establishing as national policy that federal records, books, and other publications of enduring value be produced on alkaline papers.

SPECIAL LIBRARIES ASSOCIATION BOARD OF DIRECTORS RESOLUTION SUPPORTING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL POLICY ON THE USE OF PERMANENT PAPERS

Whereas, there has been much loss of cultural, scientific and historical records due to the continued use of acidic paper; and

Whereas, Government publications, containing an enormous amount of valuable information and statistical data, are still being produced on self-destructive acidic paper; and

Whereas, Senator Claiborne Pell, of Rhode Island, introduced a joint resolution in the 100th Congress which called for the establishment of a national policy on permanent papers; and

Whereas, This joint resolution demonstrates that members of Congress have begun to recognize that by not utilizing currently available technologies our nation's books and other publications of enduring value could turn to dust; and

Whereas, The Special Libraries Association is an international professional association of more than 12,500 special librarians and information specialists; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Special Libraries Association commend Senator Pell and his staff for taking the lead in calling for such a national policy and urge him to reintroduce the joint resolution as expeditiously as possible in the 101st Congress, and, be it

Further resolved, That Congress approve the Joint Resolution and appropriate adequate funding so that plans for the implementation of such a national policy can take shape as our nation heads into the 1990's.

ASSOCIATION OF RESEARCH LIBRARIES,
Washington, DC, December 20, 1988.

Hon. CLAIBORNE PELL,
Russell Senate Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: This letter is to register the enthusiastic support of the Association of Research Libraries for your initiative to establish a national policy on permanent papers for the United States by introducing S.J. Res. 394 on October 11, 1988.

As you know, significant portions of distinctive research collections, representing the world's intellectual heritage, are at risk because the acidic paper they are printed on is deteriorating. There are a number of strategies to address this problem. ARL concludes, however, that the single most effective solution to this problem is to discontinue use of acidic paper for book production and use instead alkaline, durable paper. This eliminates the problem at its source. Publications produced on acid-free paper will last for centuries rather than decades. Use of alkaline paper in publishing will have a more direct impact on preserving knowledge than any other single effort.

Possibly the greatest barriers to the use of alkaline paper for publishing are lack of awareness about the problem of acidic paper and/or misperceptions about the availability and price of alkaline paper. The resolution you propose provides a visible platform for capturing the attention of publishers to this need and setting the record straight about the supply of alkaline paper.

ARL thanks you for your leadership in this area and looks forward to positive action on this legislation in the 101st Congress.

Sincerely,

DUANE E. WEBSTER,
Executive Director.

Senator CLAIBORNE PELL,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: I am writing on behalf of the Medical Library Association to register support for your initiative to establish a national policy on permanent papers for the United States by introducing S.J. Res. 394 on October 11, 1988. The Medical Library Association is a professional organization of 5000 individuals and institutions in the health sciences information field. MLA members serve society by developing new health information delivery systems, fostering educational and research programs for health sciences information professionals, and encouraging an enhanced public awareness of health care issues.

As you know, significant portions of distinctive collections, representing the world's intellectual heritage, are at risk because the acidic paper they are printed on is deteriorating. There are a number of strategies to address this problem. However, the single most effective solution to this problem is to discontinue use of acidic paper for book production and use instead alkaline, durable paper. This eliminates the problem at its source. Publications produced on acid-free paper will last for centuries rather than decades. Use of alkaline paper in publishing will have a more direct impact on preserving knowledge than any other single effort.

Possibly the greatest barriers to the use of alkaline paper for publishing are lack of awareness about the problem of acidic paper and/or misperceptions about the availability and price of alkaline paper. The resolution you propose provides a visible platform for capturing the attention of publishers to this need and setting the record straight about the supply of alkaline paper.

On behalf of the Medical Library Association, I would like to thank you for your leaderhsip in this area, and I look forwad to positive action on this resolution in the 101st Congress.

Sincerely,

Hon. CLAIRBORNE PELL,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: I recently read of your efforts to introduce legislation in support of a national policy on permanent papers, as described in S.J. Res. 394.

As a librarian responsible for coordinating a major preservation effort to save the contents of publications which have been printed during the past one-hundred years on acid-pulp paper, I write to encourage you to actively pursue this legislative effort to put in place an acid-free paper policy. This is something that cannot occur too rapidly.

Selected publishers have proven that it is very doable and that one of the major drawbacks appears to be the rate at which the paper manufacturers can convert their operations to producing acid-free papers. Legislation would encourage that development and bring us closer to the day when all significant publications are produced on acid-free paper, ensuring their availability for future generations of scholars and everyday readers.

I know from my origins in Rhode Island and following your efforts on behalf of libaries and books since then of your success on many fronts in support of similar efforts. I encourage you to proceed in the next legislative session with this initiative so that in the near future our publications will be printed on acid-free paper, removing the need for a major preservation effort in the Twenty-first Century and ensuring that publications will be available for generations to come.

Most Sincerely,

WILLIAM A. GOSLING,
Assistant Director for Technical Services.

YALE UNIVERSITY,
New Haven, CT, January 23, 1989.

Hon. CLAIRBORNE PELL,
335 Senate Russell Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: On behalf of Yale Library, I would like to express our appreciation of your efforts to establish a national policy on the use of permanent papers. The deterioration of the written record of our society has long been a concern of librarians and scholars and other informed citizens. We are very pleased that as a result of your interest, this critical issue is receiving increased attention in the federal government. We hope that your Senate colleagues will share your concern and co-sponsor your resolution on permanent papers.

Sincerely yours,

MILLICENT D. ABELL.

D'YOUVILLE COLLEGE,
Buffalo, NY, January 30, 1989.

Senator CLAIBORNE PELL,
Senate Russell Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: Thank you for sponsoring the Senate Joint Resolution 394 to establish a national policy that books of enduring value be published on acid-free paper. Hopefully, the concept of "enduring value" will be defined clearly so that publishers do not try to work around this legislation. Many of the materials published in the 60's and 70's especially items on women and African-Americans are now in very poor physical condition. The likelihood of these materials being re-issued is very slim. Even if they were re-issued, library budgets are not large enough to cover repurchasing these materials. Keep up the good work!

Sincerely,

MICHELE FARRELL,
Library Director.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a sponsor of this joint resolution to establish a national policy on permanent paper.

As we have increasingly come to understand, one of the most precious national resources we have is increasingly at great risk. Without dramatic and immediate preventive measures, countless volumes of inestimable historical and cultural value will be lost as their pages disintegrate. Across the country, nearly 80 million volumes have already become so brittle that they will crumble if used. At Harvard University alone, almost half of its collection of 11.5 million volumes will be in danger by the year 2020.

While we work to salvage the volumes already in danger, we should do all we can to avoid the problem in the future by using acid-free permanent paper in as many publications as possible.

I commend Senator PELL for his leadership on this issue. Increased national awareness of the problem is an essential part of the solution. Our documentary and literary heritage is at stake. Immediate action is warranted. I hope that the Senate will move quickly to pass this joint resolution.

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. GORE, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. GORTON, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. WILSON, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. COATS):

S.J. Res. 58. Joint resolution to designate May 17, 1989, as "High School Reserve Officer Training Corps Recognition Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HIGH SCHOOL RESERVE OFFICER TRAINING CORPS RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution designating May 17, 1989, as "High School Reserve Officer Training Corps Recognition Day.

The high school division of the Reserve Officer Training Corps was first established when President Woodrow Wilson signed the National Defense Act on June 3, 1916.

Since then this program, commonly referred to as the Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps [JROTC], has grown to approximately 1,500 units, involving nearly 250,000 young cadets.

Not only are these units located throughout the United States, but Department of Defense Dependent Schools in the Caribbean, the Pacific, Asia, and Europe offer this worthwhile program as a part of their curriculum as well.

The JROTC program offers hundreds of thousands of young men and women a valuable learning experience. Young high school students are given the opportunity to participate in vocational or academic JROTC programs while earning credit toward graduation.

The program enables those involved to serve their schools and communities, while learning the importance of citizenship, leadership, teamwork, academic excellence, physical fitness, and self-confidence.

In my own State of New Mexico, there are 18 JROTC programs. Many communities that do not already have established units have expressed interest in incorporating the JROTC program into their local high school curriculum.

New Mexico certainly recognizes the value of this program to the educational system as whole. One of the most exhaustive studies on the benefits of the JROTC program was conducted by the public school system in Albuquerque, NM.

The results are not surprising.

JROTC cadets were found to have higher graduation rates and fewer disciplinary problems. Furthermore, the study concluded that the family-type atmosphere of the JROTC provides individualized attention, tutoring, and counseling, while the awards and promotion systems help encourage academic progress.

Mr. President, the Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps program opens many doors for America's young citizens. Nearly a quarter of a million dedicated high school students are at the heart of the program's success, and their hard work and achievements—as well as those of instructors and past JROTC participants—deserve our full support and encouragement.

I would like to thank those Senators who have signed as original cosponsors of this resolution, and I urge the rest of my colleagues to join us in wholehearted support of this worthwhile effort to designate May 17, 1989, as "High School Reserve Officer Training Corps Recognition Day."

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 58

Whereas in 1916 the Congress authorized the establishment of high school divisions of the Reserve Officer's Training Corps;

Whereas hundreds of high schools across the United States, and United States operated high schools abroad, offer High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps programs of the various military services;

Whereas High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps programs have provided a valuable and unique learning opportunity for hundreds of thousands of high school students for almost four generations;

Whereas the programs of instruction for High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps units concentrate on the development of desirable traits in its participants, such as good citizenship, leadership, teamwork, individual initiative, and pride and respect for the United States, its flag, laws, and Constitution;

Whereas the High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps programs, being highly successful in developing desirable traits in its participants, have made a valuable contribution to the United States and to the education of the youth of our Nation;

Whereas it is appropriate to acknowledge and honor the contributions of the High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps, and its cadets and instructors, both past and present;

Whereas May 17, 1989, marks the seventy-third anniversary of the authorization of the High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 17, 1989, is hereby designated as "High School Reserve Officer's Training Corps Recognition Day". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

By Mr. WIRTH (for himself, and Mr. GARN);

S.J. Res. 59. Joint resolution designating January 19, 1990, as "National Skiing Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL SKIING DAY

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing a Senate joint resolution to designate Friday, January 19, 1990, as "National Skiing Day." I am especially pleased to be joined once again by my colleague from Utah, Senator GARN, as the lead cosponsor. Senator GARN represents another great skiing State and shares my love of skiing.

This resolution is especially timely, as Vail, CO is hosting the World Alpine Ski Championships from January 29 to February 12, 1989. The 1989 World Alpine Championships mark the second time in 40 years that the U.S. has served as the host to this prestigious international event. Both casual and avid ski fans during the past week have been witness to spectacular exhibitions of ability and execution as records have been broken and medals won.

I'm proud to say that my home State of Colorado boasts several of the world's best ski areas. Colorado offers fantastic skiing opportunities for the amateur as well as hosting other international events such as the freestyle championships and one leg of both the men's and women's World Cup races.

Of course, skiing is not confined to the beautiful mountains of Colorado. Skiing is enjoyed by men and women, adults and children all across the Nation. More than 15 million Americans, from literally every State, are downhill skiers. Today, there are more than 600 ski areas in 40 States across the country, including 200 areas on public lands managed by the U.S. Forest Service. Just last year, the country's downhill ski areas recorded 54 million skier visits. Another 6 million Americans enjoy cross-country, or Nordic, skiing on trails and forests throughout the Nation.

These statistics show that Americans have enthusiastically embraced skiing as an outdoor sport. Beyond the physical challenges and rewards of the sport, skiing fosters a deep appreciation for the outdoors and enriches the human spirit. It is a sport that allows Americans to enjoy mountain peaks and back-country trials even on the coldest days of winter, because sliding down a challenging ski run can warn the heart with exhileration.

In addition to the enjoyment it brings to millions of Americans, skiing continues to play an important role in the growing recreation and tourism industry in this country. And my State is no exception to this trend. Recreation and tourism is Colorado's second largest industry and on Colorado's western slope, skiing is the leading industry. Last year, Colorado's ski areas had 9.5 million visits. This sport accounts for one-third of all retail sales, a quarter of all employment, and almost half of the housing construction. Statewide, this industry creates 53,200 jobs, contributes $1.9 billion to Colorado's economy, and produces $146 million in State and local taxes.

The benefits of skiing cross into many arenas—it is a vital part of the recreation and tourism industry in our Nation, can positively affect one's physical well-being, and provides a dynamic vehicle to experience sheer enjoyment. The role skiing plays in our country is growing, and for this reason I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this joint resolution.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 13—RELATING TO THE PANAMA CANAL TREATIES

Mr. SYMMS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 13

Whereas the Panama Canal is a vital strategic asset of the United States;

Whereas article 163 of the 1972 Constitution of the Republic of Panama provides that the "The President alone . . . [shall] conduct foreign relations . . . and enter into international treaties and agreements . . . ";

Whereas the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977 were signed by General Omar Torrijos Herrera, the head of Panama's Defense Forces, who was neither the President of Panama nor a duly elected official of the Government of Panama, and not by Demetro B. Lukas, the President of Panama, as required by the Constitution of Panama;

Whereas this violation of Panama's Constitution regarding competence to conclude treaties renders the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977 invalid under international law, including article 46 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, to which the United States conforms, and therefore subject to termination by the Republic of Panama at any time;

Whereas the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal is also subject to repudiation by the Republic of Panama because six modifications to the Treaty contained in the resolution of ratification of the United States Senate, including the DeConcini Reservation asserting the unilateral right of the United States to intervene to protect the Panama Canal, were never submitted to a national plebiscite, as required in article 274 of the Constitution of Panama;

Whereas Panama's instruments of ratification concerning the Neutrality Treaty, which contain counter-reservations denying the right of the United States to intervene unilaterally in order to protect the Panama Canal, were never submitted to the United States Senate for approval, in violation of established procedures for the ratification of treaties under the Constitution of the United States;

Whereas the Neutrality Treaty confers no explicit legal right upon the United States either to maintain defense forces in Panama or to enter Panama to defend the Panama Canal against an external or internal threat after the year 1999;

Whereas both the United States and the Republic of Panama are signatories to the charters of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, which guarantee the territorial inviolability of an independent state and therefore prohibit unilateral intervention or entry upon the sovereign territory of another country without its permission;

Whereas the Neutrality Treaty limits the right of the United States to defend the Panama Canal on the high seas, without express permission to enter Panamanian territory, and therefore fails to provide adequate protection for the national security of the United States;

Whereas the Neutrality Treaty does not prohibit the Republic of Panama from entering into an agreement with a third country, including Cuba or Nicaragua, for the joint or exclusive operation and control of the Panama Canal;

Whereas article III of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, providing for the operation of the Panama Canal through 1999, stipulates that four of the nine members of the Board of the Panama Canal Commission must be citizens of Panama who are proposed by the Panamanian Government for appointment and are subject to removal by the Panamanian Government;

Whereas these provisions in the Panama Canal Treaty regarding the appointment and removal by Panama of the Panamanian members of the board improperly restrict the President's appointment and removal powers under article II, section 2 of the Constitution of the United States and are inconsistent with the Supreme Court's ruling in Buckley versus Valeo (424 U.S. 1 (1976)) holding that all such members of a United States Federal agency are "officers of the United States" who are subject to Senate confirmation;

Whereas all "officers of the United States" must be citizens of the United States, and all such officers must therefore take an oath to defend the Constitution and may be impeached and removed from office for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors;

Whereas the Panamanian members of the Board of the Panama Canal Commission are appointees to a United States Federal agency and are exercising the powers and responsibilities of "officers of the United States," but are foreign nationals and are therefore ineligible under the Constitution of the United States to serve as members of the Board of the Commission; and

Whereas the Panama Canal Act of 1979 is the implementing legislation for the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President or the Congress should immediately abrogate the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977 and the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, and that the Congress should repeal the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 14—PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL RECESS OF THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE

Mr. DIXON (for Mr. MITCHELL) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 14

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representative concurring), That when the Senate recesses on Thursday, February 9, 1989, at the conclusion of the joint session to receive a message from the President, it stand in recess until 2:15 post meridiem on Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution; and that when the House adjourns on Thursday, February 9, 1989, it stand adjourned until 12:00 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution.

SEC. 2. The Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

SENATE RESOLUTION 54—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 54

Resolved, That, in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraphs 1 and 8 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $4,748,545.00 of which amount (1) not to exceed $75,000.00 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $1,000.00 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1945).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $4,846,789.00 of which amount (1) not to exceed $75,000.00 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $1,000.00 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of Stationery, U.S. Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the Appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations."

SENATE RESOLUTION 55—ACKNOWLEDGING THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE OF MIKE MANSFIELD

Mr. BAUCUS (for himself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BOND, Mr. BOREN, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COATS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. COHEN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr.

CRANSTON, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. EXON, Mr. FORD, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. GARN, Mr. GLENN, Mr. GORE, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERREY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MACK, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. METZENBAUM, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. PELL, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. REID, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. ROBB, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. ROTH, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SASSER, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. WARNER, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. WIRTH) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 55

Whereas Michael J. (Mike) Mansfield has served the Nation for over seventy years, as a soldier, educator, Congressman, Senator, and Ambassador;

Whereas Mike Mansfield served as Senate Majority Leader longer than any other person in history, and provided wise and steady leadership during a critical time in the history of the Nation:

Whereas Mike Mansfield served as the Ambassador to Japan for the United States longer than any other person in history, and advanced the interests of the Nation and improved relations between the United States and Japan during a difficult time of frequent trade problems;

Whereas Mike Mansfield provided valuable advice and counsel to Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan;

Whereas President Reagan recently awarded Mike Mansfield the Presidential Medal of Freedom and declared that he "set his indelible mark upon American foreign policy and distinguished himself as a dedicated public servant and loyal American"'

Whereas throughout his career Mike Mansfield has exemplified the ideal public servant and displayed the highest qualities of dedicaton, integrity, an rectitude; and

Whereas Mike Mansfield has announced his retirement from full-time public service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate gratefully acknowledges the distinguished service that Michael J. (Mike) Mansfield has rendered on behalf of the people of the United States of America, and that the Senate expresses profound gratitude and best wishes to Mike Mansfield and to his wife, Maureen, upon the occasion of Mike Mansfield's retirement.

SENATE RESOLUTION 56—DIRECTING AN APPEARANCE BY THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DIXON (for Mr. MITCHELL, for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 56

Whereas, in David A. Clarke, et al. v. United States of America, No. 88-5439, pending in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, the constitutionality of the Nation's Capital Religious Liberty and Academic Freedom Act, section 145 of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 1989, Pub. L. No. 100-462, 102 Stat. 2269, 2269-14 (1988), has been placed in issue;

Whereas, pursuant to section 703(c), 706(a), and 713(a) of the Ethics in Government Act of 978, 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b(c), 288e(a), and 288*l*(a) (1982), the Senate may direct its Counsel to appear as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate in any legal action in which the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution are placed in issue: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to appear as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate in David A. Clarke, et al. v. United States of America to defend the Congress's exercise of its appropriations powers in section 145 of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 1989.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

AMERICAN VOCATIONAL EDUCATION WEEK

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the Senate the observance of "American Vocational Education Week" from February 12 to 18, 1989. As the sponsor of a resolution passed in the 100th Congress to designate a week recognizing vocational-technical education, I am very pleased to lend my support to the annual celebration of "American Vocational Education Week" sponsored by the American Vocational Association.

Federal aid for vocational education programs began with the Smith-Hughes Act of 1917 and is currently authorized through fiscal year 1989 by the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act. The Perkins Act, first implemented during the 1985-86 school year, authorizes grants to State boards of vocational education and State vocational education councils to expand and improve State and local vocational education programs. The increasingly complex and technological nature of our society requires a skilled work force. Vocational-technical education plays an integral role in ensuring the availability of such a work force and provides individuals with marketable skills to enable them to better lead full and productive lives.

In my own State of Maryland, Federal assistance dispensed through the Perkins Vocational Education Act helped provide quality vocational-technical education to over 229,000 citizens in 1988. The value of the education provided to students by vocational educators throughout Maryland is well-documented in the recently published results of a report prepared for the Maryland Commission on Vocational-Technical Education on the condition of vocational-technical education in the State.

As part of this report, all 24 local education agencies in Maryland participated in a comprehensive vocational education program review during 1984-87. The results are striking. A follow-up survey of vocational education graduates conducted 1 year after graduation showed that over 97 percent of the graduates reported receiving adequate preparation in basic reading, writing, and mathematics. Ninety-two percent of vocational graduates were either employed or had gone on for further schooling. Employers of vocationally prepared graduates were very satisfied with their employees, with over 97 percent of the 2,165 employers who responded indicating that they would not hesitate to hire other vocational education graduates in the future. A survey of students enrolled in vocational-technical programs during the review indicated they understood the goals of their vocational programs and knew what was expected of them. Seventy-one percent reported that they liked school better because of their participation in vocational education.

Maryland's demonstrated excellence in the area of vocational-technical education is further illustrated by the national recognition recently received by several vocational-technical education centers in the State. I am pleased to report that Eastern Vocational-Technical High School in Baltimore was named last year as one of the 10 national winners of the U.S. Department of Education's Awards for Outstanding Vocational Education Programs. The recipients of this award are selected based on their success in providing basic skills and vocational training, responsiveness to local needs, placement of graduates, service to students with special needs, and coordination with other area schools.

The Croom Vocational School, located in Prince Georges County, has also received national recognition through its work in serving "at-risk" students. Approximately one-third of the students who attend Croom have previously dropped out of school and many come from disadvantaged homes. Croom, an alternative "model" vocational high school, has shown that academically disadvantaged students can achieve remarkable success in an advantageous environment. In fact, 80 percent of the students who attend the Croom Vocational School for 2 years complete their programs and 95 percent go on to find and keep jobs.

Another model vocational program underway in Maryland is the Community Based Organization Program in Anne Arundel County. The Learning Opportunity Center established through this program and located in Annapolis offers transitional services leading to entrance into vocational education, employment, or other education and training for young people between 16 and 21 who have dropped out of school. Through the opportunities offered, participants become better equipped to navigate in the working world and function in a manner that better assures economic independence and an enhanced quality of life.

Maryland is the first State in the Nation to establish a model vocational-technical project addressing an inmate population. The Maryland Correctional Institution at Hagerstown has implemented a program in principles of technology which utilizes a vocational base to teach in the area of technical physics. While still in its infancy, this program has been an effective means of improving group interaction and developing peer support groups for students encountering difficulties understanding technological concepts.

There are numerous other exemplary programs in vocational-technical education under way in my State; including the DACUM Center at Dundalk Community College in Baltimore County where participating colleges can design occupational programs that respond specifically to the training needs of local business and industries; statewide programs serving single parents and homemakers; and projects conducted by the Central, Southern, Western, and Eastern Shore Regional Centers serving students in nontraditional programs.

It is clear that vocational-technical education in Maryland is thriving. I am very concerned that adequate Federal assistance is maintained to allow the continuation and expansion of Maryland's vocational-technical education efforts, as well as other vocational programs throughout the Nation. As you know, the previous administration consistently called for deep cuts in Federal support for vocational education. While I am pleased that Congress was able to turn back many of these proposals, the fiscal year 1988 appropriation for vocational education was still 28 percent less than the fiscal year 1980 appropriation when adjusted for inflation. The devaluation of vocational education by the executive branch is further illustrated by the previous administration's fiscal year 1989 budget request, which proposed the termination of all Federal support for vocational education. It is also interesting to note that vocational-technical education was not included in the former Secretary of Education's "model" high school curriculum.

Mr. President, we must recognize that vocational education and job training programs are vital factors in the development of human resources and the possibility that all our country's citizens will lead full and productive lives. As you know, the Carl Perkins Vocational Education Act is up for reauthorization this year. It is my hope that next week's national recognition of American Vocational Education Week will serve to emphasize the need for renewed Federal support for vocational-technical education programs and their importance to the well-being of our citizenry and the economic development of our Nation.

I look forward to the celebration of American Vocational Education Week and a renewed Federal commitment to vocational-technical education through the reauthorization of the Perkins Act later this year.●

THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT, INTERNATIONAL LAW AND THE ROLE OF NGO'S

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, with each passing day, we learn more and more about the threats to our global environment. There is the greenhouse effect and global warming, destruction of the ozone layer, acid rain, tropical deforestation, and many other problems.

Earlier this year, instead of naming a man or woman of the year for 1988, Time magazine named our "Endangered Earth" the "Planet of the Year." National Geographic, like Time, recently devoted an entire issue to global environmental problems, asking on its cover: "Can Man Save This Fragile Earth?"

It is encouraging to see a growing awareness of the problem. But this growing awareness will be for naught if it does not lead to action. To help save the planet, we need an all-out international effort on several fronts, including better enforcement of international law.

A recent letter to the New York Times suggests some of the reasons vigorous international legal action may be lagging. The writers are affiliated with the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund, a public interest environmental law firm, one of several important nongovernmental organization [NGO's].

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the letter be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

The letter states that the time has come to vigorously enforce international law. The law must be used more effectively to help solve our global environmental problems. Specifically, the writers suggest a broader role for NGO's such as theirs.

I share the view that our international legal system must become more responsive to global environmental problems and I urge the writers forward in their effort to expand the role of NGO's in this area. NGO's such as the Sierra Club Legal Defense Club play a vital role in this country. They help focus public attention on our environmental problems and they work with Congress to get strong environmental laws passed. More importantly, perhaps, they have been on the front lines, bringing legal actions to ensure that our laws are implemented fully and enforced vigorously.

Broadening the efforts of NGO's to cover international law enforcement will not be easy; it will impose a great burden on these organizations. Yet such an effort must be undertaken if we hope to solve our global environmental problems. The parallel effort by Amnesty International, now 27 years old, began a legal revolution for human rights—to establish that individuals as well as nations have certain rights under international law. A second revolution in international law is now needed to protect the global environment, and NGO's should help lead the way.

The letter follows:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 24, 1989]

To the EDITOR:

Japan's dispatching of four whaling vessels to the Antarctic, eloquently deplored in "Japan's Contemptuous Whalers" (editorial, Dec. 21), demonstrates the weakness of international environmental law and the relative lack of vigor in enforcing it.

The last year has seen a growth in awareness of global international problems not seen since the late 1960's, brought on by scientific studies measuring global warming, ozone depletion, deforestation, pollution of the oceans and the overall destruction of living resources.

Mechanisms must be found to make international environmental laws, conventions and treaties stronger—and enforceable—and to enact new ones.

Unilateral actions aren't enough, as the whaling problem demonstrates. The United States, as a world leader in whaling protection, has banned Japanese fishermen from United States waters. This did not stop Japan from sending four whaling boats to the Antarctic—on what you call a hunting trip—masquerading as a scientific mission.

The Commerce Department must decide whether to ban the import of fish and fish products from Japan, but that could spark a trade war that would hurt the United States more than the Japanese. It's not fair for one country to try to be the world's environmental policeman, and it won't work.

Leadership in international environmental law is not likely to come from national governments in any case. Traditional international law actually hinders the solution of environmental problems because it is created by nations to govern relations between them. These laws nearly always address complicated political problems. Enforcement is quixotic at best.

The failure of governments to enforce the Whaling Convention and other breaches of international environmental law are likely to be challenged only by nongovernmental organizations and individuals. The shortcomings of traditional international law provide a great moment for such groups. Organizations like Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth, having stirred the public's interest in international environmental affairs, must now pursue international legal avenues.

They must identify the breaches of international law and publicize them. They can help write and get ratified new, binding international treaties and conventions. They can attempt to take international environmental lawbreakers to the International Court of Justice, the European Court of Justice and other international tribunals. They must inform citizens of international environmental rules so they can enforce them in national courts in all countries.

The resulting burden on private organizations will be great. The obstacles they confront will be greater. But the problems demand an all-out response, and the success of Amnesty International in using international law to pursue its noble purpose gives reason to hope that a similar attempt can work in environmental matters as well.

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the latest budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1989, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is over the budget resolution by $0.9 billion in budget authority, and over the budget resolution by $0.4 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $0.3 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $135.7 billion, $0.3 billion below the maximum deficit amount for 1988 of $136 billion.

The report follows:

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 101ST CONG., 1ST SESS., AS OF FEB. 3, 1989

[In billions of dollars]

	Current level [1]	Budget resolution H. Con. Res. 268 [2]	Current level +/− resolution

[1] The current level represents the estimated revenue and direct spending effects (budget authority and outlays) of all legislation that Congress has enacted in this or previous sessions or sent to the President for his approval and are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of H. Con. Res. 268. In addition, estimates are included of the direct spending effects for all entitlement or other mandatory programs requiring annual appropriations under current law even though the appropriations have not been made. The current level of debt subject to limit reflects the latest U.S. Treasury information on public debt transactions.

[2] In accordance with sec. 5(a)(b) the levels of budget authority, outlays, and revenues have been revised for catastrophic health care (Public Law 100–360).

[3] The permanent statutory debt limit is $2,800 billion.

[4] Maximum deficit amount [MDA] in accordance with sec. 3(7)(D) of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

J.D. NICHOLS

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to insert into the RECORD a copy of an article that appeared in the Louisville Courier-Journal about a remarkable man, Mr. J.D. Nichols. Mr. Nichols realized that Louisville desperately needed a larger airport and he refused to abandon the idea after city officials received a discouraging report on a possible expansion of the existing facility.

In mid-1987, the Regional Airport Authority of Louisville received bad news. The local airport, Standiford Field, needed to be expanded. A national consulting firm, however, had concluded that building a new runway would be very costly and its location would have to be so far away from the terminal that only a small portion of the airport traffic would use it. After this discouraging report, almost everyone gave up on the idea of airport expansion.

J.D. Nichols, a private citizen, refused to give up on the idea. You see, Mr. Nichols does not like to hear that things can't be done. He even has a sign on his desk that says "Let's think of a way that it can be done." J.D. Nichols worked on his own designs for a new runway, even obtaining aerial photos of the airports, talking to pilots and the FAA, and hiring an experienced engineering firm to do another study. He then got Louisville's local officials together and presented his ideas for the expansion and encouraged them to do another study. Mr. Nichols' plan was eventually discarded but another involving the building of two new runways has been accepted. Local officials credit J.D. Nichols with keeping the airport expansion project alive.

J.D. Nichols' involvement with the project has not ended. The building of two new runways at Standiford Field requires several neighborhoods and buinesses near the airport being relocated. Mr. Nichols has talked to several local business and professional groups encouraging their support of the airport expansion and asking them to provide assistance to residents and businesses being forced to move. Sears, for example, has offered to disconnect and reinstall appliances for families that must move. J.D. Nichols has already met with local homebuilders to ask them to build low-cost affordable housing for the residents that are relocated or possibly move the existing houses to new neighborhoods. He has even assigned some of his employees at NTS Corp. to find a suitable site for these new neighborhoods.

I commend J.D. Nichols for his dedication to the city of Louisville and its citizens. I encourage my colleagues to read this article and to join me in honoring this fine individual.

THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T LET AIRPORT PROJECT BE GROUNDED

(By Ric Manning)

It was mid-1987 when the Regional Airport Authority got the bad news. A national consulting firm had concluded that building a new runway south of Standiford Field was a poor idea.

Local officials, anxious to improve Louisville's air service, had asked Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co. if the authority could build a new runway on landfill property across Fern Valley Road.

The consultants said the project could cost $230 million and the runway would be so far away from the new terminal that only a small portion of airport traffic would use it.

After the report came in, almost everyone gave up on the idea.

Everybody but real estate developer J.D. Nichols.

"I don't like to hear that it can't be done," said Nichols, chairman of NTS Corp. "I keep a little sign on my desk that says 'Let's think of a way that it can be done.' "

Over the next four months, Nichols worked up his own designs for a new runway. He got aerial photos of the airport, talked to airline pilots and to the Federal Aviation Administration. He even hired an engineering firm that had worked on airports in Florida to help out.

Eventually, he got local officials together to look at his drawings and persuaded them to do another expansion study.

"It wouldn't have happened without J.D. Nichols," said air board chairman Frank Hower, chairman of Liberty National Bancorp.

"He got us off the dime," aid County Judge/Executive Harvey Sloane. "If it wasn't for that meeting, we'd still be looking around and moaning and groaning about air service."

In the end, Nichols' plan to build a second runway southwest of the present main runway was discarded, in part because it would run smack into the new wing at Ford Motor Co.'s plant on Fern Valley Road.

Instead, the board endorsed building two brand new runways, an idea first proposed by airport manager Robert Michael.

But that didn't dim Nichols' enthusiasm for the project.

"There's no question that if we don't get those runways, Louisville's going to die," he said in an interview at his Plainview office. "We will blow any chance that we ever had to be anybody."

It's that message that Nichols takes to business executives and professional groups when he asks them to get behind he project. City officials say they've gotten several offers from local businesses, including Sears Roebuck & Co., which offered to have its technicians disconnect and reinstall appliances for families that are relocated.

Nichols recently pitched members of the Louisville Homebuilders Association to consider building low-cost homes for the airport neighbors who will have to move.

And he's cornered several local business executives and asked them to help the relocated families. Humana Chairman David Jones, GE Executive Vice President Roger Schipke and Churchill Downs President Thomas Meeker have all gotten the Nichols treatment.

"When J.D. decides he's going to jump into something," said Michael, "he does it with both feet. And he drags a lot of people in with him."

One of them is former Sloane aide Burt Deutsch. He now works for NTS handling commercial real estate, but he spends most of his time working on financing for the airport project.

Deutsch said he's not surprised that Nichols, a private citizen, would get so deeply involved in the airport project.

"It's like Tom Simons with the Broadway Project or Maury Johnson (Maurice D.S. Johnson, retired chairman of Citizens Fidelity Corp.) with the Galleria, Wendell Cherry and the Center for the Arts or David Jones with the Presbyterians. We have always had community-minded people who were willing to get behind major projects," he said.

Nichols said he might some day be interested in a seat on the airport board, but for now he'd rather work in an unofficial capacity. "I like having my committee meetings in the shower," he said. "I like the way the vote goes."

Nichols' interest in the airport stems in part from his love of flying. His company has a hangar at Standiford Field and Nichols loves to fly NTS's Learjet, which he calls the hot rod of the company fleet.

But he said his primary interest is ensuring that he and his company are in a growing community.

"I've been here 35 years," he said. "My dad came here with GE to work at Appliance Park. I've been quite fortunate and Louisville has been very good to me. But we have to grow. A city cannot stand still, it either moves ahead or it dies."

Nichols said NTS won't have an economic interest in any of the redevelopment associated with the airport project.

"Everybody thinks you've got your hand out," he said. "But I've told our guys, if they stumble on something they can buy tomorrow for a dollar and sell a year from now for a million, don't do it. If I catch anybody touching it, they're fired."

Nichols said he'll be satisfied if NTS gets "our fair share" of a larger development that would come with a growing community.

Not that NTS has been standing still.

The company, one of the largest real-estate developers in Kentucky, has extensive real estate projects throughout eastern Jefferson County.

The latest include a 400-acre office park at Blankenbaker Lane and Interstate 64, a 1,000-acre residential development near the Gene Snyder Freeway and a $95 million development project on the old Golden Maxim Farm in St. Matthews.

But the company also has projects in Florida, California and the Washington, D.C., area. And, it has a financial operation that sells real estate securities throughout the country.

There was a time, Nichols said, when he considered moving the company.

In 1985, Louisville lost out to Greensboro, N.C., in a bid to attract an American Express credit processing center. The following year Time-Life Books looked at Louisville—and an NTS building—for a distribution center, but chose Richmond, Va.

"Regardless of what those companies said in public, we blew it because of poor air service," said Nichols, "And we almost lost the Presbyterians."

About the same time, Nichols talked to a couple of pilots who were flying cargo jets for UPS.

"They said their bosses told them not to plan on staying in Louisville because UPS couldn't stay here," he said. "That upset me so much. I told some of the guys here that if we screw up and lose UPS, we ought to look at moving our company."

Today, Nichols says he plans to stick around and fight for the runway project. He's also convinced that UPS will continue to grow, once it sees that the airport expansion will go through.

If UPS builds an airline maintenance center, he said, it would mean 1,000 jobs for the community. It would also be a magnet for other airline-related businesses, including a small hub operation for a passenger airline.

For now, though, Nichols said he's more interested in seeing that the people in the Highland Park, Prestonia and Standiford neighborhoods who will have to move get a fair deal.

Nichols has talked to builders about recreating a neighborhood of affordable homes somewhere in the city. He said he's looked into the possiblity of moving some existing houses. And he has NTS employees seeking a suitable site.

And he's confident that private businesses will contribute whatever is needed to make the move go smoothly.

"My feeling is we as a community have the ability and the responsibility to take care of these people," he said. "They're paying a price to a degree far greater than the rest of us and we have to make sure that they come out whole."

TERRORISM IN THE SKIES

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I imagine that all of us were touched in one way or another by the tragic bombing of Pan Am flight No. 103 in December. Maryland lost seven lives in that crash, among them Miriam Wolfe.

Miriam's parents, Larry and Rosemary Mild of Severna Park, have turned their grief into a constructive effort to learn from their loss and help us all avoid future tragedies.

In an op-ed piece in the January 6 Baltimore Sun the Milds have made six sensible suggestions on how to deal with terrorism in the skies. Their ideas range from improved aircraft construction to better security checks at the airport to improved channels of communications with the families of the victims.

I have sent a copy of the Milds' op-ed piece to the Federal Aviation Administration, Federal Bureau of Investigation, the State Department and appropriate congressional committees for their consideration, and I hope all of our colleagues will take time to review these suggestions.

These are well thought-out, pragmatic ideas that are particularly meaningful because they were generated by the Milds' painful experience.

I ask that the Sun article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SIX PROPOSALS ON AIRPLANE TERRORISM

(By Larry Mild and Rosemary Mild)

SEVERNA PARK. With the loss of our beloved Miriam, our thoughts on terrorist atrocity gain urgency not only for us who loved her, but for the thousands of other lives that will be no more if we do nothing. We present six suggestions that might help to prevent future acts of terror.

This plea we direct at the media. The Founding Fathers recognized that to protect the multitude each person must give up a carefully measured portion of freedom. Articles that give public recognition to individual terrorists and the groups or ideas they serve further the terrorist's purpose—as a child smashes a new toy on the floor in order to obtain parental attention.

We suggest that the phrase "an identified terrorist or fanatical group has claimed credit" be substituted for any known names, and that any knowledge of groups or individuals obtained in the pursuit of a story be passed immediately to the authorities. We propose no law to implement this idea, but we believe pressure within the media could enforce self-discipline. Twenty threats and five claims to a single deed is a lot of free press to give to the undeserving.

This plea we direct toward the explosives manufacturers of the world. It is our understanding that "plastic" explosives require facilities more complex than a basement or garage for fabrication. We propose an international agreement among manufacturers to provide plastic explosives with an odor additive within the sensory range of specially trained dogs and a trace of a radio-active ingredient within the sensory range of ordinary detection instruments.

These additives would go a long way toward the prevention of transportation bombings. If only a few nations do not enforce such an agreement, we need look no further for a source and contacts.

We direct this suggestion to airlines. The luggage compartments of aircraft could be isolated by a blast-proof shield and vented outward for the expanding gases normally associated with an explosion. The compartment itself could be jettisoned to restore fly-ability and control. Perhaps this is already in some phase of development.

Once luggage is inspected, each piece should be marked with a large paper stick-on band that would encompass the entire article. A numbered passenger along with numbered luggage would make a last-minute switch more difficult.

Carry-on luggage should be further limited in size and similarly numbered. In-cabin, closed-circuit TV cameras wired to the blast-protected (in-flight) recorders might reveal strange activity preceding an act of on-board terrorism and lead to insight for future adjustments. This scheme apparently works in the banking system.

We direct this idea to the State Department and the Federal Aviation Administration: kindness and consideration to the next-of-kin at a time when they most need them.

It is our understanding that when the doors of an aircraft are closed, a manifest or list of crew and passengers, is complete. If the manifest is not complete at this time, it should be. How often have we seen the flight attendant count heads and step off the plane? Possibly someone may be flying under an assumed name, but the list will carry the true names of the kin we are so concerned about.

Yet from mid-afternoon on that fateful Wednesday until nearly midnight we were unable to determine whether our Miriam was actually on board. We were able to reach the airline only once, at 9 p.m., to be told, unsatisfactorily, that it had no information and that it would call us "momentarily." Friends, relatives, well-wishers and, of course, the media, occupied the phone lines and turned that evening into a nightmare of redialings. Confirmation that all aboard were lost came from the London police task group at 6 a.m. the next day.

Whatever reasons the airlines had for possibly managing information, we believe that a standing task force—of the U.S. State Department for international flights and the Federal Aviation Administration for domestic flights—should step in immediately and establish channels to the next-of-kin without fear of legal or other liability. The airline and the State Department established parallel channels to London's Heathrow airport for identification purposes. It would have been kinder to offer local numbers which might have culled the merely interested from the next-of-kin, and directed the latter to a channel of best information.

Lastly, let there be an agency whose sole purpose is to solicit and examine ideas from just plain people. If the yield is some small portion of a percent, what is the price of the life saved? It is too late to prevent the death of our dear Miriam, but if one life can be saved by one of our thoughts, the fact that she inspired it will give proof that she lived and will continue to live in our hearts.

(Mr. and Mrs. Mild are the parents of Miriam L. Wolfe, who was aboard Pan Am 103 when it was blown up over Scotland.)●

S&L BAILOUT PROPOSAL

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to commend President Bush for coming forward so early in his administration with a forthright proposal that aims to resolve the current crisis in the savings and loan industry.

I am especially pleased that the President has proposed increased funding for the Justice Department to finance a new national program to attack fraud in the financial industry. In too many instances, fraud and mismanagement have been the precipitating forces that have brought hundreds of S&L's to insolvency. The executives and managers of these institutions cannot be allowed to be let off scot-free.

It is imperative that the Justice Department ferret out such fraud and fully prosecute all such cases. At the same time, I hope that any package of financial industry reforms will include legislation I have cosponsored with the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Senator BOND, that substantially increases criminal penalties for financial industry fraud.

Mr. President, the financial integrity of the entire savings and loan industry has been in jeopardy for several years. Resolution of this crisis must be at the top of our agenda this year, for the longer we delay, the greater will be the ultimate cost of restoring financial stability and soundness to the system.

Although the President's proposal represents an excellent starting point, I believe it is incumbent on the President to submit a detailed analysis comparing the costs and benefits of his proposal with other financing options. In addition, I think the American taxpayer is owed an explanation of the benefits that will result from this extraordinary bailout beyond the general notion of maintaining the integrity of the system of deposit insurance.

As chairman of President Reagan's Task Force on Regulatory Reform, the former Vice President established well-reasoned cost-benefit parameters to guide the regulatory agencies of the Federal Government in drafting substantive regulations. The same cost-benefit test should be applied to the President's S&L plan.

One of the greatest uncertainties that surrounds the President's plan is the cost of servicing the debt on the $50 billion in long-term bonds that will be issued by the proposed Resolution Funding Corporation. Although the administration claims that no taxpayer funds will be needed to repay the principal on these 30-year bonds, fluctuations in interest rates could drive the taxpayer cost of the bailout beyond $40 billion.

Furthermore, in recommending that such bonds be issued by the proposed Resolution Funding Corporation, there is no doubt that the interest costs that these bonds will carry, and that will ultimately be paid by the taxpayer, will be higher than if the Treasury simply issued its own bonds. It is imperative that the administration fully justify its reasoning for this decision, in addition to providing its projections of the interest cost differentials that will result from selecting this option.

The additional insurance fees that will be levied on the members of the S&L community and the members of the banking industry are another area of serious concern. What portion, if any, of this assessment, will be passed through to depositors, and how will this additional assessment affect the international competitiveness of our financial institutions?

The administration would be well advised to provide Congress with a complete analysis of the short-term and long-term costs to the Treasury of the special S&L and banking industry tax incentives that have served as an integral part of the financing packages for merging failed financial institutions. I am not convinced that such tax incentives are the most cost-efficient method of providing financial assistance to failing S&L's and I think we should all be wary of extending these provisions without a clear sense of the real cost of these incentives.

Mr. President, at a time when the Congress is facing very difficult decisions involving spending for environmental, defense, and social policy objectives, it is staggering to think that the taxpayer must also foot a large part of the bill for bailing out an industry that has been poorly regulated and which has engaged in investment decisions which in many cases border on outright fraud.

What guarantees do we have that the practices that have necessitated this bailout will not be repeated? What guarantees do we have that the investors and shareholders in these institutions will pay their fair share of the price of this bailout? What guarantees do we have that the managers and executives who precipitated this crisis will pay a heavy penalty for their reckless disregard and misuse of funds guaranteed by the American taxpayer? In a word, are the benefits of this bailout package focused in such a way that the American taxpayer will pay the smallest possible cost and that the precipitators of this crisis pay the heaviest cost?

Mr. President, the ultimate issue that we in Congress will have to face in regard to the S&L crisis is whether we want to pay for this bailout today, or whether we want to stretch out the cost of this fiasco over the next 30 years. By stretching out financial responsibilities, we are merely shifting the costs of yesterday's failures onto tomorrow's generation of taxpayers. And by stretching out financing, we may be asking tomorrow's generation of taxpayers to pay a price that may be far higher than if we crafted a financing package that front-loaded the costs into this year's budget.

For this Senator, there are many unanswered issues. I look forward to working with the administration and my colleagues in the next few months to craft a financing package that minimizes the long-term costs to the taxpayer and restores fiscal solvency to the industry as quickly as possible.●

POSTAL SERVICE "OFF BUDGET" PROPOSAL

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 302, the Postal Service "off budget" bill and I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation.

In 1970, Congress passed the Postal Reorganization Act which removed the Postal Service budget from the overall Federal budget. This act freed the business-like postal system from political tampering. It allowed the postal system to operate as a self-sustaining business while Congress still maintained ultimate authority over the postal system.

In 1986, the postal system lost that important financial autonomy. As it now stands, the postal budget can be subject to the political winds that blow so frequently around these halls, in order to create a rosier picture of our Federal deficit. This is particularly dangerous with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester threat hanging over our head.

I'd liked to make note of some recent Congressional Budget Office figures. Starting in fiscal year 1989, CBO predicts the postal budget will be running a deficit in fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1992. This means that if the "off budget" legislation were in effect today, our overall Federal deficit amount would be decreased by approximately $2 billion over the next 4 fiscal years. As we all know, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester trigger for this current fiscal year is $100 billion, and as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee I know how much this savings would help.

Furthermore, every time we force budget cuts on the Post Office, we force them to compromise service, as has happened due to the budget cuts mandated by the fiscal year 1987 Budget Reconciliation Act.

Our postal system is the best in the world. We have a higher efficiency rate than any other country anywhere. Where else in the world can you spend 25 cents to have a letter mailed 3,000 miles away and have it show up in 2 to 3 days? Nowhere else but in the United States.

Our postal system works well. We can all be proud of the dedicated men and women who make the Postal Service what it is today, and we should let the Postal Service run itself without congressional interference.

I urge my colleagues to support S. 302 and put our postal system "off budget."●

THE 15TH ANNIVERSARY OF CONNECTICUT HOSPICE

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the people of Connecticut are celebrating an important anniversary, the 15th year of hospice care in our Nation. In 1974, the Connecticut Hospice introduced hospice care in the United States, enabling patients with terminal illness to live their lives in a caring and supportive environment. Since then, 11,000 people have benefited from the services of the hospice's professionals and trained volunteers. Under the vigorous and imaginative direction of hospice president and chief executive officer Rosemary J. Hurzeler, the hospice and its Institute for Education, Training, and Research are a national focus. People everywhere look to it for leadership in the provision of quality care to support quality life.

Mr. President, on Sunday, January 29, the hospice celebrated its anniversary with a gala benefit. Rudolf Nureyev and the Paris Opera Ballet performed at the Shubert Theater in New Haven to enable the hospice to further its fine record. I can think of no finer way for the hospice to prove its dedication to life. I call upon my colleagues in the Senate to pay tribute to this fine institution and to join with me in celebrating this anniversary of Connecticut's gift to the Nation, hospice care.●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the most basic discussions we have had in recent years in the U.S. Senate is on the question of the right of privacy.

That became a focal point of the discussions with Judge Robert Bork, when he was the nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court, and later with Judge Anthony M. Kennedy, when he was the nominee.

Stephen F. Rohde, a Los Angeles lawyer and scholar of the Constitution, has written about the right of privacy in the Constitution.

It is a thoughtful piece that I would urge my colleagues to read. It was originally published in the Los Angeles Lawyer.

I ask to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

The material is as follows:

ORIGINS OF THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY

THE RATIFICATION DEBATES 200 YEARS AGO ILLUMINATE TODAY'S CONTROVERSY WHETHER PRIVACY IS PROTECTED BY THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

(By Stephen F. Rohde)

The entire nation was enthralled by the debate. A day did not pass without front page coverage of the key issue: Do Americans enjoy certain fundamental personal rights which the government cannot abridge, regardless of whether those rights are expressly enumerated in the text of the Constitution?

The debates last fall over the confirmation of judges Robert H. Bork and Anthony M. Kennedy as associate justice of the United States Supreme Court? No. It was the debate 200 years ago over the ratification of the new Constitution.

The two controversies bear such striking resemblances because they both touched a deep and recurring theme in the American experience.

Is the Constitution the source of our liberties, in which case only rights expressly designated in that document are free from regulation by the will of the majority, or do we enjoy certain inalienable rights, which predate the Constitution and which no government can abridge?

The history of the struggle for ratification and the adoption of the Bill of Rights illuminates the recent controversy which overwhelmed Bork. In that debate, a single word—privacy—came to symbolize an entire matrix of legal, social and political thought. In the end, because a majority of the American people and their representatives in the Senate perceived that Bork did not believe that the Constitution protected a general right of privacy, his nomination to the High Court was rejected. Because Kennedy, in stark contrast, embraced the right of privacy, he gave a great solace to the Senate and the American people and won unanimous conformation.[1]

Given their otherwise conservative records, the unequivocal rejection of Bork, followed by unanimous acceptance of Kennedy, can be traced to their opposite views on the constitutional right of privacy.

Where Bork asserted that the right of privacy "doesn't have any rooting in the Constitution," Kennedy testified that "[t]he framers had an idea which is central to Western thought. It's central to our American tradition. It's central to the idea of the rule of law. And that is that there is a zone of liberty, a zone of protection, a line that's drawn where the individual can tell the Government beyond this line you may not go."

Where Bork denounced the Supreme Court's 1965 decision in Griswold v. Connecticut, striking down a law barring the use of contraceptives, even by married couples, Kennedy suggested that the law "infringed upon the core values of privacy that the Constitution protects."

Where Bork ridiculed the Ninth Amendment—which provides that rights not enumerated in the Constitution are nevertheless "retained by the people"—as a "waterblot on the Constitution" with no real meaning, Kennedy expressed another view. Kennedy said that when James Madison drafted the Bill of Rights, he wanted to assure "that the world understood that he did not have the capacity to foresee every verbal formulation that was necessary for the protection of the individual," and that the Constitution was not "a proclamation of every right that should be the right of the free people."

Where Bork testified that as "a matter of plain arithmetic" when "a court adds to one person's constitutional rights it subtracts from the rights of others," Kennedy observed that "[o]ur constitutional history is replete with examples of cases in which the Supreme Court has held that the liberty provided in the Constitution extends to a particular action or right asserted by a person; and, as a result, all of our freedoms have been enhanced." [2]

A look back to the debates over ratification and the Bill of Rights sustains Kennedy's philosophy and betrays Bork's. In no small measure the Senate and the American people, without being schooled in details of those debates, knew instinctively that Bork stood for a radical departure from these 200-year-old traditions, while Kennedy represented a direct and unbroken link to our constitutional past.[3]

A BRAND NEW CHARTER

The battle over ratification of the Constitution lasted from September 17, 1787, until June 21, 1788, when New Hampshire became the ninth state to ratify. Actually, it was not until Virginia narrowly voted in favor on June 26, 1788, and New York on July 26, 1788, that the Federalists knew they would enjoy broad public support for the new government.

The Constitution had been framed in secret in Philadelphia.[4] During the four months of meetings between May and September 1787 there was a virtual press blackout. Rumors spread but the delegates had resolved to keep their deliberations to themselves.[5]

When the new Constitution was first unveiled the public was stunned. They had sent their delegates to Philadelphia "for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation." Instead, the Constituional Convention had thrown out the articles entirely and written a new charter which, for the first time since independence, created a new and powerful national government.

Although the Constitution enumerated specific powers which the People granted to Congress, the list ended with the suspiciously elastic power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." [6]

As to the vast reaches of the frontier, the Constitution gave Congress the limitless "Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States." [7]

The Anti-Federalists, such as George Mason, Richard Henry Lee, George Clinton and Patrick Henry, feared that this new powerful national government jeopardized the very "Blessing of Liberty" which the impressive Preamble vowed to secure.[8] Their fears were heightened by other significant provisions in the new Constitution.

It was declared that "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the Supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." [9]

When combined with the broad powers to "lay and collect Taxes," to "regulate Commerce," to "declare war," to "raise and support Armies" and to "provide for calling forth the Militia," [10] many Americans trembled at the prospect that they were about to lose the independence they had won only 11 years earlier.

But it was the glaring omissions of a declaration of rights that galvanized the opposition and framed the entire ratification debate.[11] After all, the constitutions of 11 original states contained declarations guaranteeing fundamental rights.[12] If, as it boldly declared, the new Constitution was now the "Supreme Law of the Land," had the delegates relinquished these fundamental rights in exchange for the stability of a new national government?

The Federalists argued that it was the powers granted to the government that were limited and the rights preserved by the people that were unlimited. In April 1788, George Washington sent a defense of the new Constitution to his friend and comrade Marquis de Lafayette, assuring him that "there was not a member of the Convention, I believe, who had the least objection to what is contended for by the Advocates for a Bill of Rights and Tryal by Jury." Washington expressed the simple axiom that "where the people evidently retained everything which they did not in express terms give up," a bill of rights was considered "nugatory." [13]

In the Federalist Papers No. 84, published in May 1788, Alexander Hamilton went so far as to claim that a written bill of rights was not only "unnecessary" but "dangerous." [14] Hamilton argued that in the new Constitution "the people surrender nothing, and as they retain every thing, they have no need of particular reservations." [15] Echoing a Federalist refrain first expressed by delegate Roger Sherman at the Philadelphia Convention,[16] Hamilton asked, "For why declare that things shall not be done which there is no power to do?" [17] The danger Hamilton claimed he perceived was that if a bill of rights contained "various exceptions to powers which are not granted," it "would afford a colourable pretext to claim more than were granted." [18]

Although Hamilton's defense of the Constitution is today considered the quintessential Federalist argument, during the ratification debates themselves delegate James Wilson may have proved more persuasive and was certainly more courageous coming less than a month after the Philadelphia Convention had adjourned. Wilson, considered by some as the most influential framer of the Constitution and as one of the great legal experts of his time, argued that "it would have been superfluous and absurd to have stipulated with a federal body of our own creation, that we should enjoy those privileges of which we are not divested either by the intention or the act that has brought that body into existence." [19]

Thus, far from endorsing the principle that by ratifying the Constitution Americans would be empowering the majority through their representatives to regulate their natural rights, the Federalist believed that nothing in the Constitution was intended to abridge those rights and therefore an enumerated list of specific rights was "superfluous" at best and "dangerous" at worst.

The Anti-Federalists wanted to leave nothing to chance. Even if they accepted the good faith of the Federalists' intentions, they feared that other men in other times would not be so benign. They wanted written and biding assurances that the Constitution meant what the Federalists said it meant; that the inalienable rights which they had fought for and other patriots had died for had not been bargained away as the price for a new and energetic national government.

George Mason of Virginia, who had lost his bid at Philadelphia to include a bill of rights in the first place, published his objections in various newspapers throughout November 1787. He led with his strongest criticism: "There is no Declaration of Rights." [20]

Various Anti-Federalist writers searched the proposed Constitution for provisions which might, in the absence of a bill of rights, be construed by men in power to grant license to interfere with individual liberties in the name of the public interest. "A Democratic Federalist" suggested that the broad judicial power of the United States under Article III could be used by government officials to "claim a right to the cognizance of all offenses against the general government." [21]

In a pamphlet by "A Federal Republican," the writer posited that Congress could use its broad power to tax as a pretext to impose stamp duties which would "as effectually abolish the freedom of the press as any express declaration." [22]

Perhaps the most creative and prescient threat to freedom of the press was identified by Anti-Federalist Robert Whitehall on December 1, 1787, at the Pennsylvania ratifying convention, when he observed that under the copyright clause (Article I, Section 8), which granted Congress the power to "promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts; by securing for limited Times to Authors . . . the exclusive Right to their respective Writings," Congress could assume the power to "license the press . . . and under licensing the press, they may suppress it." [23]

One of the most comprehensive Anti-Federalist polemics was contained in a series of letters signed by "The Federal Farmer." He asserted that there "are certain inalienable and fundamental rights, which in forming a social compact, ought to be explicitly ascertained and fixed—a free and enlightened people, in forming this compact will not resign all their rights to those who govern, and they will fix limits to their legislators and rulers, which will soon be plainly seen by those who are governed, as well as by those who govern." [24]

The Federal Farmer acknowledged the claim "that when the people make a constitution, and delegate powers that all powers not delegated by them to those who govern is [sic] reserved in the people; and that the people, in the present case, had reserved in themselves, and in their state governments, every right and power not expressly given by the federal constitution to those who shall administer the national government." But he warned that others would claim that "the people, when they make a constitution, yield all power not expressly reserved to themselves." The Federal Farmer concluded that in either case "it is mere matter of opinion and men usually take either side of the argument, as will best answer their purposes," since in doubtful cases the men who govern "construe laws and constitutions most favorably for increasing their own powers." Only a bill of rights would settle the argument in favor of the people.

The incessant call for a bill of rights could not be ignored. Facile legal arguments would not quell the growing public opposition to the Constitution shorn of a declaration of individuals' rights. If the Federalists were to win ratification and avoid recurring talk of a second Constitutional Convention, they had to commit to amending the Constitution to guarantee a bill of rights.

No one understood this better than Madison. "Let the enemies of the System wait until some experience shall have taken place, and the business will be conducted with more light as well as with less heat," Madison wrote. "In the mean time the other mode of amendments may be employed to quiet the fears of many by supplying those further guards for private rights which can do no harm to the system." [25]

By promising to propose a bill of rights, Madison won a narrow victory for ratification in Virginia. To keep his promise, Madison defeated James Monroe and won a seat as a representative to the First Congress.

Ever the consummate scholar, Madison kept a scrapbook in which he mounted clippings from all over the country telling of proposed amendments to the new constitution. Madison accumulated a list of the recommended amendments from the various ratifying conventions; nine from Massachusetts, 32 from New York.

As Madison trimmed the list and eliminated redundant rights, he faced a dilemma. Should these personal rights be woven into the text of the existing Constitution at appropriate points or should they stand apart, leaving the original document intact? He chose the latter, perhaps to show that the original was not defective; perhaps to reemphasize that the amendments stood on their own.

On June 8, 1789, Madison took the floor of Congress (then meeting in New York City) and spoke for the better part of the day in favor of nine amendments.[26] He said their passage would prove Federalists were "friends of liberty." He reminded his colleagues that Rhode Island and North Carolina had yet to ratify the Constitution because of their suspicions that "it did not contain effectual provision against encroachment on particular rights."

To those who doubted that a simple "parchment barrier" would prevent unscrupulous officials from trampling on personal rights, Madison acknowledged the vital role of the courts. "Independent tribunals of justice will consider themselves in a peculiar manner the guardians of those rights; they will be an impenetrable barrier against every assumption of power in the legislative or executive [branch]. . . ."

Madison was keenly aware that his bill of rights had to overcome the criticism that if some rights are spelled out, others may be ignored. He met this point head on:

"It has been objected against a bill of rights that, by enumerating particular exceptions to the grant of power, it would disparage those rights which were not placed in that enumeration and it might follow by implication that those rights which were not singled out, were intended to be assigned into the hands of the General Government, and were consequently insecure. This is one of the most plausible arguments I have ever heard urged against the admission of a bill of rights into this system; but, I conceive, that it may be guarded against. I have attempted it, as gentlemen may see by turning to the last clause of the fourth resolution."

That clause became the Ninth Amendment, which stated with majestic simplicity: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." [27]

Madison's proposals were taken up by a select committee which finally settled on 17 articles of amendment. The House sent them to the Senate for prompt consideration, but it was not until September 2, 1789, that the Senate took them up. Twelve amendments emerged, including all of the fundamental principles Madison had offered in June, and two others dealing with congressional salaries and apportionment of legislators, which eventually were dropped. The Bill of Rights emerged on September 25, 1789. It, too, was submited to the states for ratification and on December 15, 1791, with Madison's own Virginia as the tenth state to ratify, the Bill of Rights became part of the Constitution.

THE QUINTESSENTIAL RIGHT

If the debates over ratification and the Bill of Rights demonstrate that certain inalienable rights, which are not enumerated in the Constitution, are nevertheless protected by the Constitution, is the right of privacy among them? At one level, the question is tautological. The right of privacy is the label given to that collection of unenumerated rights which are beyond government interference. But is Bork correct when he derides the right of privacy as a "free-floating right that was not derived in a principled fashion from constitutional materials?" Those very "constitutional materials" show that he is mistaken.

To begin with, the entire Constitution is a covenant that government is granted certain delegated powers by the People and all else is retained by the People. That is the essence of the right of privacy. Hamilton made this very point in Federalist No. 84 when he wrote that "[t]he truth is, after all the declaration we have heard, that the constitution is itself in every rational sense, and to every useful purpose. A Bill of Rights." [28] Thus, if the right of privacy means the fundamental right to be let alone—to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion in our private lives—then the system of limited government juxtaposed with expansive personal liberties, enshrined in the Constitution itself, reveals the right of privacy as the quintessential constitutional right.

Other constitutional materials disclose the importance of privacy to the Founding Fathers. At a town meeting in Concord, Massachusetts on October 21, 1776, the participants issued the following resolution:

"We conceive that a Constitution in its Proper idea intends a System of Principles Established to Secure the Subject in the Possession and enjoyment of their Rights and Privileges, against any Encroachments of the Governing Party." [29]

Shortly after the Constitution was signed in Philadelphia, Madison wrote to Thomas Jefferson, who as Ambassador to France was unable to attend the convention, and specifically referred to how the Constitution would secure "private rights" from the "infinitude of legislative expedients." [30]

Likewise, Hamilton's Federalist No. 84 described the Constitution as "merely intended to regulate the general political interests of the nation" and not to regulate "every species of personal and private concerns." Hamilton acknowledged that the proposeed Bill of Rights was intended to protect those "immunities and modes of proceeding, which are relative to personal and private concerns." [31]

The framers of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights valued their privacy at least as much as we do today. Indeed, our increasingly complex society and the pervasive role of government in our daily lives forces us to tolerate a degree of public exposure that would have been intolerable 200 years ago. Madison "went to considerable lengths to see that—in life as in death—his private history would stay private." When, at the age of 32, his 16-year-old fiancé Kitty Floyd jilted him on the eve on their wedding, Madison tried to delete all written record of the event.[32]

Privacy was such a pervasive and important value to the Founding Fathers, it would no more have dawned on them to spell out its protection in the Constitution than to express the fundamental rule of Anglo-Saxon law that a man is innocent until proven guilty—a doctrine which is nowhere mentioned in the Constitution or Bill of Rights.

NATURAL LAW

This distance of 200 years separates us from the widely held moral and political philosophies which actively motivated the framers. Natural law and natural rights theories from the Greek Stoics and Roman jurists to Thomas Aquinas and John Locke, far from being antiquated philosophies, were viewed by Madison, Jefferson and others as viable systems of thought underpinning the practical structures of government outlined in the Constitution and Bill of Rights. A key element of natural law was the principle that all men, by nature and not by grant of the state, possessed those essential rights which made them human; rights which the state could not take away; rights which were inalienable.

Although the basis for natural law has ranged from physical nature, to God, to reason had to human nature, the immutable theme has been personal autonomy and individualism; what has been called "the free space" in which human dignity and happiness flourish and from which the State is excluded. Epicurus posited "the right to undisturbed, tranquil pleasure," the Stoics fought for "a private life" where happiness followed as a consequence of a dignified life and from the pride of being human. Aristotle taught the value of the individual rational humanity. Aquinas held that "human legislation" was authentic only if consonant with the strivings of human nature and human reason. Locke theorized that the original state of nature was happy and characterized by reason and tolerance; that all human beings were equal and free to pursue "life, health, liberty and possessions." Locke's theory of the "social contract" postulated that the purpose of the state was to guarantee these inalienable rights and to be guided by natural law so that human beings could achieve those pursuits.[33]

It is immediately apparent that the Declaration of Independence, the Preamble to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights flow directly and inevitably from these theories of natural law and that natural law respected privacy as the necessary component for a human being to truly enjoy life, health, liberty, property and happiness. One cannot study the political philosophies of the Founding Fathers and conclude that they intended to empower the new government to invade that natural right of privacy. On the contrary, one must conclude that the Founding Fathers were practicing what they preached and were implementing their natural law theories as part of their concrete plan to government.

The battle for ratification and the adoption of the Bill of Rights guaranteed the "Blessings of Liberty" to each generation. Not a shrunken and narrow concept of liberty, to be denied any time the majority saw fit. Not a system in which the government was presumptively right and the people were presumptively wrong. But a government that served the people; a government that guaranteed the rights of the people. Rights enumerated in the Constitution and other rights retained by the people.[34]

As Justice William Brennan has written so eloquently: "For the genius of the Constitution rests not in any static meaning it might have had in a world that is dead and gone, but in the adaptability of its great principles to cope with current problems and current needs."[35]

MIDEAST TOUR

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently the president and chief executive officer of the Champaign-Urbana News-Gazette in my State of Illinois joined Congressman TERRY BRUCE and several others on a tour through the Middle East.

John Hirschfeld wrote five-part series on his impressions, and the third part was titled, simply, "Mideast Peace Depends on Israeli Security."

I ask to print that article in the RECORD.

The material is as follows:

[From the Champaign-Urbana News-Gazette, Dec. 14, 1988]

MIDEAST PEACE DEPENDS ON ISRAELI SECURITY

As I stood atop the Golan Heights in northern Israel and looked eastward, I realized that Damascus, the capital of Syria, was only 40 kilometers away, and between Damascus and me stood at least 4,000 Syrian tanks, 4,000 Syrian armored personnel carriers and nine Syrian fighting divisions, all poised at the ready with just one thing in mind: The destruction of Israel and its annexation to Syria to form "Greater Syria."

Only 17 minutes separated Israel's border defense from one of the largest military units on alert today—the Syrian army—a military entity pledged to revenge its humiliations and defeats in the wars of 1948-49, 1967 and 1973.

And who mans those borders? Well, among others, Israel's 7th Armored Brigade, the oldest active armored brigade in the Israel Army. It is led by seasoned and dedicated career officers and supported by 18-, 19- and 20-year-old conscripts who proudly serve their country for three years on active duty, and then further proudly serve in the reserves until their 55th birthday.

All Israeli Jews, men and women alike, enter the armed forces immediately after high school. It is their way of trying to pay their debt to their country—a feeling that also once prevailed in the United States but, unfortunately, has faded into oblivion as our society advanced to prosperity.

These "kids" are professionals in every sense of the word. They are also realists, and, perhaps, somewhat fatalistic, for they understand that their mission at the border is a simple one: Hold the line at all costs for three to four hours until the Israeli reserves can reach the battlefield. Israel can mobilize its entire reserve in 2½ hours—a feat unheard of and probably unmatchable by any other military force.

The Israeli Defense Force is lean and mean. Fortunately for Israel, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Egypt realize that.

But it is peace and not war the Jews seek. They always have. On May 14, 1948, Israel declared its independence with the following words:

"We extend the hand of peace and good neighborliness to all neighboring states and their peoples and call for their cooperation and for mutual helpfulness with the independent Jewish nation in its land. The state of Israel is prepared to contribute its share in a common effort for the advancement of the entire Middle East."

Unfortunately for Israel, and for the entire free world, the hand of peace has not been grasped by the Arab world. The building of the Jewish state has been met by relentless and violent Arab opposition. Between 1948 and 1967, three wars were launched against Israel—all unprovoked—unless, like Hitler, you consider being a Jew and asking for recognition sufficient provocation.

Israel won all of those wars—and others. World opinion, however, seems on the verge of swinging against the Jewish state because it has not been able to win the peace.

It is an unfair condemnation.

Our fact-finding group spoke with village mayors, private citizens residing in Kibbutzim and Moshavim, members of the Israeli government from both sides of the aisle, past Israeli ambassadors to the United Nations, Arabs, newspaper editors who represented both the liberal and conservative viewpoints and specialists in Middle Eastern affairs—the broadest possible spectrum of thought.

All want peace! And all agree that some progress has been made. (Witness, if you will, the 1978 Camp David Accords and the 1979 Peace Treaty with Egypt.) Few, if any, however, want "peace at any price." The lesson of English Prime Minister Chamberlain at Munich in the 1930s remains very fresh in Israel's mind: One-sided concessions do not produce a lasting peace. They only whet the appetite of the avaricious. In my opinion, Israel is entitled to negotiate peace for peace, not peace for territory. The real problem, however, is that it has no one with whom to negotiate. The Lebanese government is a shambles. Syria will not respond because it is waiting to strike southward when and if it can do so with surprise and with some confidence of success. King Hussein of Jordan's hands are tied by the rest of the Arab League, and no one knows just what authority Yasser Arafat has on behalf of the Palestine Liberation Organization. We only know that he supports terrorism and has steadfastly refused to recognize Israel as a sovereign state.

No other state, large or small, would ever consider mere recognition of its right to exist a favor or a negotiable concession. Neither should Israel.

Forty years have passed since the state of Israel issued its Declaration of Independence—years marred by wars, terrorism and violence. Israel has truly been a nation under attack, both from without and within. Peace is possible, but only if the Arab world will join with Israel to make the effort.

Until they do, it behooves the United States—and all democratic countries—to back the Israelis. Their success, security and healthy existence is the linchpin to peace in the Middle East.

That, quite frankly, is the bottom line.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the reality is that we have to work out a system that does provide peace and stability to Israel and, at the same time, does that for Israel's neighbors.

This Nation has special ties with Israel. We all know that. That should not change and it will not change.

But it is good to remind ourselves that Middle East peace is not going to become a reality unless it contains provisions that provide a real sense of security for the valiant people of Israel.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate and the House to read John Hirschefeld's article.●

ELWOOD—HE'S NO DUMMY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a remarkable person from my home State of Illinois. His name is Elwood and he is the mascot for Mr. Hand's sixth grade class at Thome School in Rock Falls, IL. Elwood has traveled over 13,000 miles in the past 6 years and, as nearly as I can tell, this will be his second trip to the east coast. He has met the Lone Ranger, Ray Bradbury, cartoonist Chuck Jones, and Illinois Gov. James Thompson.

Now Elwood wants to come to Washington, DC. I have promised Doug Hand, the sixth grade class, and Elwood that I would have my picture taken with him once he got here. I also promised that I would offer the opportunity to all my colleagues in the House and Senate to do the same. Elwood is particularly interested in meeting friends of education. He helps Mr. Hand as a teaching aide in addition to being a model student. Elwood serves as a good friend who is completely nonthreatening when students are having problems or are feeling a little low.

I know there are many good friends of education who would appreciate the opportunity to meet this ambassador of good will from Illinois. I hope we can take advantage of Elwood's experience and expertise while he is here—he's no dummy.●

THE WEEKLY MAIL BANNED BY SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the Weekly Mail has been banned by the South African Government for at least 1 month, and the reason is that they are stating frankly that the apartheid system has to go, and they are pointing out the weakness of various arguments.

One of the articles of interest that recently was published should be of interest to Members of the House and Senate: "Exploding the Strategic Metals Myth" written by Steve Askin. It points out that we are not nearly as dependent on South Africa for strategic minerals as the administration suggests.

I urge my colleagues to read this article by this courageous journalist and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Weekly Mail, Sept. 2 to 8, 1988]

EXPLODING THE STRATEGIC METALS MYTH

(By Steve Askin)

The United States can easily find other sources for the "strategic minerals" it currently imports from South Africa, argues a new study by an expert on Southern African mining.

The report, by minerals economist Paul Jourdan of Harare's Institute of Mining Research, comes when some US mining officials are rethinking traditional assumptions that American strategic interests require access to South African minerals.

Minerals are a key issue in America's heated sanctions debate. An existing ban on US trade with South African government-related companies exempts 10 "strategic minerals" which the US State Department last year "certified" as essential imports from South Africa.

Legislation for an otherwise near-total ban on trade with South Africa, approved by the US House of Representatives in August and up for Senate consideration, contains a similar exemption. Conservatives in Washington have argued that strict sanctions could endanger US interests by provoking South Africa counter-sanctions in the form of a ban on mineral exports to the US.

In a study titled "US Mineral Dependence on South Africa: Exploding the Myths" Jourdan writes that some Reagan Administration claims about American import needs are so "blatantly ludicrous" as to provoke suspicion "that the apartheid regime has significant support in the State Department".

Other Southern African countries, Jourdan reports, can supply most of the 10 minerals and already export several to the US. He also sees a tragic irony in using mineral needs to oppose sanctions because, he argues, Pretoria is partly to blame for the lack of alternative sources. Jourdan estimates that South African "destabilisation;"—chiefly through violence against Angola and Mozambique—has cost Frontline states more than US $4,5-billion (R10,8-billion) in lost mine production.

He proposes a programe of "positive sanctions" to help them expand mining industries.

Even without such action, if South African minerals were cut off tomorrow, the "extra cost to the US of switching supplies would be negligible for all but two of the 10 certified minerals, Jourdan writes.

His view is echoed in a January 1988 analysis of the State Department "certification" by the US Bureau of Mines and in a June 1988 report to Congress by its General Accounting Office.

For the moment, the US can't boycott South African chromium and platinum without paying higher prices, said Jourdan. USBM agrees, but says the added cost would be high only in the case of platinum.

Jourdan also argues the South African chrome and ferrochrome can be replaced from a low cost source, if the US invested in expansion of well-developed mining and ferrochrome manufacture in Zimbabwe. The cost advantage, he says, is that neighbouring Zambia and Mozambique can supply very cheap hydropower while Mozambique has ample supplies of the particular grade of coking coal needed in making ferrochrome.

South African platinum, he adds, could be replaced by developing new mines to exploit known reserves in Zimbabwe and Botswana. Several companies, including Anglo American, are already moving to exploit the frontline states' platinum.

South African supplies of other "certified" minerals can easily and immediately be replaced, Jourdan and USBM agree. Jourdan explains that:

Two minerals are apparently "certified" only because Zairean cobalt and Zimbabwean chrysotile asbestos travel to the US via South African ports. Existing railroads and ports in frontline states are equipped to take over these shipments, Jourdan reports. The US could make cobalt supplies more secure and reduce shipping costs by stopping support for Unita violence against the Benguela railroad—the most cost-efficient cobalt export line—and pressing South Africa to do the same.

Australia and Zaire are now the main producers of industrial diamonds. If South Africa's De Beers Corporation, which controls diamond sales worldwide through the Central Selling Organisation, refuses to clearly identify the stones it sells by country of origin, the US has sufficient market clout to bypass them and buy direct from producing nations.

The world's main antimony producers, China and Bolivia, provide almost half of US imports and can replace South Africa's 14 percent share.

South Africa supplies under four percent of America's manganese ore. It is important only for ferromanganese, which the US can produce by refining imported ore in its own under-used smelters.

As rutile is one of several ores bearing titanium, it should not have been singled out as "strategic", Canada and Australia are the world's main titanium producers and their reserves can meet US demand. Additional reserves exist in the frontline states—including deposits along the Mozambique coast now being developed by an American mining company.

The US produces most of it own vanadium and can replace South African supplies, a mere nine percent of consumption from other sources.

The US doesn't need South African and alusite as it is the world's largest producer of a related mineral which can substitute for it, Kyanite.●

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I inquire of the distinguished acting Republican leader if Calendar Item No. 1 on the Legislative Calendar has been cleared on his side.

Mr. CHAFEE. It has, Mr. President.

SERVICE ON JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Item No. 1, S. Con. Res. 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 12) to allow another member of the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate to serve on the Joint Committee on Congress on the Library in place of the Chairman of the Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the concurrent resolution is considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 12

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Effective for the One Hundred First Congress, the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate may designate another member of the Committee to serve on the Joint Committee of the Congress on the Library in place of the Chairman.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO ESCORT THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort the President of the United States into the House Chamber for the joint session to be held at 9 p.m. on Thursday, February 9, 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO INDEFINITELY POSTPONE SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 6

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 6 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRECTING THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL TO TAKE CERTAIN ACTION

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader and Senator DOLE, I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 56) to direct the Senate Legal Counsel to appear as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate in David A. Clarke, et al. v. United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has expedited an appeal by the Department of Justice from a judgment of the district court for the District of Columbia holding unconstitutional a provision of the fiscal year 1989 District of Columbia Appropriations Act. The provision is entitled the "Nation's Capital Religious Liberty and Academic Freedom Act," and is popularly known, after its Senate sponsor, as the "Armstrong amendment."

The Armstrong amendment requires the District of Columbia government, as a condition of expending funds appropriated to it by the Congress, to amend its human rights law to provide that it is not an unlawful discriminatory practice for religiously affiliated educational institutions to deny benefits, services, and recognition to organizations and individuals promoting homosexuality. The amendment was enacted to reverse a portion of a recent ruling of the D.C. Court of Appeals on Georgetown University's obligation under the D.C. Human Rights Law, notwithstanding the University's religious objections, to provide facilities and services to gay student organizations. although Georgetown has settled its litigation, the amendment would provide an exemption to religiously affiliated institutions in future matters.

The members of the District of Columbia Council challenged the constitutionality of the Armstrong amendment in an action in the U.S. District Court. In an opinion issued on December 13, 1988, the district court held that Congress had unconstitutionally abridged the plaintiffs' first amendment rights to vote in accordance with their beliefs by conditioning use of appropriated funds on the District's enactment of a change to its law. The district court did not reach the Council members' claim that the Armstrong amendment violates the establishment clause of the first amendment. Nor did the court reach their claim that the Armstrong amendment violates the free speech rights of students who express certain views on homosexuality.

This resolution would direct the Senate legal counsel to appear in this litigation as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate to request the court of appeals to disapprove the district court's unprecedented restriction on the use of the appropriations power of the Congress. The Senate's brief would describe to the court of appeals the serious implications of the district court's decision to the constitutional power of the Congress to regulate through its appropriations and other powers the activities of the Federal Government.

The Senate's brief would not attempt to deal with all questions in the case. For example, the brief would not present arguments on whether the Armstrong amendment violates the establishment clause or whether it violates the free speech rights of students. Senator Armstrong is asking the court of appeals for leave to file a separate brief on those questions. The Senate's brief would not challenge the standing of the members of the District of Columbia Council to asset these underlying claims.

Neither would the Senate's brief address the appropriate balance between the values served by home rule and the special constitutional responsibilities of the Congress with respect to the Nation's Capital. Those are questions of policy which must be resolved within the Congress. Similarly, issues about the appropriations power of the Congress often present important parliamentary questions about each House's rules and precedents governing the use of authorizing legislation and appropriations. These issues are appropriately resolved within the Congress, and not by the courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 56) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 56

Whereas, in David A. Clarke, et al. v. United States of America, No. 88-5439, pending in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, the constitutionality of the Nation's Capital Religious Liberty and Academic Freedom Act, section 145 of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 1989, Pub. L. No. 100-462, 102 Stat. 2269, 2269-14 (1988), has been placed in issue;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(c), 706(a), and 713(a) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b(c), 288e(a), and 288*l*(a)(1982), the Senate may direct its Counsel to appear as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate in any legal action in which the powers and responsibilities of Congress under the Constitution are placed in issue: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to appear as amicus curiae in the name of the Senate in David A. Clarke, et al. v. United States of America to defend the Congress's exercise of its appropriations powers in section 145 of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 1989.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL RECESS OF THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution providing for the recess of the Senate until Tuesday, February 21, at 2:15 p.m., and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) providing for a conditional recess of the Senate from February 9, 1989 until February 21, 1989, and a conditional adjournment of the House from February 9, 1989, until February 21, 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) was agreed to, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 14

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses on Thursday, February 9, 1989, at the conclusion of the joint session to receive a message from the President, it stand in recess until 2:15 post meridiem on Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution; and that when the House adjourns on Thursday, February 9, 1989, it stand adjourned until 12:00 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution.

SEC. 2. The Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER TO STAR PRINT S. 306

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BENTSEN, I ask unanimous consent that S. 306, the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989, be star printed to reflect the changes I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session in order to consider the nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Coast Guard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE COAST GUARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the nominations.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Routine nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Coast Guard.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the nominations.

TERRY SAUVAIN

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased that Commander Terrence E. Sauvain has been nominated for the rank of captain in the U.S. Coast Guard Reserve.

Commander Sauvain has held a number of responsible positions in the U.S. Coast Guard since he completed initial active duty in 1964, including executive officer and then commanding officer of Coast Guard Reserve Unit 1 in Baltimore, and executive officer of Coast Guard Reserve Unit MSD Baltimore, the largest Coast Guard Reserve Unit in the Fifth Coast Guard District which at that time consisted of the States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, as well as the District of Columbia. In June 1986, he was assigned to his present position as Deputy Group Commander of Coast Guard Reserve Group Headquarters in Washington, DC.

Commander Sauvain has had an exceptionally wide variety of learning experiences in the Coast Guard Reserve, having entered the service at the bottom rung as a seaman recruit (E-1), and progressing through the reserve enlisted ranks to the rate of first class petty officer (E-6) prior to commissioning. For 13 out of the past 15 years, he has served in reserve leadership positions such as executive officer, commanding officer, or deputy group commander, in both field and headquarters units, as well as on annual active duty at marine safety and headquarters units and at the Office of the Secretary of Defense. These activities, together, with recent attendance at the strategy and policy course conducted at the Naval War College in Newport, and the reserve components national security course conducted by the Institute of Higher Defense Studies of the National Defense University have exposed him to a wide range of mobilization and mobilization planning experiences in the Coast Guard Reserve Program.

In addition to his responsibilities as a Coast Guard reservist, Terry Sauvain also serves, at my request, as the deputy staff director of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, with special responsibilities in the area of defense and military construction. Over the previous 16 years, he has served the Senate in a variety of assignments, including, at my request, service as the secretary to Senate Democrats, an elective office to which I nominated him and to which he was subsequently elected by a resolution enacted by the conference of Senate Democatic Members and then by the Members of the Senate in the 97th Congress. He discharged his many duties to the Senate leadership and the Members with courtesy, dedication, efficiency, and diligence. Not least of these duties included accompanying Members of the Senate on several senatorial delegations which traveled to China and Europe.

Terry is also in his third year of service as president of the Coast Guard chapter of the Reserve Officers Association here in Washington. In addition, he has served as a eucharistic minister at Holy Cross Church in Garrett Park. He holds a master's degree from the George Washington University and a bachelor's degree from the University of Notre Dame.

Mr. President, it has been my experience that all members of the Reserve components of the armed services, and especially a member achieving the high rank of captain in the Coast Guard Reserve, must spend considerable time away from their families in the pursuit of their military duties. This requires no small sacrifice on the part of those family members, and in this regard, Commander Sauvain's wife, Veronica; their daughter, Marie, a midshipman third class at the University of Notre Dame; their daughter Cate, an architectural student at the University of Maryland; their son, Terry, Jr., are also to be commended.

Mr. President, I am pleased to cast my vote for the confirmation of Commander Terrence E. Sauvain as captain in the U.S. Coast Guard Reserve, and I urge my colleagues to support this nomination.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, it is always a pleasure for me as the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee to bring the Coast Guard promotions list to the floor of the U.S. Senate for approval.

Today, it is more of a pleasure because one of the promotions is for Terrence E. Sauvain, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee staff who has served this Member and many others with distinction and dedication during his 15 years in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. President, I can remember clearly when Terry first came to the U.S. Senate as a clerk on the D.C. Appropriations Subcommittee in the service of Senator Birch Bayh. At that time, Terry also served as an assistant clerk for the Labor, Health and Human Services Subcommittee. In both positions, Terry manifested a tremendous compassion for the poor and underprivileged of the Nation and a real desire to help the Senate deal with pressing human needs. Terry then moved on as clerk for the State, Justice, Commerce, and Legislative Subcommittee. After serving with distinction on the Appropriations Committee, Terry became the Minority Secretary of the U.S. Senate in 1981-82 and a most able floor assistant to Senator BYRD for the last 6 years.

A native of Cleveland, a graduate of the University of Notre Dame, Terry's career in the U.S. Senate has been one of distinction, and it is with great honor today that I ask the Senate to add the rank of captain in the U.S. Coast Guard to Terry's already distinguished record. I am sure I speak for the whole Senate when I congratulate Terry for this promotion and for being named as the new deputy director of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

The nominaions considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE COAST GUARD

Coast Guard nominations beginning Henry E. Plimack, and ending Malcolm B. Playfair, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3, 1989.

Coast Guard nominations beginning Stephen D. Hathaway, and ending Robert C. Hayden, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3, 1989.

Coast Guard nominations beginning Phillip D. Miller, and ending Steven R. Godfrey, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3, 1989.

Coast Guard nominations beginning Wendy Abrisz, and ending Lawrence J. Zacher, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3, 1989.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a motion to reconsider en bloc be laid upon the table and that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, pursuant to the order of the Senate of January 24, 1901, appoints the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] to read Washington's Farewell Address on February 22, 1989.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, pursuant to Public Law 96-388, as amended by Public Law 97-84, appoints the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council.

APPOINTMENT BY THE MAJORITY LEADER

That concludes the announcements that the Chair has to make at this time.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 8:30 P.M.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 8:30 p.m. on tomorrow, Thursday, February 9, 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE LEADERS

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Thursday, the time for the two leaders be reduced to 1 minute each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent there be a period for morning business not to exceed 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I announce on behalf of the majority leader that tomorrow evening the Senate will convene at 8:30 p.m. and at 8:35 p.m. will assemble as a body and proceed to the House Chamber to meet in joint session to hear the President of the United States address the Nation.

Upon completion of the joint session, pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 14, the Senate will recess until Tuesday, February 21, 1989, at 2:15 p.m. On that Tuesday, it is the hope of the majority leader that the Senate could consider S. 20, the Whistleblower Protection Act. We are at this time, I am advised by the majority leader, attempting to clear a unanimous-consent request for the consideration of that bill.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 8:30 P.M.

Mr. DIXON. Now, Mr. President, if the acting Republican leader has no further business, and if no Senator is seeking recognition, then, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 8:30 p.m. on Thursday, February 9, 1989.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 4:52 p.m., recessed until tomorrow, Thursday, February 9, 1989, at 8:30 p.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, February 9, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

S-116, Capitol

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, February 9, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

His Holiness, the Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of all Armenians, Vasken I from Etchmiadzin, joined by His Holiness, Karekin II, Catholicos of the Great House of Cilicia, offered the following prayer:

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to You, in prayer, for the gift of vision and courage to the leaders of our nations who serve mankind.

Bless our leaders with wisdom, to make wise decisions, and to lead us all to the power of love, more than to the temptations of power.

May we always share with each other our best and brightest, as did our American brothers and sisters, in reaching out so graciously and generously to the victims of the earthquake in Armenia.

We, Catholicos of all Armenians, come from Armenia, and the Holy Cathedral of Etchmiadzin, and thank the American people and the President for this outpouring generosity of good men and women, who practice the teaching of the Bible, that it is better to give than to receive.

Grant that our nations use prosperity and freedom for the establishment of peace and human dignity in this world.

Lord, enable us to have the vision and spiritual courage to imbue every decision with truth, charity, and stewardship, that our nations may be forever a blessing to all mankind.

In Your holy name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE] kindly lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. ROSE led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed concurrent resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

HIS HOLINESS, THE SUPREME PATRIARCH AND CATHOLICOS OF ALL ARMENIANS, VASKEN I FROM ETCHMIADZIN

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, our prayer this morning was delivered by the spiritual leader of the 8-million member Armenian Orthodox Church, Vasken I.

The Armenian people have long been called the first nation to embrace the Christian faith; their church is over 1,600 years old.

A leader of his church for nearly 35 years, Vasken I is the 161st in a succession of Armenian patriarchs that began in the year 301 A.D.

It is of enormous significance to the Members and the history of this Congress that Vasken I has addressed us this morning.

I first met the Catholicos during my recent trip to Soviet Armenia with our colleagues Mr. BONIOR, Mr. TORRICELLI, and Mr. DORNAN. By all accounts, he has been a gift from God amidst the suffering visited upon his people by the December earthquake in Armenia.

As he has offered prayers for us, we extend to him our condolences for the losses suffered by his people and our thanks for honoring us with his presence.

Mr. Speaker, I include biographical information in the RECORD.

HIS HOLINESS VASKEN I—BIOGRAPHY

At the height of World War II, a young man without the benefit of a formal theological education responded to the call of God and of his people by undertaking a perilous journey to receive ordination as a priest of the Armenian Church. Twelve short years later he was consecrated as the one hundred thirtieth occupant of the Throne of St. Gregory The Illuminator. And today we are assembled to convey to him our love, respect, support and admiration. He is our beloved Catholicos, His Holiness Vasken I, Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of All Armenians.

It was in 1943, after the death of its primate that the Diocese of Rumania was left without a leader and without a successor. As the community prepared to cope with the difficult times ahead, a young man responded to God's call and under the most difficult conditions, attributable primarily to the Nazi occupation of Europe, traveled to Athens to receive ordination to the sacred priesthood of the Armenian Church. The young man was Levon Karapet Baljian renamed Vasken.

After ordination he returned to his native Rumania where during his first celebration of the Divine Liturgy he said, "from this day forth a new life begins in me, a life that will be dedicated to the church and to our people. May God be with me."

His Holiness is a living example of self-sacrifice and dedication to the Gospel, the Armenian Church and the Armenian people. On many occasions he has reflected on his motivation to serve and to be an exemplar. "The ultimate example of performing good works is Christ Himself who surrendered His life for the salvation of mankind. Christ, the Son of God and the Son of man is also the ultimate example of salvation. The eternal truth set forth by Him is to be found not only in His words and in His revolutionary ideas, but also in the example of His own life."

It is Christ's example that inspired His Holiness from childhood to search for new challenges to fulfill His need to serve His people. He was profoundly influenced by His parents, Abraham, a humble shoemaker in his native Rodosto (Turkey) who emigrated to Bucharest, Rumania in 1898 to flee from the oppression of Sultan Abdul Hamid, and Siranoush, a young teacher, also from Rodosto, who moved to Bucharest with her family in 1907. Their marriage was blessed with the birth of their only child, Levon Karapet, on September 20, 1908.

Upon graduation from high school in 1928, Levon became a teacher in the Armenian School of Bucharest. Simultaneously he continued his higher education at the University of Bucharest graduating in 1936 with a degree in both pedagogy and psychology. The topic of his dissertation was "The Question of Discipline in Education." Throughout this period and beyond, Levon maintained a high profile in the cultural life of the community.

He founded and edited a monthly magazine, "Herg" (Harvest) in 1937. In its initial editorial he wrote, "To think—this is what we want to learn. We want to learn with our readers, but most importantly, with our young readers. This is our purpose." Indeed, concern for young people and their healthy growth in terms of both intellect and soul have remained in the forefront of His Holiness' thinking. To that end he has authored many articles, among them: "The Concept of Individuality" (1938); "The Armenians of Musa Dagh in Franz Werfel's Novel" (1940); "Khrimian Hairig as an Educator" (1943).

In 1945, while ministering to the spiritual needs of the Armenian community of Bucharest, the young clergyman was distressed that many parishioners could not fully participate in the Divine Liturgy due to their inability to understand the church's liturgical language. Accordingly, Vasken Vardapet wrote a book, "The Divine Liturgy" wherein he stated: "The majority of our people who attend church do not read the Holy Scriptures and do not understand at all what is read in church. Moreover, the majority of our people, and especially our younger generation, do not comprehend the essence of our liturgical services." It was during this period that Vasken Vardapet enrolled in the School of Theology of the University of Bucharest.

During his first visit to Holy Etchmiadzin in 1945, he was overwhelmed by his presence in the midst of the spiritual center of the Armenian Church. It confirmed for him that he had indeed responded to God's call when he received ordination to the priesthood. Thereafter, Divine intervention guided his ascendancy in the hierarchy of the Armenian Church. He was elected Primate of 1955, the Diocese of Bulgaria elected him Primate as well.

Following the death of Catholicos George VI, the National Ecclesiastical Assembly convened at Holy Etchmiadzin and on September 30, 1955, elected as Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of All Armenians, the youthful Bishop Vasken Baljian. He was consecrated as Catholicos two days later. Well aware of the responsibilities and challenges of His office, He said, "I bowed before my destiny and accepted the call to be the chief servant of the church of our fathers."

The reign of His Holiness Vasken I has been challenging, yet through dedication and wisdom He has provided enlightened leadership and guidance to our church during one of its many difficult periods. His is an historic perspective: "Everytime, when faced with an important issue, we have turned our thoughts to our predecessors and reached our decision in communion with them."

His Holiness is by far the most traveled Catholicos having made over fifty pontifical visits to communities outside Armenia. A few months after His consecration He traveled to Antelias, Lebanon to preside over the election of a successor to the See of Cilicia. An unfortunate turn of events left the National Assembly in disarray and resulted in His Holiness' departure. The election and the subsequent course of events emanating from the See of Cilicia have been the greatest source of pain and anguish for His Holiness. However, He has never ceased pursuing the means to overcome this disharmony in the Armenian Church.

In 1963, His Holiness became the first Catholicos of All Armenians to visit Jerusalem in over 300 years. Likewise, in 1970 He became the first Catholicos of All Armenians to visit The Vatican where He met with Pope Paul VI. He has maintained close relations with other leaders in Christendom including The Archbishop of Canterbury, The Bishop of Rome, The Patriarchs of His Holiness has presided over the construction, renovation and/or restoration of the Cathedral of Holy Etchmiadzin, the Veharan, the living quarters of the clergy, the facilities at Biurakan, numerous churches throughout Armenia and the magnificent museum of Etchmiadzin. It is appropriate that His Holiness is often referred to as "Vasken The Builder," an honor previously bestowed on Catholicos Nersess III (641-661).

His concern for the lack of adequate Christian literature in Armenia, prompted His Holiness to establish the Holy Etchmiadzin Press, the equipment for which was donated by the Armenian community of America in 1962. In addition to many other publications, "Etchmiadzin" the official monthly publication of the Holy See is produced here as was a new translation (Eastern Dialect) of the New Testament.

As articulated by His Holiness, the primary goal of the Armenian Church is to be the true messenger of the Gospel and to herald the Good News of Jesus Christ to the Armenian people. It is not surprising therefore, that the theological education of future generations of our clergy is of paramount concern to Him. He has been totally supportive of seminaries (particularly, the seminary at Etchmiadzin) in terms of curriculum, staff and facilities and after years of tireless effort, the fruits of His labor are being realized through the young, dedicated an intellectually qualified clergy who are completing their theological training each year.

Now in the thirty-third year of his Catholicosate, His Holiness is the seventh longest reigning Catholicos in history and the longest reigning since the seventeenth century. The third visit of His Holiness to our diocese is cause for unbounded spiritual joy. We offer Him our filial love and pray that His continuing guidance and leadership will usher in a return to the canonical and traditional structure, and character of the Armenian Church—one flock and one shepherd.

HIS HOLINESS KAREKIN II, CATHOLICOS OF THE GREAT HOUSE OF CILICIA, BEIRUT, LEBANON

His Holiness Karekin II is the spiritual leader of the Great House of Cilicia of the Armenian Apostolic Church. The Pontiff is the highest official of the Armenian Church outside of the Soviet Union.

His Holiness was elected Catholicos in 1977 after serving as Archbishop and Pontifical Legate of the Eastern Prelacy of the Armenian Apostolic Church of America. His Holiness has held every major position within the church, including archbishop, bishop, and senior archimendrite. He is presently one of three presidents of the Middle East Council of Churches, has served as director of the Cilician Seminary in Beirut, and as editor of the monthly church periodical, HASK. In addition, His Holiness is the author of more than a dozen published books and articles.

The 56-year-old pontiff graduated with honors from Antelias Seminary in 1952, and received his B. Litt (OXON) from Oxford University in 1959. His Holiness was born in 1932 in Kessab, an Armenian Village north of Syria, and is fluent in both English and French.

His Holiness Catholicos Karekin II, baptismal name Neshan, was born in Kessab (Syria), on August 27, 1932. After attending the United Armenian Elementary School in Kessab, young Neshan was admitted to the Antelias Seminary in October 1946. He was ordained deacon on May 29, 1949, by the late Bishop Terenig Poladian, Dean of the Seminary. He graduated from the Seminary with full honors in June 1952.

He was ordained as a celibate priest on September 28, 1952, and was renamed Karekin in memory of the late Catholicos Karekin I Hovsepian. He was elevated to the rank of Vardapet on June 5, 1955, upon presentation of his doctoral thesis on "The Theology of the Armenian Church according to Liturgical Hymns." Father Karekin assumed the duties of supervisor and member of the Faculty of Antelias Seminary. He has signed numerous articles and studies on religious armenological, philosophical, ethical, and literary issues and subjects in HASK monthly, the official organ of the Holy See of the Catholicosate of Cilicia. He is very fluent in foreign languages, particularly French and English, and has always shown keen interest in inter-Church relations or ecumenical concerns.

He was among the very few members of the Religious Order of Antelias, who shouldered responsible administrative and monastic duties during the stormy days that characterized the election of the late Catholicos Zareh I. He was a close associate of the late Zareh Catholicos and in 1956 he was appointed as Dean of the Cilician Seminary.

From 1957-1959, Father Karekin studied Theology at Oxford University in Great Britain. After successfully completing the two-year course, he received his B. LITT. (OXON) upon presentation of his comprehensive scholarly thesis on "The Council of Chalcedon and the Armenian Church," which was published in London by S.P.C.K. in 1965 and reprinted in New York in 1976.

On his return from Oxford in January 1960, he resumed his leadership position as Dean of the Seminary. Under his dynamic leadership and wise guidance and inspired by his impeccable and exemplary character, new generations of celibate priests augmented the ranks of the Cilician Religious Order.

During these years, Father Karekin attended numerous ecumenical conferences, consultations and meetings as the representative of the Great House of Cilicia. Following the election of Catholicos Khoren I on May 5, 1963, he organized historical Pontifical visits to Athens, Vatican, Lisbon (Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation), London (Canterbury), Geneva (World Council of Churches), Venice and Vienna (Mekhitarist Fathers).

As one of the initiators of the "Ecumenical" movement within the Armenian Apostolic Church, he has regularly attended inter-Church conferences since 1955 and through his efforts the Holy See of Cilicia became a member of the World Council of Churches, in August 1962. He has attended the World Council of Churches General Assemblies in New Delhi, India, in 1961; in Uppsala, Sweden, in 1968; in Nairobi, Kenya in 1975 and in Vancouver, Canada, in 1983.

As an observer, he has also attended the Second Vatican Council in 1963-65 and the Conference of Lambeth in 1968. In Uppsala, he was elected member of the Central and Executive Committees of the World Council of Churches and, following the Nairobi Assembly he was elected Vice-Chairman of the Council. He was one of the organizers of the Addis Ababa Conference of Heads of Oriental Orthodox Churches.

In recognition and appreciation of his prolific activities, he was elevated to the rank of Senior Archimandrite on June 16, 1963, and was consecrated as Bishop on January 19, 1964, by Catholicos Khoren I. He was granted the rank of Archbishop on April 26, 1973.

In 1963 he founded the Armenian Church University Student Association (ACUSA), because he strongly believed in the formation of the youth for leadership and involvement in religious and cultural life.

He has lectured on the theology, literature, history and culture also at the Palanjian College in Beirut, at Beirut College for Women (B.U.C.), at the American University of Beirut (A.U.B.). He has also delivered a series of lectures in Rumania upon the invitation of His Holiness, Patriarch Justinian of Rumanian Orthodox Church.

On February 24, 1971, Bishop Karekin was elected Prelate of the Irano-Indian Diocese in Julfa, Isfahan (Iran). Here he promoted religious and cultural activities which greatly contributed to the renewal of spiritual and cultural life of the Diocese, particularly among the youth.

On June 21, 1973, Bishop Karekin was appointed Pontifical Legate of the Eastern Prelacy of the Armenian Apostolic Church of America and later was elected Primate of the Eastern Prelacy. He worked diligently in promoting various activities and services in the United States and Canada for the benefit of the people, particularly the young generation. He played a decisive role in organizing the Lebanon fund-raising drive during the troubled years of 1976-77.

His Holiness, Catholicos Karekin II has made four pilgrimages to the Mother See of Holy Etchmiadzin in Soviet Armenia, and has witnessed the great accomplishments and developments of Holy Etchmiadzin and the Fatherland. His most recent trip to Armenia was in December, 1988, following the earthquake, offering his condolences and assistance to His Holiness Vazken I.

On May 22, 1977, he was elected Catholicos, head of the Armenian Church under the jurisdiction of the Catholicosate of Cilicia. As long as the ailing Catholicos Khoren I was in life, the newly elected Catholicos Karekin used the title of Catholicos Coadjutor. Since the passing of Khoren I, on February 1983, he is called Catholicos of Cilicia.

In the last 11 years, he has given a new stimulus to the work of the Armenian Church in the fields of Christian education both for children in schools and for adults, literature through publications, cultural activities, leadership training, particularly through the promotion of the Cilician Seminary, social work, ecumenical relations, and pastoral visits to various dioceses.

In the last few years he has undertaken extensive Pontifical visits to his Dioceses of the Cilician See, Lebanon, Syria, Cyprus, United States and Canada. He has also undertaken ecumenical visits: to His Holiness Pope John Paul II and the Roman Catholic Church, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches in Switzerland, the Lutheran Church of Denmark, the Lutheran churches in West Germany, to the Australian Council of Churches in Sydney, Melbourne and Canberra as Head of the Middle East Council of Churches' delegation, to Pope Shenouda III during the Executive Committee of the M.E.C.C. in Egypt.

Presently he is one of the three Presidents of the Middle East Council of Churches.

If one could describe him in one sentence one could say: "He is a man of renewal through his dedication to the youth and all such activities that tend to keep fresh and operative the breath of God and the spirit of the Armenian nation in the present-day life of the Armenian Church and people within the family of and in fellowship with Churches and Nations."

THE SUPREME PATRIARCH AND CATHOLICOS OF ALL ARMENIANS, VASKEN I FROM ETCHMIADZIN

(Mr. PASHAYAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to welcome his Holiness Vasken I, Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of All Armenians. His visit to our country is to seek a unity of efforts in the American-Armenian community in the rebuilding of the devastated areas in Armenia. On Saturday in New York City, he will join with His Holiness Karekin II, Catholicos of the Great House of Cilicia, to present plans for the reconstruction of northwestern Armenia in general, and the city of Stepanavan in particular. I join with all in wishing him well on his mission.

STOP BASHING SPEAKER WRIGHT AND THE CONGRESS

(Mr. McCLOSKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, recent months and days have seen a frenzied mania of Congress-bashing, surely a time-honored tradition in our great Nation; however, like anything else, it can be overdone.

In the unfolding of this grueling ordeal, no person has been treated more shabbily or unfairly than Speaker WRIGHT.

The Speaker at all times in this controversy has been motivated by the welfare of the Nation and a concern for the welfare of the Members of the House.

Speaker WRIGHT took a recommendation of President Reagan, subsequently endorsed by President Bush and tried with bipartisan leadership cooperation to expedite it through the House.

When overwhelming negative public sentiment and House opposition arose, he did the right thing and allowed a vote. If he had not, as some would have suggested, things would have been much worse for all of us.

Speaker WRIGHT's service in the House is characterized by courage, compassion, vision, and intellect. To unjustly demean a leader is to demean this great House.

Let us get on with the pressing business we were sent here to decide.

FEDERAL INTERFERENCE IN LOCAL TRANSPORTATION PRIORITIES SHOULD BE REPEALED

(Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to repeal section 329 of the fiscal year 1989 Department of Transportation appropriations bill which prohibits Federal funding for planning, design, construction, or approval of an interchange between Interstate 66 and a proposed Route 234 bypass in Prince William County, VA, which is located in my district.

The original purpose of this language was to preclude development of a proposed mall on a tract of land adjacent to the Manassas National Battlefield Park. However, separate legislation regarding this development was subsequently passed by the 100th Congress and enacted into law as part of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 [TMRA].

While the funding prohibition in section 329 expires in 2 years, it could block one of the most important transportation improvements in Prince William County—the Route 324 bypass—which has been planned in the county for 15 years and is central to the county's long-range transportation and economic development plan.

The transportation situation in the county is critical, and the bypass is needed now, with or without the construction of new developments. In order for this bypass to work, it obviously must interchange with I-66 at some point.

In addition, in order to even consider closing old Route 234 to through traffic in the park—as provided in the provisions of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988—the bypass will have to be built, as Route 234 is a major north-south commuter road. With or without the closing of old route 234 through the park, the proposed 234 bypass would greatly reduce traffic through the park, to the park's great benefit.

Finally, Prince William County recently adopted a $66 million bond referendum which included initial funding for the proposed 234 bypass. However, the 2-year moratorium on Federal funding for the planning, design, construction, and approval of an interchange between the 234 bypass and I-66 as provided in section 329 of the fiscal year 1989 Transportation appropriations bill creates uncertainty as to whether or not the proposed bypass can go forward.

For these reasons, I am introducing legislation today to repeal section 329 of the fiscal year 1989 Transportation appropriations bill in order to permit Prince William County to proceed with its transportation priorities without undue interference by the Federal Government.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 705

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, my name is listed as a cosponsor of H.R. 705 without authorization, and I ask unanimous consent that it be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF PUYALLUP LAND CLAIMS SETTLEMENT LEGISLATION

(Mr. DICKS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which is cosponsored by the entire Washington State congressional delegation, authorizing the terms of an historic Indian land claims settlement agreement reached in Washington State last year.

After years of negotiations between the Puyallup Tribe of Washington, local governments, landowners, and private businesses, a settlement agreement was achieved which will resolve, equitably, the longstanding claims the Tribe has had to lands in and around the Port of Tacoma.

This agreement is significant because it will avoid the costly litigation and delays that threatened to constrain the development of one of the fastest growing ports on the west coast. In this agreement, everyone is a winner. Landowners, including local governments, will have clearer title to property; jurisdictional issues will be resolved; and, the agreement provides substantial and enduring sustenance to the Puyallup Tribe. The tribe now has a stake in the economic development of this region, and through job assistance will be able to provide employment for tribal members.

The legislation we are introducing today will authorize the Federal share of the settlement, but I want to emphasize that the local governments and entities involved in this settlement will be contributing over 50 percent of the funds necessary to implement this historic agreement.

HE WHO LIVES IN GLASS HOUSES SHOULD NOT THROW STONES

(Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, proclaiming acid rain to be its No. 1 environmental problem, Canada has lobbied for more stringent emission controls in the United States.

One might conclude that Canada has its own environmental house in order. It does not.

Canada has not implemented the stringent environmental regulations it advocates for the United States according to a study prepared for DOE.

According to the report:

Although Canada has experienced a significant decline in SO_2 emissions over the past decade, most of the reductions can be attributed to socioeconomic factors. Some of these reductions, therefore, may be of a short-term nature and may not reflect permanent reductions mandated by strict environmental regulations such as the U.S. Clean Air Act.

Smelters are the largest source of SO_2 emissions in Canada. It is not a coincidence that as strikes and production cutbacks within the smelting industry reduced production, emissions also declined.

The electric utility industry, however, has had an increase in SO_2 emissions, caused primarily by the increased use of coal. The Canadian electric utility industry has no scrubbers on any of their coal-fired powerplants.

Canada has no history of stringent environmental regulations at either the Federal or provincial levels. Provincial compliance with Federal standards is voluntary, and compliance is questionable because emissions are reported by the emitters, with no oversight.

The Canadian Clean Air Act sets only voluntary guidelines. Where the Government does have regulatory authority they have not chosen to exercise it. While the Federal Government has the authority to regulate the sulfur content of fuels, they have not done so.

The projected increase in coal consumption in Canada will result in increased SO_2 emissions unless Canada implements controls such as those already in place in the United States.

"He who lives in glass houses, should not throw stones." Canada should take heed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to conduct a small amount of business, and then we will return to 1-minute speeches.

PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL RECESS OF THE SENATE FROM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1989, TO TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1989, AND A CONDITIONAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE FROM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1989, TO TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1989

The SPEAKER laid before the House the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) providing for a conditional recess of the Senate from February 9, 1989, until February 21, 1989, and a conditional adjournment of the House from February 9, 1989, until February 21, 1989.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 14

Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution; and that when the House adjourns on Thursday, February 9, 1989, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, February 21, 1989, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution.

SEC. 2. The majority leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the minority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
February 7, 1989.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received at 4:17 p.m. on Tuesday, February 7, 1989 the following message from the Secretary of the Senate: That the Senate passed without amendment, H.J. Res. 129.

With great respect, I am,
Sincerely yours,
DONNALD K. ANDERSON,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled joint resolution on Tuesday, February 7, 1989:

H.J. Res. 129. Disapproving the increases in executive, legislative, and judicial salaries recommended by the President under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE INSTITUTE OF AMERICAN INDIAN AND ALASKA NATIVE CULTURE AND ARTS DEVELOPMENT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1505 of Public Law 99-498, the Chair appoints to the Board of Trustees of the Institute of American Indian and Alaska Native Culture and Arts Development the following Members on the part of the House:

Mr. KILDEE of Michigan; and
Mr. YOUNG of Alaska.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE JOHN F. KENNEDY CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to section 2(a), Public Law 85-874, as amended, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Trustees of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts the following Members on the part of the House:

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF GALLAUDET UNIVERSITY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to section 103, Public Law 99-371, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Trustees of Gallaudet University the following Members on the part of the House: Mr. BONIOR of Michigan; and Mr. GUNDERSON of Wisconsin.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1989

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday, February 22, 1989.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS AND APPOINT COMMISSIONS, BOARDS, AND COMMITTEES NOTWITHSTANDING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding any adjournment of the House until Tuesday, February 21, 1989, the Speaker to be authorized to accept resignations, and to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues in the House in commemorating February as "Black History Month." The contributions and achievements of many black Americans deserve this recognition.

As a native of Louisville and Jefferson County, KY, who has the honor of representing my hometown in Congress, I am especially proud to say that many black persons of talent and accomplishment live in my district.

One such individual is my friend and former colleague in the Kentucky General Assembly, State senator, Georgia Powers.

In 1967, Senator Powers and I were elected to the Kentucky Senate. Georgia was not only the first black person to be elected to the Kentucky Senate, but also the first woman.

While in the senate, Georgia was a strong proponent of civil rights for the underprivileged and minorities. She was a sponsor of the Kentucky's equal rights amendment and worked to eliminate race identification from drivers' licenses. Georgia was chairman of the senator's labor and industry committee and was considered by many observers to be the most prominent spokesperson in the general assembly for minorities and women.

After 20 years of dedication and hard work in the Kentucky Senate, Georgia Powers has retired from public office to pursue other goals, including writing and lecturing.

I am proud to have started my political career the very day this great Kentuckian did. And, I am proud to honor Senator Powers' many accomplishments as a public official, as a woman, and as a black citizen of Louisville and Jefferson County.

PULLING PUBLIC HOUSING OUT OF DESPAIR

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I will soon introduce legislation with partners on both sides of the aisle to encourage tenant management and tenant home ownership in our Nation's public housing projects. My legislation will help to bring public housing residents back into the mainstream of American life and to reignite the dream of home ownership in our inner cities.

A few years ago, public housing residents lived in despair. They were trapped in environments of fear and hopelessness. But a few residents in a few projects had a dream; a dream of bettering themselves and their neighborhoods. And today, because of the efforts of people like Kimi Gray in Washington, DC's Kenilworth-Parkside housing project, tenant management corporations have grown up in over 40 cities in the United States.

Where tenant management has been successful, crime, drug and welfare dependency, and operating costs have been dramatically reduced. At the same time employment, rent collections and community self-esteem have increased.

When I met with Kimi Gray in January, she banged her fist on my desk and told me, "You politicians have to stop thinking of us residents as the problem. Why don't you start thinking of us as the solution?"

She's right. My bill, without reducing the low-income family housing stock by one unit, lets public housing residents demonstrate that they are indeed the solution. I invite my colleagues to join me by cosponsoring the Public Housing Resident Empowerment Act of 1989.

NO GAS TAX INCREASE FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

(Mr. ANDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, known to all of us as AASHTO, recently published a very informative booklet opposing the use of Federal motor fuels taxes for deficit reduction. The information provided clearly shows that the use of gasoline and diesel taxes to reduce the deficit would be regressive, unfair to rural commuters who do not have access to mass transit, and harmful to our economy. I urge my colleagues to join the bipartisan leadership of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and more than 120 cosponsors in support of House Resolution 41, opposing the use of motor fuels taxes for deficit reduction.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the AASHTO booklet as well as the list of 121 cosponsors of House Resolution 41.

NO USE OF MOTOR FUEL TAXES FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

(American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials)

WHAT DO STATE TRANSPORTATION PROFESSIONALS THINK ABOUT USING THE MOTOR FUEL TAX TO REDUCE THE DEFICIT?

"The federal highway motor fuel taxes are collected from highway users for the sole support of transportation programs, and revenues collected are dedicated to this purpose. Motor fuel taxation should continue to be used only to support transportation, and should not be employed for deficit reduction or general government purposes.

"Similarly, aviation user fees are collected from air passengers for the sole support of the nation's aviation programs, are dedicated to this purpose as defined in the aviation authorizing legislation enacted by Congress, and should not be employed for deficit reduction or general government purposes."—AASHTO Policy Committee December 4, 1988.

WHY?

A major increase in motor fuel taxes for deficit reduction purposes would damage, not improve, the nation's economy.

A recent study by the Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates estimates that a gasoline tax of 10 cents per gallon would reduce the Gross National Product by $10 billion in the first year alone, eliminating 80,000 jobs, and cutting automobile production and housing construction.

A motor fuel tax increase would not reduce the deficit in proportion to the size of the increased tax levy, because of the damage such a large motor fuel tax increase would do to our economy.

According to a study by Data Resources, Inc., a private consulting group, each dollar of additional fuel tax revenue will reduce the deficit by only 27 cents.

A large motor fuel tax increase for deficit reduction purposes would act to cut overall transportation funds at all levels of government, at a time when increases are needed to keep America moving.

The U.S. Department of Energy estimates that a tax increase of 25 cents per gallon on motor fuels would decrease 1990 fuel tax revenues by $416 million at the federal level, because of a drop in fuel consumption. State fuel tax revenue is estimated to decline by twice that amount, resulting in a combined loss of transportation revenues of an estimated $1.2 billion per year.

States rely heavily on highway user fees, such as motor fuel taxes, to fund state transportation program. In 1987, highway user fees accounted for 81.2 percent of the $32.8 billion total of state highway receipts, an increase of some $1.3 billion in user fees over the 1986 level.

Use of the motor fuel tax for deficit reduction places a heavier burden on those with low incomes, who devote a larger share of their income to motor fuel purchase than do the wealthy.

The House Public Works and Transportation Committee recently reported that 78 percent of Americans earning less than $10,000 a year commute to work by private motor vehicle. These low-income gasoline users would pay more than three times as much for deficit reduction relative to their income as more affluent motorists.

Because residents in larger, more rural states must drive many more miles than those living in compact urban states, they will be unfairly called upon to pay more per person to reduce the national debt owed by all Americans.

For example, the average motorist in Hawaii uses only 568 gallons of gasoline per year, according to the U.S. Department of Transportation. An average motorist in Wyoming uses 949 gallons of gasoline per year, and would pay 1.7 times as much for deficit reduction.

A PLEDGE TO KEEP

The Federal-aid Highway Program has helped America constuct the finest highway system in the world, on an essentially pay-as-you go basis. Key to this success has been a long standing compact between highway users and the federal and state governments, whereby motor fuel taxes are levied and collected with the pledge that revenues from the taxes will be used only for transportation purposes.

If federal motor fuel taxes should be employed for deficit reduction or other purposes, it would break this long standing compact, do harm to the nation's transportation system, and be unfair to highway users.

The nation's transportation needs exceed available funding, and for this reason alone the motor fuel tax should not be taken for other purposes. Beyond this, utilizing motor fuel taxes for deficit reduction purposes unfairly shifts the deficit burden onto highway users in those states where highway distances are long.

Using dedicated user fees for deficit balancing purposes has the potential to destroy public confidence in federal and state transportation programs supported by these fees.

Funded in 1914, AASHTO is comprised of the departments concerned with transportation and highways in the 50 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

WESTERN HISTORIC TRAILS CENTER

(Mr. LIGHTFOOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to commemorate an historic and cultural event like no other—the 19th century westward movement of people in the United States. This event played a tremendous role in shaping the postcolonial history of the United States. The entire movement took place on a system of trails that currently is being marked and developed by the National Park System.

Presently there is no educational facility or program in the Nation designed to interpret and commemorate this era in our history. With the need for such a central national facility clearly demonstrated, I am introducing legislation to establish a Western Historic Trails Center at Council Bluffs, IA. Council Bluffs marks the convergence of the Mormon Trail, the Lewis and Clark Trail, and the California-Oregon Trail.

Studies show more people went through this area on their treks westward than any other point in the country. Lewis and Clark, Prince Maximilian and Karl Bodmer, and the Mormons, along with thousands of nameless travelers of the Oregon Trail, share a common bond in their routes across the American Continent: their separate paths converged and crossed in southern Iowa on the banks of the Missouri River near the area now known as the Council Bluffs-Omaha region.

The legislation I am introducing is similar to legislation introduced jointly in the House and Senate in the last Congress creating the Western Historic Trails Center, but has been scaled back to reduce the Federal cost by one-half and limit the Federal role in operation of the Center. The proposal has tremendous local and State support and commitment, and was the subject of hearings in the Senate last year. I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this outstanding proposal.

OREGON FARM BUREAU

(Mr. BUSTAMANTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a disturbing story appeared on the national news wire. While testifying before the Oregon State Senate, an Oregon Farm Bureau official said that the bureau was opposed to an increase in the minimum wage because it would attract more migrant workers to his State.

The official told the State Senate that this could create what he called a "mini-San Antonio between Salem and Portland."

As a Representative of San Antonio, as an Hispanic Member of this body, and as a former migrant worker who spent many a summer picking crops in Oregon, I take great offense at this statement and the reasoning that the State farm bureau used to arrive at its position. Their argument is blatantly anti-Hispanic and is insulting to an honorable group of men, women, and children who provide an essential service to the State of Oregon, and to our Nation's agricultural economy.

When my family traveled to Oregon each summer to pick beans and strawberries, we were not some plague that had to be controlled. We were hard working American citizens, and we expected to be treated with the same respect that is owed to all people.

The vast majority of migrant workers are Hispanic. They provide a service to the agricultural community that few others are willing to. These hard working people deserve the right to perform their job without discrimination.

I rise to affirm our uncompromising opposition to the kind of reasoning used by the Oregon Farm Bureau—for when we discriminate against any group of Americans, our entire Nation suffers.

GRIDLOCK RELIEF FOR INTERSTATES PROGRAM [GRIP]

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will help urban and suburban areas of the country cope with increasing levels of traffic congestion on the Federal Interstate System. Our colleague, Senator JOHN WARNER, is introducing an identical bill today in the other body.

The legislation we are introducing today—the Gridlock Relief for Interstates Program [GRIP] would create a new category of Federal highway funding to expand the capacity of heavily traveled portions of the Federal Interstate Highway System located in suburban and urban areas of the country. Two billion dollars a year would be made available nationwide for the program.

Funds authorized under our legislation could also be used for construction of noise walls or other sound abatement devices, acquisition of rights-of-way for construction of mass transit facilities, and acquisition of land for park-and-ride type facilities.

The type of funding program we have proposed is desperately needed throughout the Nation.

In the Washington, DC, metropolitan area, for example, interstate highways such as I-66, I-395, I-495, and even I-95 near complete gridlock during peak travel periods. The result is that commuters cannot get to work and interstate commerce cannot flow.

Funds provided under the GRIP legislation, however, could be used to widen I-66 from the Capital Beltway to Prince William County where virtual gridlock occurs every day during rush hours. Bottlenecks on the Capital Beltway, I-495, could be eliminated. The Wilson Bridge, I-95, could be widened or even double decked.

Northern Virginia and other urban-suburban areas of the country are facing tremendous needs in the area of transportation improvements. Our legislation addresses these needs in a way that will bring relief not only to northern Virginia, but to other regions of the country as well without penalizing rural or less populated areas.

BEGIN ETHICS WITH TRUTH IN BUDGETING

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the President is calling upon the Congress to enact reforms in our ethics laws which will make our Government more deserving of the American people. I would like to call upon the President and the Congress to begin this reform by telling the American people the truth about the budget deficit. There is no way to address the problem of the deficits unless the people understand it, and they will not understand it until they are told the truth about it.

The current deficit, according to the Federal funds deficit, actually stands at $252.9 billion as opposed to the somewhere around $155 billion deficit that is being reported to the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I am preparing a Truth in Budgeting Act which would disallow the use of surplus Social Security and other trust funds to reduce the deficit, and I am calling upon the President and my colleagues to join me in this effort.

The following table illustrates that the current policy of using the surpluses of the Social Security and other trust funds to "reduce" the budget deficit hides the growing problem of the Federal funds deficit:

OLDER AMERICANS ACT AMENDMENTS

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, last summer in my area there was a tragic spectacle portrayed over the televisions and on the front pages of the newspapers where a 90-year-old lady was forcibly evicted from her home. Because of circumstances beyond her control she was unable to keep up with all the foreclosure and tax questions that had arisen and the ultimate decision, the finale of that was dragging her out of her home.

Well, we have convened a system in my home area to deal with this problem as it might exist in the future. Since then we find out that this has happened quite often across our land. I am now going to develop legislation which will amend the Older Americans Act to make sure that this can never happen again anywhere in the United States, that, rather, when the point comes where someone has to be evicted from one's home or a rental property, that the community should be given an opportunity to go to the side of this older American to see how they can help with the transition and all the things that are necessary to make sure that we do not have such a forceful, unseemly incident occur again.

ALL S&L BAILOUT DEALS SHOULD BE PUT ON HOLD

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, William Seidman put all pending savings and loan bailout deals on hold. As a member of the Committee on Banking I applaud that action.

Mr. Seidman has expressed reservations about the course we have been following in allowing the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to negotiate bailout deals on its own and to issue Government guarantees and promissory notes.

We in this Chamber know what that can do to our national deficit.

The suspension, I think, should extend to the last-minute bailouts of last year. We had some 222 savings and loan agreements, some that were negotiated at the last minute. There is no way you can negotiate that many transactions and still be fair to the taxpayers.

We in this Chamber are ultimately responsible to the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the Attorney General and have asked whether the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has the authority to negotiate those transactions. I have been waiting for his answer, which I will share with this body when it comes.

Mr. Speaker, we must know whether or not these deals were proper.

It appears more and more clear that these deals were not in the public interest. The debt, which is included in these deals, and the interest payments that will be required will be paid by the American people for years to come.

So I applaud Mr. Seidman's decision and I ask this entire body to make sure that the resolution we make of the S&L problem be in the long-range interests of the American people.

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PARTICIPATION IN THE PEACE CORPS

(Mrs. MORELLA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be joined today by more than 60 original cosponsors in reintroducing legislation to increase participation in the Peace Corps. This legislation is especially timely in light of the renewed emphasis which has been placed on public service in recent months.

This legislation was developed in consultation with the Peace Corps administration and would provide $5 million for the first year of the 5-year Demonstration Program. An amended version of similar legislation, which I had introduced, passed the House last year.

Under the program, which is modeled after the Reserve Officer Training Corps programs now offered at many colleges, the Federal Government would pay the education costs for qualified undergraduates during their last 2 years of school. Candidates would be selected on the basis of merit and commitment, and preference would be given to minority students, who are sharply underrepresented among the ranks of Peace Corps volunteers.

Just as the ROTC students take military courses, these Peace Corps candidates would take courses designed to help prepare them for service in the nations that have corps projects. They would study language, culture, and history of the nations in which they would serve, as well as agriculture and economic development. After graduation, participants would serve 3 years as Peace Corps volunteers.

Our Nation would receive manifold benefits for this small investment. The Peace Corps, whose efforts are so appreciated overseas, and which includes perhaps some of our country's most effective good will ambassadors, has had a shortage of skilled volunteers. This program would correct that deficiency, as well as help to develop a commitment to public service which sometimes seems disappointingly absent among so many of our younger citizens. And, as is the case today, Peace Corps volunteers continue to serve their Nation upon their return, in such fields as government, international relations, medicine, and education.

Thousands of students across the Nation compete for ROTC scholarships. This legislation would provide an opportunity to our best and brightest young people to compete for scholarships for peace as well.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this timely initiative.

LET US MAINTAIN THE CO-EQUALITY OF THE THREE BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, it is essential we find a workable solution to the problem of adjusting senior level Federal executive, legislative, and judicial salaries. But it is equally important that we not go down any false paths in that effort.

In that context I am concerned about suggestions emanating from some quarters that the answer is to decouple top level executives and judicial salaries from those of Members of Congress. Such a plan would have a harmful impact on the overall balance of the three branches of Government.

The Constitution makes clear that the Founders of our Nation intended a system of three coequal branches of government to ensure the most effective and representative government for all the people of this country. It would be a grave mistake to undermine that delicate balance by giving unequal compensation to any of the three branches.

In our search for a fair and expeditious process for dealing with this issue, we must not permit Congress to become an inferior branch of government.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURE MOVEMENT: FROM RADICALS ON THE OUTSIDE TO LEADERS ON THE INSIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BATES). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago this week, tens of thousands of American farmers drove thousands of flag flying tractors to the Capitol Mall in Washington to protest the failure of farm policies that threatened the livelihood of family farmers throughout our Nation. At that time, the farmers of the American Agriculture Movement were frightened, angry, and radical, as they were moved to come to Washington out of a deep dissatisfaction with the plight of agriculture in this country. Odis Chapman, an Arkansas farmer and AAM member, said that at the time "we were mad because we did not know how the system worked, but we since learned from experience."

AAM has indeed learned from experience. What was considered 10 years ago a radical movement has become one of the most prominent farm organizations in the country, an organization that has a long list of accomplishments to its credit and now can marshal effective methods to achieve its goals within the system. A symbol of their progress can be seen in the Smithsonian today: The lead tractor of the famous tractorcade that once damaged the grounds of The Mall in 1979 returned that summer to repair all the damage, and now that tractor is on permanent display in the Smithsonian's Museum of American History.

The great majority of the thousands of farmers who came to Washington that winter a decade ago had not been to the Capitol before, and they had never taken part in a protest before. They were involved in blockading bakeries, grocery wholesalers, and taking their tractors to places in the Nation's Capital that they had never seen before. They even released a herd of goats on the Capitol Grounds. Many AAM members say that they were mad and scared back then, but they didn't know what to do. Today, AAM can point with pride to many achievements. It brought thousands of farmers who had been demoralized back into the process of helping influence farm policies that allow farmers to support their families and continue their traditional way of life. AAM played a positive role in gaining passage of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, and it provided counseling to farmers who were struggling to restructure their debt and save their farms. In short, AAM has become in many ways the conscience of the farm movement.

AAM has shed the light of common sense on many policies affecting American agriculture, and its scope has been not only national but international. AAM officials have traveled to Switzerland, Holland, and Japan to meet with family farmers and government officials to discuss cooperation in international farm trade. Expanding farm exports has always been important for the success of U.S. agriculture, and AAM has been at the forefront of the movement to stop the policy of counterproductive grain embargoes that only punish American producers while failing to serve any foreign policy goal. The AAM was vocal in opposing the Soviet grain embargo of 1980, and today AAM officials support an exception to the embargo against Cuba to open up access to that nation's $489 million agricultural market.

I would like to commend AAM's current president, Harvey Joe Sanner of Des Arc, AR, for his leadership in advocating farm trade to Cuba. Sanner has journeyed to Cuba to take a firsthand look at that market for American rice, cotton, soybeans, poultry, and other agricultural products. He is an eloquent spokesman for the cause. At a time when our trade deficits are running in the $170 billion range, we can no longer afford the self-inflicted wound of the embargo policy. While we disapprove of the Cuban Government's actions, we have products we could sell them.

If a Kansas wheat farmer can now sell his wheat to the Soviet Union, why can't an Arkansas rice farmer sell his rice to Cuba? The AAM has been a forceful proponent of freeing the farmers to compete for all markets.

AAM was one of the first advocates of expanded use of ethanol, which would create a new, multibillion-dollar market for our products, clean the air, reduce the budget and trade deficits, and reduce our dependence on foreign oil, so that we no longer have to borrow money from the Japanese to buy oil from the Arabs.

Mr. Speaker, the American Agriculture Movement is a classic example of how American democracy works. This week, we are seeing reports of the Solidarity movement's struggle in Poland, where those who fight to have their voices heard have had to battle for years against repression and violence from an authoritarian government. But here in America, movements such as AAM have been heard. Millions of Americans in urban areas who were indifferent to the plight of farmers 10 years ago are now aware that if the agricultural economy in America suffers, the entire economy will eventually suffer. AAM's methods were criticized at first, but that activism led to major accomplishments in the long run. Many farmers who became active for the first time in the political process have seen that their activity can bear results.

AAM still has many goals yet to achieve, but they have come a long way since they first tore up The Mall grounds and let goats loose on the Capitol steps. I commend them for their successes, and I look forward to working with them in the future. Odis Chapman was right: The farmers of the AAM have learned a great deal from experience.

A TRIBUTE TO JIM McCRORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a journalist of exceptional quality who has chosen to retire from the San Antonio Express-News after more than 40 years of covering the politics of San Antonio, TX, and the Nation.

As long as I have known Jim McCrory, I have thought of him as being among a special class of reporters. He understands the political environment of San Antonio and the State of Texas like no one else in the business. And throughout his 40 years of reporting, he has always dealt with people in a straightforward, no nonsense manner.

I first met Jim in the early 1960's when he was covering the politics of San Antonio and the era. When I entered the race for county commissioner of Bexar County, Jim was one of the first people with whom I talked. We met at the Menger Hotel and dissected every aspect of the upcoming race.

I have found Jim to be a reporter of great substance. He never was one to chase the quick and easy byline. Instead he always concentrated on the merits of a story and shook as much information out of it as he could.

If you got stung by McCrory it was because you deserved to be stung.

Jim, I wish you and your family all the best. I always enjoyed working with you because you were a man I could trust and a truly top notch reporter. Besides Jim, having followed your work for almost 30 years, deep down I know you are a champion for the underdog. I'm sure you and your cigar will continue to be a part of the San Antonio landscape, but your political wisdom will be missed from the pages of the Express-News.

"STRAIGHT-SHOOTING" POLITICAL WRITER McCRORY RETIRES

(By Bruce Davidson)

A Texas political reporting legend has covered his last campaign.

After more than 40 years in the newspaper business, most of them spent chronicling San Antonio and Texas politics, Jim McCrory has retired from the unending grind of daily newspaper reporting.

He left with his reputation for fairness and independence firmly intact.

McCrory's understanding of politics was such that politicians from congressmen on down have been known to call on him seeking his reading of the landscape.

"Jim has been one of the most respected reporters in Texas," Republican Gov. Bill Clements said last week. "It's a reputation he's earned."

Clements added, "He's straightforward and straight-shooting. Texas politics is anything but simple, but Jim was always able to explain it all with clarity and accuracy."

Democratic U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said, "Jim McCrory is one of the best. He is pesky and unpredictable—as a good reporter must be—and he sure has had staying power.

"Politics in San Antonio won't be the same. I know I'll miss him," Bentsen said.

McCrory edited the St. Mary's University newspaper and also put out a weekly paper in the Harlandale area while finishing his education.

"We were on the first wave at St. Mary's after World War II," recalls Municipal Court Judge Albert Pena, who met McCrory during college.

During the war McCrory was wounded by a German land mine, losing an eye. As one reporter later noted, his eye patch along with his vest and Travis Club Senator cigars became part of the McCrory persona.

As a major player in Bexar County politics during the 1950s and '60s, Pena again crossed paths with McCrory, who began his daily newspaper career with the San Antonio Light in 1948.

"I think he's probably the No. 1 political reporter," said Pena, who spent 16 years as a county commissioner and was a key member of the historic Bexar County Coalition.

After suffering through McCrory exclusives for more than a decade the Express-News' Charles Kilpatrick, now editor and publisher, lured McCrory away in 1958 to cover politics for the morning San Antonio Express.

McCrory covered the often wild and woolly political beat for the Express, and later the merged Express-News for almost 31 years.

By choice, McCrory never wrote a column or became an editor. He was a hard news reporter.

"He concentrated an awful lot on the courthouse. He knew every judge and every lawyer," recalled Kemper Diehl of McCrory's early day at the Express. Diehl, also a well-respected political reporter, worked with McCrory both at the Light and later at the Express-News.

Diehl added, "He just had a natural talent as a reporter. People confided in him. His phone would ring day and night with tips from friends he had made."

As those who dealt with McCrory universally attest, Diehl said, "He played no favorites. He was very impartial."

One McCrory trademark is a sharp wit as displayed in the item he once wrote about then-Senatorial candidate George Bush waving goodbye to reporters with one finger.

As Diehl recalled, the incident occurred on a Sunday night following a final Bexar County rally during Bush's 1970 Senate campaign against Bentsen. The Express-News had endorsed Bentsen on the day of the rally.

As McCrory and Diehl were walking from the Municipal Auditorium after the rally, Bush rode by. "He rolled down the window and shot the finger at us," Diehl said, noting that Bush, who is now president, was grinning at the time.

McCrory once joked to an interviewer that he told his wife to bury him with three cigars in his pocket. "I told her not to bother with the matches, I'll just use a live coal."

As Diehl pointed out, McCrory never took guff from anyone, even vice presidents.

In the early 1960s, Vice President Lyndon Johnson brought a group of foreign ambassadors to his Johnson City ranch for a weekend of recreation. Of course, the media was invited.

McCrory arrived early and was standing in Johnson's front yard when the vice president came out to pick up his morning newspaper. Johnson subscribed to the Express.

The vice president invited McCrory into the house.

In the ground-breaking 1981 Gonzalez congressional campaign, McCrory has been on the scene where Johnson, after earlier refusing to get involved, announced he was endorsing Gonzalez following a meeting with Albert Pena.

During four decades in the newspaper business. MrCrory witnessed lots of changes. The biggest, he said was the impact television made on newspapers and politics. Before television, reporters had more of a chance to ask detailed questions with follow-up.

Another change was the high level of security brought in after the Kennedy assassination.

When President Harry Truman visited San Antonio, McCrory walked with him from the Gunter Hotel in the Alamo. McCrory, who has cornered every president since Truman once told an interviewer that Truman was his favorite.

McCrory said he will sit back and relax for a couple, of months, and maybe take a trip to Las Vegas, before he decides what to do for a follow-up to the newspaper business. He has had numerous offers, but he is not ready to reveal his next move.

THE HEROISM OF GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSZKO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, February 12 will mark the 243d anniversary of the birth of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, the great Revolutionary War hero, who made significant contributions to the cause of American independence as a military engineer.

Born in 1746 in Mereczowczyzna, Poland, Tadeusz Andrzej Bonawentura Kosciuszko began his education in military strategy and engineering at the Warsaw Corps of Cadets. In 1769, he entered the French Higher Military School, continuing his military studies and developing an expertise in military fortifications.

Under the terms of the First Partition in 1772, Poland was divided up among its aggressive and greedy neighbor states, with the assistance of the Polish nobles, and at the expense of most of the Polish people. Against this tyranny of partition, a large number of the Polish aristocrats and gentry openly resisted, and by doing so were driven from their homeland. Siding with these Polish patriots, Kosciuszko became an exile in search of justice far from home.

Abandoning his commission in the Royal Polish Forces, he left his homeland temporarily to serve under General Washington in the American response to British aggression. Because of his expertise in military engineering, Kosciuszko was welcomed by the Continental Army. He was first employed in designing the defense of the Delaware River, a success which gained him a colonel's commission and an appointment to the staff of General Gates at Ticonderoga. He was the major adviser in the fortification of Mount Defiance at Ticonderoga, and the failure to follow his advice in defense of this post led to its capture by the British.

Kosciuszko assisted in the American defeat of the British at Saratoga, and the construction of American fortifications at West Point was his most important undertaking and contribution to America's battle for independence. He labored for more than 2 years, and within that time made West Point impregnable. General Armstrong wrote:

Kosciuszko's merit lies in this, that he gave the fortifications such strength they frightened the enemy from all temptation of even trying to take the Highlands.

The brave and resourceful actions of General Kosciuszko were not overlooked by our Nation's leaders. His long, faithful, and meritorious service was recognized in 1783 when the Congress made him a brigadier general. He became a trusted friend of Thomas Jefferson, whom he made executor of his will. Also, he received accolades and praise from his fellow generals, and Gen. George Washington nominated General Kosciuszko for membership in the Order of the Cincinnati, which had been formed by the officers of the Continental Army. His induction into the order was the highest compliment the Continental army could award.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with Polish-Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Americans of Polish descent all over this Nation, who are commemorating the birth of Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a great and true friend of democracy and the United States. His name will forever remain as a symbol of courage for Americans, and people all over the world, who are dedicated to the cause of freedom.

STRENGTHEN THE FDIC: ASSESS PREMIUMS ON FOREIGN DEPOSITS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Assessment Equity Act, which would broaden the base for assessment of FDIC premiums to include foreign as well as domestic deposits. This legislation is designed to make our deposit insurance premium assessment system more equitable while increasing the amount of funds available for resolution of our deposit insurance crisis.

Current law requires banks to pay an insurance premium based on deposits received in the United States. Banks do not now, however, pay a nickel in FDIC deposit insurance assessments on foreign-based deposits, even though FDIC provides de facto if not de jure coverage for the bulk of these deposits. While the FDIC assessment is levied against nearly all the deposits for most banks—including the uninsured portion of deposits for domestic banks—it is levied against only about half the deposits of the largest banks.

Very large banks, which have substantial foreign deposits on which they pay no FDIC assessment, effectively underpay for the de facto insurance coverage of those deposits. At this point, I include in the RECORD a table from the February 19, 1988 American Banker which answers the question: "Who pays least for FDIC Protection."

As CBO notes, these numbers are not hard and fast, since the amount of premium income can vary depending on the size and structure of overseas deposits in U.S. banks, among other factors. The 15–20-percent base broadening, however, is certain to bring in substantial amounts of additional income.

That additional income is sorely needed by FDIC. There are warning signals that the fund may face stress in years ahead. As the GAO indicated in a December 1988 draft report on the conditions of the various deposit insurance, a study undertaken at my request, there were 250 FDIC-insured institutions with assets of less than 3 percent in 1987. In 1980, the number of such banks was 15. That total number of insolvent and weak FDIC-insured banks was 317 in 1987, compared to 15 in 1980. On June 30, 1988, 3.72 percent of commercial bank assets were in insolvent or weak institutions. Perhaps the most disturbing finding of this draft GAO report was the assessment that, given anticipated growth in deposits, the FDIC reserves at the end of 1989 will be 0.81 percent of deposits, or approximately eighty-one cents per $1,000 insured. To get an idea of how dangerously low this reserve level is, consider this startling fact: in 1983, the FDLIC had reserves of $1.02 per $1,000, substantially more than the GAO projects for the FDIC at the end of 1989. The drift to insolvency can be rapid and should therefore be checked. At this point, I include in the RECORD a table from the draft GAO report which reflects the growing weakness of certain FDIC-insured banks.

[1] Insolvent—bank with negative GAAP capital.
[2] Weak—banks with GAAP capital equal to or greater than zero but less than 3 percent of year-end assets.
[3] As of June 30, 1988 (preliminary).

As of March 31, 1987, 20 megabanks controlled 84.3 percent of all foreign deposits in FDIC insured banks. The $280 billion in unassessed foreign deposits in these giant institutions came close to equalling the $363 billion in domestic deposits held by these banks. At some banks, as the chart I previously included in the RECORD indicates, foreign deposits actually exceed domestic deposits.

The legislation I introduce today is, in my view, a companion piece to the proposal by President Bush to increase FDIC assessments which banks must pay in order to offset revenues expended to resolve the FSLIC crisis. The revenues raised from commercial banks under the Bush proposal would strengthen the FDIC fund, which last year lost money for the first time in its history.

If President Bush's comprehensive proposal is adopted without modification, however, the 13,000 plus banks which have no foreign deposits will pay sharply higher deposit insurance premiums. Large banks with substantial foreign deposits will face a higher assessment on only on their domestic deposits. Under the Bush plan, small- and medium-sized banks, who will see assessments rise on virtually all their deposits, will pay full fare to help resolve the deposit insurance crisis. Big banks will continue to ride the deposit insurance system via super-saver.

Mr. Speaker, in addition the equity aspects of this legislation, the increase in revenue will certainly serve to strengthen the FDIC fund. At this point, I would like to insert in the RECORD a chart from the recently published Congressional Budget Office study: "Reducing the Deficit: Spending and Revenue Options." By assessing foreign deposits, CBO notes a cumulative 5-year budget savings through 1994 of $1.590 billion:

NONDEFENSE DISCRETIONARY SPENDING NDD–14—INCLUDE FOREIGN DEPOSITS OF U.S. BANKS IN THE FDIC INSURANCE BASE

[In millions of dollars]

Savings from CBO baseline	Annual savings					Cumulative 5-year savings
	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Budget authority	N.A.	N.A.	N.A.	N.A.	N.A.	N.A.
Outlays	300	310	320	330	330	1,590

To strengthen the FDIC to meet anticipated needs, additional revenue is needed. Increasing the basic premium is one method. Broadening the base to include foreign deposits is a complimentary approach. I urge support for the Federal Deposit Insurance Assessment Equity Act.

At this point, I include in the RECORD related material and the text of the bill:

H.R. —

A bill to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to provide deposit insurance in a manner which does not discriminate against small- and medium-sized banks by expanding the assessment base.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Deposit Insurance Assessment Equity Act".

SEC. 2. EXPANSION OF FDIC ASSESSMENT BASE.

Section 7(b)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(5)(B)) is amended by striking out "any deposits received in any office of the bank for deposit in any other office of the bank located in the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands, except" and inserting in lieu thereof "any deposits, and any obligations which would constitute deposits as defined in section 3(1) but for subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 3(1)(5), received in any office of the bank (other than a foreign branch of a foreign bank (as such term is defined in section 1(b)(7) of the International Banking Act)), except".

SEIDMAN BACKS ASSESSING INSURANCE PREMIUMS ON FOREIGN DEPOSITS

(By Jim McTague)

TORONTO.—A measure to assess insurance premiums on foreign deposits got a boost on Tuesday from L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"It's an enhancement we would welcome," Mr. Seidman said during an address to the annual meeting here of the National Council of Savings Institutions. The remarks were as close as he has come to endorsing a measure introduced this year by Rep. Gerald Kleczka, D-Wis., to assess premiums on those deposits.

Mr. Seidman said, as he has in the past, that he sees no need to raise the premium charged to banks for insurance of domestic deposits, despite the likelihood of a record number of failures in 1988 and a marginal decline in the FDIC's $18 billion insurance fund.

So far this year, bank closings have matched last year's pace. There have been 62 bank failures, and another 13 banks have been kept open with federal funds. At the end of 1987, the FDIC had closed 184 banks and assisted 19. The FDIC chairman said that a major overhaul of the deposit insurance system must be instituted by the next President and Congress within the first three months of 1989 if the system is to survive into the 1990s.

The FDIC began a major deposit insurance study two months ago, and Mr. Seidman plans to release its findings after the November elections. Right now, however, all he has are a lot of questions.

"If there's one thing we've learned, it's that strong supervision has to be part of a financial system with government-guaranteed insurance," he said. The FDIC is considering ways to improve its oversight, including better coordination with state bank regulations, according to the chairman.

The agency is also reexamining the way it deals with troubled institutions. Mr. Seidman said there is substantial support in the industry for a program similar to the Reconstruction Finance Corp. of the 1930s, which pumped loans into the failing institutions to keep them afloat during periods of economic difficulty.

"The problem with this is that 1,500 troubled banks could claim that they would be better off with this kind of help," he said. "It goes a long way to increasing government involvement in banks."

Mr. Seidman said the study would also examine the pricing of deposit insurance. So far, the FDIC has been working with some mechanical formulas, based on capital, with room for judgment calls by the regulators. The study also will examine the costs and any savings that might result from merging the FDIC with the insolvent Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. fund, a proposal Mr. Seidman opposes.

Mr. Seidman said the plan that will result from the study will be presented to the new administration, which he believes will assign a high priority to the deposit insurance crisis.

THE MAJOR BANKS HAVE PAID TOO LITTLE FOR FULL FDIC COVERAGE

(By Irvine H. Sprague)

Congressman Gerald D. Kleczka, D-Wis., on Thursday introduced legislation to have the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. assess premiums on the foreign deposits held by U.S. banks. As a member of the House Banking Committee, Mr. Kleczka should get a hearing. At stake is about $300 million in assessments against a handful of megabanks.

The proposed legislation revives an issue that has been lurking in the background for years and addresses an effort I have carried out with notable lack of success since the failure of Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company of Chicago in 1984. Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., joined the effort at that time and had legislation drafted similar to Mr. Kleczka's bill.

The largest banks in the United States simply do not pay their fair share for the protection of FDIC insurance. Eight pay on less than half of their deposits. The other 14,000 banks across the nation pay on 100% of theirs.

To rub in the discrepancy, the biggies who pay on only a fraction of their deposits are all in the "TBTF" category: too big to fail. There is no way our government will allow any of the largest banks to go under. Not only are they exempt from much of the assessment costs, they are de facto guaranteed that all of the deposits are protected.

In 1984, I was cautioned by fellow FDIC board members not to rock the boat on the assessment issue. "Why do this?" I was asked. "Nothing is going to happen, and you are making the big banks mad at us."

In 1986, I outlined the unfair assessment system in my book, "Bailout," and since then I have pursued the subject in speeches to community bankers in Minnesota, California, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, and Illinois. In every instance, the response was strong support for change.

This support was evidenced in 1986 during the closing days of the 99th Congress when the Senate voted 63 to 32 to assess all deposits, foreign and domestic alike. The reform was misplaced in the budget bill and it disappeared in conference.

FDIC assessments can be used only by the FDIC and have nothing whatever to do with general government. However, the administration counts FDIC profit or loss in its consolidated budget account. Thus more FDIC profits do reduce the reported budget deficit. But the fact is, these dollars have absolutely no impact on government spending or the federal budget.

FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman has noted the phoniness of the budget issue. He said that assessing foreign deposits raises several complicated issues and that the appropriate forum to consider them is the House and Senate banking committees.

The hearings should volatile. The community bankers are vocal about getting the short end of the stick. This is a guaranteed winning issue for any congressman in 1988.

How often do you find an issue that is fair, right, long overdue, and also popular with your constituents? The congressmen need only balance the financial support from and the pressures by a dozen big city institutions against the votes of their local constituents. The choice is easy.

The distinction between foreign and domestic deposits dates back to 1933 when the FDIC was created. The law states that assessments will be made on "domestic deposits." The reasons for this language are lost to history, but it certainly was not because of any dependency on foreign deposits in 1933.

Before Continental there was no real reason to question the lack of payment for the protection of foreign deposits. After all, we figured that it was theoretically possible for a big bank to fail and that the uninsured foreign deposits would be at risk. Four years earlier, we had bailed out First Pennsylvania, but foreign deposits were not a major factor.

Continental caused me to reconsider the assessment rules. The more the system is examined, the clearer it becomes that it is patently unfair.

The Continental bailout protected the entire $69 billion holding company structure: the book and off-book liabilities, the insured and uninsured depositors, foreign and domestic. At the time of the failure, there was just under $3 billion in insured domestic deposits, on which only $6.5 million in assessments had been paid.

The message was clear. Big banks with foreign deposits pay on only a fraction of their total deposits, yet all of the deposits are protected. The Continental costs appears to have leveled off at about $1.75 billion, and in the process all banks have lost the assessment rebate, they had been receiving for more than 50 years.

The accompanying chart shows that eight institutions are paying on 50% or less of their deposits, while nearly all other banks in America pay on 100%. The table reports on the 10 institutions that had the most foreign deposits in 1987. A few other regionals had some.

* * * * *

Citicorp, the unchallenged leader in American banking, with over $200 billion in holding company assets, paid $34 million to the FDIC in 1987, the assessment based on just 38% of its deposits. At the same time, BankAmerica, less than half as large as Citicorp, paid $42 million, the assessment based on 69% of its deposits.

Does anyone believe that either Citicorp or BankAmerica would be allowed to fail? The answer, of course, is no. So we have a situation in which two of America's megabanks, both receiving the same kind of protection, pay vastly different rates.

Since Mr. Kleczka's proposed change in law will affect only a handful of institutions, the lobbying is narrowly focused. The basic argument against the legislation is that the imposition of a one-twelfth of 1% charge on foreign deposits will make the megabanks non-competitive in foreign markets.

This kind of reasoning would be analogous to Lee Iacocca arguing that Chrysler should not have to pay taxes so it could better compete with Toyota.

The lobbyists are chasing their tails with this argument. Either the margin is so low that it is immaterial, or it is so high, that it is intolerable for these banks to maintain such an advantage over their American rivals.

The Citicorp lobbyist, Bob Barnett, a former FDIC chairman and a savvy politician, came up with a new twist in talking to Congressman Kleczka. Changing the assessment would hurt foreign trade, he argued. Trade is a buzzword in this election year, so I guess Mr. Barnett decided to throw it into the pot, relevant or not.

The words used to describe the deals are different. But the total protection for all deposits exists whether the bank is given open bank assistance, bailed out, sold, or handled in what is called a purchase and assumption transaction. The uninsured depositors are at risk only in a payoff, whether direct or through a deposit transfer, when the bank is closed and the insured depositors received their money.

In fact, there has been only one closure payoff of a bank over $200 million in the entire history of the FDIC: Penn Square. In addition, there have been five payoffs over $100 million and eight more over $50 million. Only in these cases was there any significant loss to depositors.

My original proposal was to assess all deposits and use the added income to reduce the basic rate for all banks. Mr. Kleczka follows this approach with a reduction of the rate from one-twelfth to one fourteenth of 1%.

Today, with the FDIC operating with a record low surplus in 1987 of $50 million, it would be more prudent to use the added income to build up the FDIC fund.

INDEPENDENT BANKERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
February 9, 1989.

Hon. GERALD D. KLECZKA,
Attention: Brian Doherty,
U.S. House of Representatives, 226 Cannon House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE KLECZKA: The Independent Bankers Association of America (IBAA) would like to express its strong support for your legislation to include foreign deposits in the premium assessment base.

As the Administration has just put forward a proposal to raise FDIC premiums from the current 0.083 cents per $100 to 0.15 cents per $100, it is critical that the assessment base be equitable. Assessing foreign deposits would more accurately reflect the extent of FDIC coverage.

Under current regulatory policy, a "two-tiered" banking system exists whereby the nation's largest banks are deemed "too big to fail" while smaller community banks are "too small to save." As you know, all banks pay a premium for FDIC insurance based on all their domestic deposits, including those over $100,000. However, the insurance coverage for most banks extends only to domestic deposits up to $100,000. In contrast, all deposits—foreign and domestic—are covered at too-big-to-fail banks. These banks by their very nature present a greater systemic risk to the FDIC. Foreign deposits are effectively a liability of the FDIC and should bear an assessment.

We also recommend that the deposit base be expanded to include non-deposit liabilities and secured borrowings. For example, so-called "deposit notes" should be subject to insurance assessments. Since 1985, a considerable market has developed in notes, bonds, acknowledgements of advance and similar liabilities which are undertaken by larger banks as a means of obtaining funds. We are concerned that these sophisticated deposit instruments have been used to circumvent the FDIC premium assessment.

We applaud the recent proposal of the FDIC to classify these notes as deposit liabilities, subject to insurance assessments and urge you to support that rulemaking effort.

Your bill, by including foreign deposits in the premium assessment base, is another essential step toward a more equitable insurance system. It has our wholehearted support and we will do anything possible to see that it is enacted.

Sincerely

J.R. NUNN,
President.

C-CAD IS MAKING A POSITIVE DIFFERENCE FOR DISABLED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues the news about an important program that has been a great benefit to the disabled. It is called the Center for Computer Assistance to the Disabled. C-CAD is based in Arlington, TX, and is giving the disabled the chance to learn highly marketable computer skills, as well as personal skills that serve to enhance their daily lives.

The program's executive director is Jack Kishpaugh. Jack is a retired lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve, with 20 years of combined active and retired service as an airborne and military intelligence officer. As a result of a swimming accident in 1971, Jack became a quadriplegic and has been active and interested in programs to improve the lives of the disabled.

C-CAD is 5 years old now and continues to grow. In January, Jack was informed that he has been nominated as a candidate for the Computerworld Awards for Innovative Use of Information Technology. The program is associated with the Smithsonian Institutioin and it honors applications of information technology that have achieved outstanding progress for society.

The C-CAD story of success is a tribute to Jack Kishpaugh and the many volunteers associated with C-CAD who have worked hard on something in which they believed very strongly. And they did it all without $1 of Federal funding.

I wanted to share this great story with my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, and to wish much success in the years to come for Jack and for C-CAD.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON HISTORIC PRESERVATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce today, with our colleague, Representative DICK CHENEY of Wyoming, a bill providing for continued authorization of appropriations for the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation. The bill amends section 212 of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966 to continue the appropriations authorization from fiscal year 1990 through fiscal year 1994 at a level of $2.5 million. This bill is necessary because the council's current authorization expires at the end of fiscal year 1989. Its continued operation is key to the Federal Government's efforts to faciliate the preservation of places important to our national heritage.

The Advisory Council on Historic Preservation [ACHP] was established by the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966—16 U.S.C. 470—to advise the President and Congress on preservation matters and to comment on Federal, federally assisted, and federally licensed undertakings having an effect upon historic properties.

The primary role of the ACHP is to assist Federal agencies in exercising national leadership in historic preservation and to ensure that Federal actions are consistent with historic preservation values to the maximum extent possible. Since preservation policies must be balanced against other national policies and goals, Federal agencies require advice and assistance both in the development of general programs and policies and in the design and review of particular projects. The ACHP provides such advice and assistance to the President, the Congress and the Federal agencies and assists and encourages State and local governments and private parties in preservation activities.

The accommodation of preservation values within public policies necessitates the acknowledgement of many competing forces. It is fortunate that, with all of these divergent views, there exists an independent body at the Federal level to assist in balancing historic preservation against other interests. The ACHP helps Federal agencies in meeting their statutory historic preservation obligations by institutionalizing preservation expertise and planning systems, eliminating duplicative efforts, improving the consistency of preservation policies and avoiding unnecessary expenditures of public funds.

Appropriated funds for the ACHP in fiscal year 1989 were $1,778,000 and the budget request for fiscal year 1990 is $1,795,000. According to the ACHP, the amount requested will support the continued provision of current services in fiscal year 1990.

I am very proud of the exemplary manner in which the city of New Orleans has been able to bring its historic heritage into the present and future by preserving while growing and developing. I am well aware of how difficult this can be to accomplish and I, therefore, can particularly appreciate the important job the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation performs for all of us and for those who come after us.

Mr. CHENEY and I hope this House will be able to take early and favorable action on this measure to reauthorize the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ETHICS IN PATIENT REFERRALS ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to be joined by Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. COYNE, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, and Mr. MOODY of the Subcommittee on Health, to introduce H.R. 939, the Ethics in Patient Referrals Act of 1989. The bill squarely addresses one of the most pressing problems confronting the Medicare Program today—conflicts of interest arising from self-referrals—the referral of a patient to a provider with whom the physician has a financial relationship.

Over 10 years ago, Congress enacted a sweeping law that makes the payment of kickbacks for patient referrals under Medicare a felony. The law is clear: the payment of "any remuneration, directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly" in return for patient referrals is illegal. The law reflects a firm resolve that patients should not be bought or sold.

Unfortunately, clever deal makers have found a loophole. Referral schemes are being disguised as legitimate business arrangements, most commonly as partnerships involving referring physicians, but also as consulting or similar arrangements. The intent generally is quite clear: to lock-in referrals by creating a web of financial relationships binding the referring physicians to the provider.

Some of the deals are outrageous. In one case, physician investors can make more than $100,000 over a 5-year period based on nothing more than a $10,000 promissory note paid as an investment in a magnetic resonance imaging partnership. Other deals are more temperate. But all of the deals attempt to generate profits by locking-in referrals. The services most commonly involved include radiology, labs tests, durable medical equipment, and home health care.

Lawyers advising the promoters carefully recommend against any requirement that referrals be made. They also advise that dividends reflect the amount of investment and not vary based on the number of referrals made. But everyone knows that the more referrals made, the higher the profits.

The Ethics in Patient Referrals Act will close these loopholes once and for all.

Self-referrals raises three major policy concerns. First, there is a risk that physician-partners may not refer patients to the facility that provides the best care. We have heard of instances where cancer patients have been told to drive every day for a 6-week period to a radiation therapy facility 20 miles away for treatment rather than being referred to another qualified facility closer to the patient's home.

Second, patients may be referred for costly services which are unnecessary. Studies conducted by Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan and HCFA's region V in the early 1980's document higher utilization rates for physician-partners.

Dramatic evidence of the risk was provided by a confidential memo obtained by my office. The memo, from a radiology center in California to its physician partners, reviewed referral statistics, urged the partners to increase their referrals, and noted that "the realization of the long-term goal of this partnership is the responsibility of each one of us." Frankly, it's hard to believe that partnership managers do not routinely keep these statistics, and such a manager would have to be a saint not to use this information to encourage more referrals from physician investors.

It's important to remember that Medicare costs are increasing by more than 15 percent a year during a period of multibillion dollar deficits. Every year, Congress has to wrestle with sharp budget cuts just to keep Medicare affordable for the taxpayers. We simply cannot take the risk that these deals won't increase health care costs.

Finally, honest competition is undercut. To maintain market share, suppliers are being forced to compete—not on price or quality—but on the cut they give physicians. We have received hundreds of letters of support from independent providers who feel their survival is threatened by this trend.

These problems stem from the fact that a physician's objectivity in making referrals is threatened by these financial tie-ins. The point is not intended as a criticism of physicians. Few physicians will consciously refer a patient to a poor quality provider simply due to ownership. But, anyone's judgement can be subtly influenced by financial interests. Few companies would, for example, permit their executives to have side dealings with competitors or suppliers.

One of the most serious shortcoming of current law is the enormous difficulty involved in proving to the satisfaction of a judge that a particular arrangement is deliberately structured to induce referrals. A successful prosecution requires a lengthy investigation of the business records to prove unequivocally that dividend payments to physicians were intended as the disguised payment of a referral fee.

The enforcement resources simply aren't there. There is no way that the Inspector General—with fewer than 225 investigators nationwide—can police the complex arrangements that underpin the $100 billion a year Medicare Program. Few cases have been prosecuted, and it is likely that only the most abusive cases will be prosecuted in the future.

What is needed is what lawyers call a bright line rule to give providers and physicians unequivocal guidance as to the types of arrangements that are prohibited. If the law is clear and the penalties are substantial, we can rely on self-enforcement. Few physicians will knowingly break the law.

The Ethics in Patient Referrals Act provides this bright-line rule. Providers of Medicare services would be prohibited from accepting referrals from physicians with ownership interest or other compensation arrangement. Exceptions are provided for transactions that pose little risk of abuse.

Providers and physicians would have one year after enactment to bring existing ownership or compensation arrangements into compliance. A physician can easily avoid prosecution simply by selling his or her ownership interest or by referring patients to another provider.

Half-way measures will not work. Within 6 months time, lawyers will be holding seminars teaching the deal makers how to exploit a new set of loopholes.

Critics have argued that capital from referring physicians is needed to finance health care facilities. This is a smokescreen. If there is a need for the service in the community, traditional lenders will make the funds available. Moreover, most services do not require large investments. The most costly, magnetic resonance imaging, costs about $2 or $3 million, and manufacturers are eager to provide the equipment on a lease-purchase basis. There are legitimate concerns about rural areas, and accordingly, the bill provides an exception for sole rural providers.

As a final note, I would again like to express my hope that the bill will be supported by the leadership of the medical profession. This legislation is as important to the medical profession as it is to Medicare. The integrity of our Nation's physicians is being threatened by seductive deals promoted by fast buck artists. Further proliferation of these ventures is bound to undercut public confidence in the medical profession.

For several years, Dr. Arnold Relman, the distinguished editor of the New England Journal of Medicine, has expressed deep concern about the ethics of physician self-referrals. These concerns were echoed in the Code of Ethics of the American College of Physicians which states that a "physician should avoid any business arrangement that might, because of personal gain, influence his decisions in patient care." And, in 1986, the Institute of Medicine denounced the practice of self-referral in the strongest possible terms and urged corrective legislation.

Trust is crucial to the physician-patient relationship. Ethical standards must guard against both the fact and appearance of impropriety. The medical profession should join with us to draw the line and to demand that all who serve the public be held to the highest ethical standards.

Mr. SPEAKER, I would like to include in the RECORD at this point a description of some of the points of a bill I introduced today, the Ethics in Patient Referrals Act of 1989.

The description follows:

THE ETHICS IN PATIENT REFERRALS ACT OF 1989—H.R. 939—SUMMARY OF THE BILL

1. IN GENERAL

The Ethics in Patient Referrals Act is intended to deal with a diverse wave of commercial activity that has the principal purpose of attempting to "lock-in" a referral base for a particular provider by creating an entangling web of financial relationships that bind referring physicians to the provider.

The bill reflects the view that such entanglements generally can be avoided and should be avoided because they threaten the ability of physicians to exercise unbiased professional judgment when making referral decisions. Accordingly, the bill restricts the practice of "self-referral," referral by a physician to a provider with whom the physician has a significant financial relationship.

Subject to exceptions described below, the bill generally prohibits a physician from referring a patient for a Medicare-covered service to a provider if the physician (or immediate family member) has an (i) ownership or investment interest in the provider or (ii) other compensation arrangements with the provider. Providers would be prohibited from submitting any bills or claims for reimbursement for services provided pursuant to a prohibited referral.

2. REFERRING PHYSICIAN

As noted above, the restrictions on financial relationships between physicians and providers only apply in the case of "referrals" made by "referring physicians." These terms are defined to account for different categories of service.

(a) General rule.—For most services, such as lab tests, and X-rays, where patients have little ability to make an independent choice of provider and must rely on recommendations made by the physician, a "referral" is made when a physician requests the service.

Because of the limited ability of patients to make independent decisions in these circumstances, disclosure of an underlying financial relationship between the "referring physician" and the provider is not sufficient to trigger an exception to the prohibition on self-referral.

A "referral" is also made when a physician establishes a plan of care regarding the service. A plan of care is required for a number of Medicare-covered services as a condition of payment.

(b) Physician Services.—These same general rules applies to physician services. The physician requesting the service, is a "referring physician." Furthermore, a physician who requests a consultation with another physician is a "referring physician" with respect to any items or services ordered or performed by the consulting physician.

A physician who "requests" a service the physician intends to provide himself is not considered to be a "referring physician". This clarification is limited to physicians' services consisting exclusively of the direct provision of professional services by the requesting physician and does not apply to any associated "technical component" provided by others.

A further clarification is provided for radiologists, radiation therapy specialists, and pathologists. These physicians are not considered to be "referring physicians" with respect to any X-rays, radiation therapy, or pathological examinations they may order or provide in response to a consultation requested by another physician.

(c) Outpatient prescription drugs.—A special rule applies for outpatient prescription drugs. In this case, a "referral" is made only if the prescribing physician directs the patient to a specific pharmacy, home intravenous therapy provider, or other entity dispensing the drug. This rule reflects the fact that patients generally are able to make an independent choice between pharmacies.

The special situation of "in-office" dispensing, where the patient's freedom-of-choice may be compromised, is not addressed in the bill. The bill generally does not restrict the provision of "in-office" services.

The physicians choice of a particular brand or type of drug to prescribe is not considered to be a "referral." Therefore, there are no restrictions on ownership of stock in pharmaceutical companies. Generally, such ownership would be too dilute to have a significant impact on physician decisionmaking.

3. GENERAL EXCEPTIONS

(a) Physicians' services provided in a group practice.—An exception would apply to physician services provided by another physician in the same group practice as the referring physician. The purpose of this exception is to accommodate existing relationships among physicians in group practices.

(b) Services provided by an employed practitioner.—A similar exception would apply to services provided by a physician assistant, nurse midwife, psychologist, or nurse anesthetist employed by the referring physician or group practice.

(c) Prepaid Plans.—An exception would apply to services provided by a prepaid health plan. The exception would apply to (i) prepaid plans with a Medicare risk contract under Section 1876 of the Social Security Act, (ii) plans organized pursuant to Section 1833(a)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act, and (iii) other plans established pursuant to a demonstration project.

This exception reflects that fact that prepaid plans are legally responsible to provide a broad range of covered services, including most services typically provided pursuant to a physician's referral. Because prepaid plans are responsible for the cost and quality of such services, they should be free to make suitable arrangements for such services so long as the services otherwise comply with general standards and requirements established by Medicare.

It is important to note that Congress is concerned about financial pressures on HMO physicians to reduce or limit services. This issue has already been the subject of legislation and is being dealt with under a separate process.

(d) Other Exceptions.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be authorized to establish other exceptions by regulation for ownership or compensation arrangements that the Secretary determines do not pose risk of program or patient abuse.

4. EXCEPTIONS RELATING TO OWNERSHIP AND INVESTMENT INTERESTS

(a) Ownership of Publicly-Traded Securities.—An exception would apply to ownership of investment securities in large publicly-held corporations.

To qualify for the exception, (i) the securities must be traded on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Exchange, or the NASDQ national market system, (ii) the corporation must have had assets in excess of $100 million at the close of the most recent fiscal year, and (iii) the physician must have purchased the securities on terms generally available to the public. The exception would apply to ownership of shares, bonds, debentures, notes, and other investment securities.

Investment securities that meet these tests are actively traded and generally are held by a broad cross-section of the investing public. Moreover, a physician's stake in such a corporation is likely to be so small that any incentive to refer patients would be minimal. Accordingly, such investments cannot readily be used to "lock-in" referrals and the risk of abuse is negligible.

(b) Sole Rural Providers.—Because of concerns about access, the bill provides for an exception for services provided by a sole rural provider. In such areas, capital provided by referring physicians may be needed to assure access to state-of-the-art services. In urban areas, alternative sources of financing generally are available if there is a genuine need for the service.

The Secretary would be required to publish regulations setting forth the terms of the exception within 9 months after enactment. It is anticipated that these regulations will be broadly accommodating to legitimate concerns about access in rural areas.

(c) Hospitals.—An exception would apply to services provided by a hospital in which a physician has an ownership interest if: (i) the physician has admitting privileges at the hospital, (ii) the ownership interest is in the hospital as a whole, and (iii) the ownership interest was established prior to March 1, 1989.

Most physician-owned hospitals were established years ago typically in smaller communities to provide access to care that would not otherwise be available. Many communities still depend on these hospitals for access. An exception, therefore, is warranted to prevent a disruption in access.

More recently, some hospitals have attempted to lock-in referrals by spinning off a hospital operating company and selling the company to a group of physicians. The terms of some of these arrangements indicate a clear intent to buy referrals. Because of concerns about the appropriateness of these reorganizations, the bill limits the exception is limited to ownership interests established prior to March 1, 1989.

It should be noted that exception for physician-owned hospitals, applies only if the ownership interest is the hospital as a whole. There is no exception for joint ownership of a hospital subsidiary, such as a free-standing imaging center, if the hospital itself is not physician-owned.

(d) Ambulatory Surgery Centers.—An exception is provided for physician ownership of ambulatory surgery centers (ASCs). The prohibition on self-referrals would not apply to any item or service provided by the ASC in conjunction with a surgical procedure performed by the referring physician at the center.

(e) In-office ancillary services.—An exception would be available in-office ancillary services. The exception would apply to "medical and other health services" (as defined in Section 1861(s) of the Social Security Act).

The exception would most commonly apply to in-office lab tests or X-rays. The exception reflects a judgment that there often is a clear need for quick turn-around time on crucial tests.

Durable medical equipment, ambulance services, and parenteral and enteral nutrition services would be excluded from the exception. These services typically are not provided on an in-office basis and there is no clear justification for permitting these services to be provided by the referring physician.

To qualify for the exception, the service (i) must be furnished directly by the referring physician or an employee directly and personally supervised by the physician in the same building in which the physician practices, (ii) must be billed by the physician performing or supervising the service, and (iii) must meet any other condition the Secretary may impose by regulation to protect against program or patient abuse.

The same exception would apply to services provided by the physician group practice of which the referring physician is a member.

5. EXCEPTIONS FOR OTHER COMPENSATION ARRANGEMENTS

As noted in part 1 of the summary, the bill covers a broad range of financial relationships between referring physicians and providers in addition to covering ownership arrangements. This scope is needed to prevent efforts to circumvent the bill.

For example, lease agreements can be used to "lock-in" referrals. Promoters of magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) partnerships could market lease-back arrangements, in which referring physicians invest in equipment or facilities. The equipment and facilities would be leased back to a legally distinct medical practice which uses the equipment and facilities to provide MRI services. This would "lock-in" referrals, but would not violate the ownership restriction.

Management service contracts can also be used to "lock-in" a referral base. For example, a commercial lab could offer to establish and manage a simple in-office lab for use by a physician or group practice. The commerical lab could, in turn, explicitly or implicitly require the physician or group practice to refer send complex tests to the commercial lab as a quid pro quo.

To prevent these and similar abuses the bill applies to a broad range of financial arrangements involving referring physicians and providers, including lease, rental, and service contracts. At the same time, because lease or service arrangements between referring physicians and providers can serve legitimate ends, the bill provides a number of exceptions. These exceptions are consistent with the proposed "safe-harbor" regulations recently issued by the Secretary, but are narrower and do not include transactions that pose an undue risk of abuse or would be difficult for the Inspector General to monitor.

(a) Rental of office space.—An exception is provided for rental of office space.

For example, a group of physicians who own a medical office building could rent office space in the building to a lab and refer patients to the lab without violating the prohibition on self-referrals. By providing this exception, the bill accommodates legitimate concerns about patient convenience. Similarly, a hospital could rent space in a medical office building to physicians who refer patients to the hospital.

To qualify for the exception, several tests must be met: (i) there must be a written lease agreement signed by the parties specifying the space to be covered by the lease; (ii) the space must be dedicated for the exclusive use of the lessee; (iii) the term of the agreement must be for at least one year; (iv) the rent must be consistent with fair market value and aggregate payments may not vary directly or indirectly based on the volume or value of any referrals between the parties; (v) the arrangement must be pursuant to an agreement that would be considered to be commercially reasonable even if no referrals were made between the parties; and (vi) the arrangement must comply with any other requirements the Secretary may establish by regulation to protect against program or patient abuse.

An additional requirement applies in the case of rental of office space by a physician. In this situation, the space to be rented must be located in the same building as the building in which the physician has a practice.

The test of "commercial reasonableness" which appears in this exception and elsewhere is intended as an overall test of the legitimacy of the underlying arrangement. If there is a feature or aspect of the arrangement which would be unlikely to be present in a routine commercial arrangement where there is no potential for additional profit to one of the parties through induced referrals, the agreement may not meet the test of "commercial reasonableness." The term "commercial reasonableness" also encompasses a requirement that there be a legitimate and substantial underlying business purpose for the arrangement other than the mere inducement of referrals.

(b) Employment and service arrangements with hospitals.—A broad exception would apply to employment and service arrangements involving referring physicians and hospitals. Physicians could be employed by hospitals or could provide administrative (or other services) under contract to the hospital. Conversely, hospitals could provide administrative or other support services to physicians.

The exception recognizes longstanding relationships between physicians and hospitals. Many teaching hospitals have full-time employed medical staff. Other hospitals employ emergency room physicians and other physicians to provide specialized services. Conversely, hospitals frequently provide administrative support services to physicians who rent space in a medical office building adjacent to the hospital.

To qualify for the exception, the employment or service arrangement must: (i) be for identifiable services; (ii) the amount of remuneration provided must be consistent with fair market value and may not be determined in a manner that takes into account directly or indirectly the volume or value of any referrals made by the physician; (iii) the arrangement must be pursuant to an agreement that would be considered to be commercially reasonable even if no referrals were made to the hospital; and (iv) the arrangement meets such other requirements as the Secretary may impose by regulation to protect against program or patient abuse.

(c) Other administrative services.—A narrower exception would permit non-hospital providers to employ (or contract with) referring physicians for specific identifiable administrative services in three situations described below. Employment of a referring physician would not otherwise be permitted. Additionally, in each case, the employment arrangement must also comply with requirements (ii)-(iv) of paragraph (b).

First, an exception would be allowed, if the referring physician is employed as a medical director of the provider pursuant to a requirement under Title XVIII of the Social Security Act that the provider have a medical director. This exception would apply to medical directors at facilities such as, home health agencies, hospices, and home intravenous therapy providers.

Second, an exception would be allowed for direct patient care services provided to a hospice patient pursuant to a contract with the hospice. This exception is needed to accommodate a unique feature of the hospice program. Under law, physician services (other than services of the patient's attending physician) cannot be reimbursed directly to the physician. Instead, such services are covered as hospice services and are reimbursed indirectly through payments made to the hospice.

Third and finally, non-hospital providers could employ referring physicians to provide administrative services in certain limited situations. The exception applies only with respect to general administrative services. Payment for direct patient care services, including consulting on individual cases, would not be permitted. Such direct patient care services should be reimbursed directly by the Medicare program, if covered. To prevent abuse, the exception is further limited to exceptional circumstances. Any attempt to secure referral base by employing a significant number of referring physicians would trigger a violation of the bill. A providers should have only a small number of referring physicians employed to provide administrative services for each of the provider's major service areas, and such employment should be for legitimate business purposes.

(d) Physician recruitment.—An exemption would be available for compensation (or other remuneration) provided by a hospital to a physician as an inducement for the physician to relocate in the geographic area served by the hospital in order to become a member of the medical staff of the hospital so long as there is no requirement that the physician refer patients to the hospital and the arrangement complies with requirements (ii)-(iv) of paragraph (b).

(e) Isolated transactions.—A final exception would be made for isolated transactions, such as a one-time sale of real or personal property. For example, a hospital could sell a referring physician a piece of equipment. The exception would not apply, however, if the transactions were part of a pattern intended to secure patient referrals.

To qualify for an exception, the transaction must comply with requirements (ii)-(iv) of paragraph (b).

6. SANCTIONS

(a) Denial of payment.—Medicare payment would be denied for any item or service provided pursuant to a prohibited referral.

(b) Refund requirements.—A person who receives any payment from a Medicare beneficiary (including any coinsurance or deductible payments or any payment for an unassigned claim) for a service provided pursuant to a prohibited referral would be required to make a prompt refund to the beneficiary.

(c) Civil money penalty and exclusion for improper referrals.—Any physician who makes a referral that the physician knows or should know is prohibited under this bill would be subject to civil money penalties and exclusion from the Medicare program if a claim or bill is submitted pursuant to such a referral. The provider submitting the bill or claim would be subject to the same penalties if the provider knew or should have known that the bill or claim was for a service provided pursuant to a prohibited referral. The civil money penalty would be up to $15,000 for each item or service provided pursuant to a prohibited referral plus an amount equal to twice the amount billed for the item or service.

(d) Civil money penalty and exclusion for circumvention schemes.—Circumvention schemes would be prohibited subject to civil money penalties of up to $100,000 and exclusion from the Medicare program.

One scheme commonly discussed involves cross referrals. Under this scheme, for example, physicians in City A who own a facility in that city would enter into an understanding with physicians in City B who own a comparable facility in that city. They would exchange ownership of their facilities. Each group would then agree to refer patients to the facility owned by the other group. This and similar schemes would be prohibited.

More generally, the prohibition on circumvention schemes applies to any physician or entity that enters into any arrangement or scheme (written or verbal, implicit or explicit) which the physician or entity knows or should know has a principal purpose the assuring of referrals by the physician to a particular entity which would be a violation of the bill if the physician made referrals to the entity directly.

7. DEFINITIONS

(a) Compensation arrangement.—A "compensation arrangement" is any arrangement involving any remuneration between a physician (or immediate family member) and a provider.

(b) Remuneration.—The term "remuneration" includes any remuneration, directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly, in cash or in kind.

(c) Fair market value.—The term "fair market value" means the value in arms length transactions, consistent with general market value without taking into account any additional value that might accrue as a result of the potential for referrals.

(d) Group practice.—A "group practice" is defined as a group of two or more physicians legally organized as a partnership, professional corporation, or other similar association (i) in which each physician provides substantially the full range of services which the physician routinely provides, including medical care, consultation, diagnosis, or treatment through the joint use of shared office space, facilities, equipment and personnel; (ii) for which substantially all of the services of the physicians who are members of the group are provided through the group and are billed in the name of the group and the amounts so received are treated as receipts of the group; (iii) in which the overhead expenses of, and income from, the practice are distributed in accordance with methods previously determined by members of the group, and (v) which meets such other requirements as the Secretary may impose.

8. EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision would be effective for referrals made on or after June 30, 1989, except that the effective date would be July 1, 1990 in the case of financial relationships that were entered into and became legally binding before February 9, 1989.

9. DEADLINE FOR CERTAIN REGULATIONS

The Secretary would be required to publish final regulations within 9 months after enactment defining the following terms: (i) "ownership or investment interest" involving indirect ownership or investment interests; (ii) "compensation arrangement" involving remuneration made indirectly between the parties to the arrangement; and (iii) "sole provider in a rural area".

LEGISLATIVE AGENDA FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning under this special order to outline the legislative agenda that I plan to pursue in the 101st Congress as the elected representative from the District of Columbia. My principal focus will be on the issues for which I have long fought such as a comprehensive crime and antidrug effort, greater self-determination for District residents, expanded affordable housing opportunities for low- and moderate-income Americans, improved public education, and better health care for all our citizens.

I also plan, to an even greater extent than before, to utilize my position as the second ranking member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, where I serve as chairman of the Subcommittee on International Development, Finance, Trade and Monetary Policy, to address the numerous banking and financial issues that are of growing concern to individuals, businesses and governments, both here and abroad.

I would like to begin by congratulating the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] on his succession as chairman of the Banking Committee. Under his leadership, the committee is off to a very fast and forward start, with hearings already having been held on three major issues within our jurisdiction, mainly Third World debt, the FSLIC crisis, and the economic health of the financial services industry.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on January 23, in my inaugural comments to an audience of nearly 1,000 of my constituents, I shared the goals I hope to accomplish during my tenth term as their elected representative. Utilizing the seniority I have gained in terms of committee assignments, and the close collegial relationships it has been my privilege to build up over 18 years of service in this august body, I plan a very ambitious legislative agenda.

First, as a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I plan to introduce two initiatives designed to enhance drug enforcement techniques. On the domestic front, we need to strengthen law enforcement procedures so that there can be prompt eviction of any individuals found to be involved in drug trafficking from both public and private multifamily housing developments. On the international front, we need to tailor our foreign and military aid programs more specifically to those developing countries which, because of their depressed local economies and trade imbalances, are particularly vulnerable to the illicit cash flow generated by the drug cartels.

Second, as a member of the District of Columbia Committee, I plan to launch several legislative initiatives aimed at strengthening our local government's ability to more efficiently and effectively execute its role in passing legislation, making budget decisions, and managing our judicial system through the establishment of an intermediate appellate court and the local appointment of judges and other key law enforcement officers.

Third, as a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, I will be very active in the three major areas requiring our attention, namely Third World debt, housing and FSLIC. Insofar as the Third World debt is concerned, we learned at a hearing on January 6, 1989, that the major U.S. banks have improved their balance sheets through additional reserves, while the economic and development prospects of the debtor countries have failed to show similar progress.

Included in the Omnibus Trade bill passed by the 100th Congress was legislation which my subcommittee wrote and which mandates the Treasury Department to pursue two specific proposals for addressing the increasingly dangerous problem of the Third World debt. The Treasury Department is required to report back to the Banking Committee on these proposals not later than March 1, 1989, and upon receipt of these reports, it will be my intention to draft legislation which can finally move the international financial community toward some concrete resolution of this crisis.

With respect to the housing issue, I am glad to note that after a 7-year hiatus, we were able to pass major legislation last year in the form of a $15 billion authorization bill to fund a number of important Federal programs. Our task this year will be to ensure that in the first year of actual expenditures under this legislation we receive the maximum impact for the Federal dollars involved. This will require close coordination with community leaders and local officials such as the advisory neighborhood commissions we have in the District. I intend to pursue that coordination vigorously.

I also note that Chairman GONZALEZ has reintroduced, as H.R. 1, his housing trust legislation, and I look forward to working with him on this legislative proposal. In this connection, I will seek to focus our attention, in particular, on those first time homebuyers who are seeing the opportunity for home ownership closed off as a result of spiraling housing costs in such desirable urban and suburban areas as the District of Columbia and its surrounding communities.

Finally, there is the FSLIC issue which is closely the most costly and difficult problem to come before the Banking Committee during my entire tenure of nearly two decades. I will not belabor the subject by reciting the extent of the revenue shortfall confronting the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., and ultimately the U.S. Treasury, except to say that the middle range of the cost estimate is now between $75–$100 billion, and growing at a projected rate of $15 billion a year.

In approaching this issue, there are several criteria that must be kept uppermost in our minds, but the most important are the budgetary implications of the crisis. In the current environment, it is simply unrealistic to expect this Congress to appropriate $30–$50 billion, let alone $100 billion, to bail out the thrift industry. As mentioned, it took us 7 years to agree with the Reagan administration on a $15 billion housing bill, and a year of wrangling with the Senate to pass a $2.7 billion drug bill.

The needed funds must come in substantial part from sources other than the Federal coffers, and yet we are up against a situation where savings institutions are already paying over twice as much as commercial banks for deposit insurance. Healthy S&L's are stretched too thin in terms of their share of this burden, and it would be equally unfair for FDIC insured institutions to be asked to absorb the cost through any type of merger of the two insurance funds.

I am carefully studying the administration's new recommendations with respect to both the funding issue and regulatory reforms, as well as those of industry groups and other parties. I intend to be an active participant in this legislative debate and to help ensure that this issue is resolved fairly and effectively. Among other things, I feel that it is especially critical that the home lending function be preserved so that all Americans can be assured the opportunity for affordable housing. I also plan to develop a set of private sector incentives that will encourage banks and bank holding companies to invest voluntarily in the S&L industry. When the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has to resort to extraordinarily expensive deals with corporate raiders in order to dispose of problem thrifts, it may be time to revisit the issue of limitations on the acquisition of thrifts by banking institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me mention one other matter about which I am very concerned, but feel that there is a lack of adequate information on which to base a response. This has to do with the basic question of whether the consumer is benefiting from and not being discriminated against by the revolution in financial services that we have witnessed over the last 15 years. Obviously, we could not turn back the clock even if we wanted to, but I remain concerned in our rush to ameliorate the extensive foreign loan exposure at money center institutions, and in our haste to resolve wholesale failures among savings and loan associations, that we not lose sight of our responsibility to protect the interest of the borrowing and saving public during this time of structural reform in the financial services industry. This concern is justified in light of a recent report that minorities, even higher income minorities, are twice as likely as whites to have their applications for home loans rejected by savings and loan associations.

I will request that the General Accounting Office report to us on its findings as to whether the level and cost of consumer services have increased or decreased with respect to the delivery of financial products as a result of deregulation. I will further request that these findings be broken down on the basis of geographic location, income level, race, age, and other relevant criteria. In addition, I will seek the GAO's recommendations for increasing affordable delivery of financial services.

Let me thank the Members for their attention, and say that I look forward to sharing the results of this study with them as we proceed to work our way through the many difficult issues I have touched upon today.

THE TELEPHONE OPERATOR SERVICE CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BATES). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the next time you use a telephone in an airport, hotel, hospital, or other public place, be careful. The operator that you talk to may be a little bit shady.

These new operators have already upset thousands of Americans. More people complained to the Federal Communications Commission about them last year than about anything else, including dial-a-porn. Already the FCC has logged over 2,000 complaints. This is what is happening.

Since the breakup of AT&T in 1984, many firms have begun competing to provide operator service for the millions of public telephones across America. We are all aware of the competition to provide long-distance service for our home phones, but many are not aware that a similar competition is taking place regarding public phones. Many of these public phones are typical coin-operated pay phones, many are credit-card phones, and many look like ordinary home phones, only they are located in places that are accessible to the public, such as a motel or hospital room. This is a huge and lucrative market. The regional Bell companies alone own about 1.7 million coin-operated public telephones which generate about $2.5 billion in long-distance revenue every year.

Although we are familiar with the situation of the homeowner choosing his or her long-distance service, many do not realize that the owner of the public phone (or the owner of the premises where a coin-operated telephone is located) also gets to choose the long-distance operator service for those phones. This means that the traveler, customer, or patient must use the operator chosen by the airport manager, shopping center manager, or hospital administrator.

Beginning the first of this year, the first round of balloting began for the selection of long-distance operator service for every pay telephone in America that's owned by a Bell company or GTE. For several years, the owners of public telephones not controlled by these companies have been able to choose their own operator services for their phones, and long-distance service generally has been included in the operator service package.

Since the owner of the public telephone rarely uses that phone himself, he does not tend to mind the cost of operator service as a homeowner would. In fact, he usually seeks to make a profit from the telephone that he has made available to the public. Of course, this really means that he wants to make a profit from the people who use the telephone. Usually the profit goes to support the telephone owner's main business, but it could theoretically go to any purpose. Private enterprise has responded with numerous companies that tempt the owner of the phones with big profits. One national hospital chain is expected to make almost $250,000 this year from a company that provides operator services for the telephones in its hospitals. In most cases, the hospital patient probably doesn't realize that he will be really paying a small part of his hospital bill when he pays the monthly telephone bill.

The most common example of this new operator service is when the hotel guest tries to make a call from his or her room. Not only have many hotels levied a flat charge for every call made from the room, whether local or toll-free 1-800, hotels have also begun hiring operator services that charge more than the customary AT&T rates for the placement of calls. Some hotels are better about disclosing the cost of using its phones than others, but generally you get one surprise when you check out of the hotel and see the bill for the flat charges and another surprise when you get your monthly bill and compare the rates charged for your calls. Many Americans have glumly accepted the flat charge for each telephone call, but they have refused to accept the second hidden charge on their monthly telephone bill. They thought that they had settled their account with the hotel when they checked out; instead they end up paying part of their hotel bill a month later.

The new firms that are vying to serve public telephones are providing what they call "alternative operator services" or "AOS." The alternative they are providing is to the local telephone company operator or, more often, the AT&T long-distance operator. But seldom has a new industry been so poorly named. The person who tries to call on telephones controlled by AOS companies often has no alternative to the questionable service that is being provided by shady operators. And the cost. The cost of AOS service is usually not only hidden but high.

The fundamental reason for the unfairness to consumers is the fact that when the owner of the telephone is different from its user, the owner has a tendency to exploit the user. Instead of the free market tending to drive down the price of operator service as it has for home telephones, the tendency is to drive up both the price for the user and the profits for the owner. The AOS company is the happy middleman who makes all this reverse competition possible.

THE TENNESSEE EXAMPLE

I first became aware of AOS after minor scandals involving AOS had already hit the campuses of Vanderbilt University and the University of Tennessee. Each school had signed up with an AOS company to service its dormitory and other campus telephones. All fall students called home collect or no credit cards and yet received no bills. It was too good to be true. And it was.

By December the bills came. Not only were 5 months of calls lumped together due to a computer error, the AOS charged considerably more than regular long-distance rates for the calls. Parents were outraged. They were even angrier when they discovered that the schools intended to make money off the phone calls. As we have seen, one of the main reasons for the growth of AOS companies is their sales pitch of profits for the owners of the public telephones. This hidden tax or rakeoff on every phone call shocked Tennessee parents and university alumni.

The Tennessee story has a happy ending. Even the AOS agreed that the bills were too high, complaining students and parents were given refunds, and each school terminated the contract of the AOS provider when it refused to lower its rates to the customary AT&T level.

THE NATIONAL EXPERIENCE

On a national level, we don't know the outcome of the story. Today it is hard to travel to an airport, restaurant chain, shopping mall, convenience store, or other public place that does not secretly use AOS. These managers of these public facilities love the 15 percent or so commission that they make off the calls. And many travelers and customers seem either unaware of the difference in service, or uncertain about whom to blame.

The Federal Communications Commission also seems uncertain what to do about it. A proceeding is pending before the FCC right now, but the FCC's blind faith in the unregulated free market is likely to prevent it from taking appropriate action. So far it has only issued a "consumer alert" that has hardly alerted anyone. One would have thought that the blizzard of complaints the FCC has received would have moved the FCC to quicker, firmer action.

State public utility commissions have not been so slow to act. In fact, many have already chosen to regulate the rates and practices of companies regarding their in-State calls. In Tennessee, for example, no AOS can charge more than the regulated rates of AT&T. But State regulatory commissions lack jurisdiction over the huge volume of interstate telephone calls. Only the Federal Government can regulate interstate calls.

THE PROS AND CONS OF AOS

Although it is clear that the managers of public facilities like the payments that they receive from AOS providers, they dislike having to deal with irate members of the public who feel that they have been deceived by the AOS service. What exactly is AOS service like to the consumer?

Sometimes AOS is both better and worse than regular operator service, depending primarily on the particular company involved, the specific type of call that is made, and the demands of the telephone owner on the AOS provider that he has contracted with.

Common complaints about AOS include:

Systematic overcharging for long-distance calls at rates that are now 50 to 100 percent higher than AT&T rates, and have ranged up to four times the normal AT&T rate;

Refusal to connect the caller to the long-distance service of his or her choice, even when the caller is paying for the call with the credit card of his preferred long-distance company;

Slow call processing, and elaborate routing of calls to remote centers for processing;

Inability of some AOS to handle emergency calls properly and quickly; and Lack of notice of the identity, rates, and billing and complaint procedures of the AOS provider, as well as suspicion of high commissions paid to the owner of the public premises.

On the positive side, AOS offers some service enhancements, again depending on the AOS provider and the needs of the telephone owner and user:

Superior emergency calling service to what AT&T and the Bells have usually provided in the past;

Operators who speak foreign languages;

Advanced services such as message forwarding, voice mail; and Cheaper rates for selected calling areas at certain times.

Even for members of the AOS industry, the negatives too often exceed the positives. The industry has formed a trade association called the Operator Services Providers Association which has established a voluntary code of responsibility in order to stem the abuses. It seems unlikely that self-regulation will be able to meet consumers' needs, however, since: First, the market does not seem to promote helpful competition when the owner of the telephone is not its primary user; and second, unscrupulous operators will always be able to gain at least a temporary commercial advantage. Therefore legislation seems required.

MY LEGISLATION

I am introducing today legislation that takes a moderate, prodisclosure approach to the problems caused by the AOS industry. I do not ask the FCC to put anyone out of business. Instead, I require the FCC to adopt rules fairly quickly that would at least do four things:

First, require written notice to be posted on or near public telephones so that the caller could see before he makes the call that AOS service controls the telephone.

Second, require that AOS companies answer callers' questions about rates for the call about to be made, as well as for complaint procedures.

Third, prohibit AOS companies from blocking access to the long-distance carrier of the caller's choice, and from blocking the billing of a call to the credit card issued by a long-distance carrier.

Fourth, require AOS companies to charge only "just and reasonable" rates, which would include no charges for incomplete calls.

This legislation would not only affect startup companies but telephone giants like AT&T. They are all in the same business; they should play by the same rules.

Mr. Speaker, I have requested that the House Energy and Commerce Committee's Telecommunications and Finance Subcommittee schedule hearings on this legislation as soon as possible. The staff of the subcommittee and its chairman have already been extremely helpful in researching this matter, as has Dirk Forrister on my own staff. I anticipate that the subcommittee will be able to act promptly on the matter.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation. As I said earlier, the FCC has already received more complaints about alternative operator service than about any other consumer issue, including dial-a-porn. I am sure that hundreds, if not thousands, of your constituents have already been aggravated by shady operators in the AOS business. Let's give our constituents a fair chance to have a right to make an informed choice every time they make a call from a public telephone.

Mr. Speaker, millions of Americans have enjoyed the humor in Lily Tomlin's portrayal of the old-fashioned telephone operator named Ernestine, who wielded devastating power over callers with her whims with her headset and cord-board. The days of Ernestine are not over, as the unsuspecting American public is finding out every day that they try to call on America's public telephones.

ADULT LITERACY

Mr. Speaker, I also rise to introduce the National Center for Adult Literacy Act of 1989. This act would create a federally funded, nonprofit institution that would: First, conduct basic and applied research on the problems of adult literacy and ways to overcome them; second, provide technical assistance and training to literacy instructors and program managers throughout the Nation; and third, assist policymakers at all levels of government and in the private sector to monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of literacy programs and develop more effective service delivery systems.

Mr. Speaker, adult literacy is one of the most serious domestic problems that our Nation faces today. It is a vital issue for our economy. And it is a problem with enormous social consequences as well.

The raw numbers on adult literacy speak for themselves. Numerous studies by public and private groups indicate that 75 percent of our work force in the year 2000, about 100 million people, are already adults today. They are out of school, most are working and struggling to support themselves and their families. Of these 100 million adults, tens of millions are seriously handicapped in their work and in their everyday lives by a lack of basic skills. They cannot read, write, compute, solve problems or perform other basic intellectual functions well enough to gain or hold good jobs, to participate effectively in public life, or to meet the challenges of everyday living in an increasingly complex world.

For the most part these are not people who are completely unable to read, write, compute or solve everyday problems. They are not the entirely unskilled illiterates who have received so much attention from the press. Fortunately, relatively few Americans fall into that category, 3 to 4 million at most. And although other priorities should not diminish our efforts to assist them, they constitute only a small part of the national literacy problem.

The lion's share of that problem is the difficulties faced by tens of millions of adults who simply have not mastered basic skills very well. They can read, but often not well enough to use a reference book or understand much of what is in a daily newspaper. They can write, but often not well enough to compose a business letter or fill out an application form. They can compute, but often not well enough to fill out a tax form, to balance a checkbook, or prepare an invoice.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that there is no way in which the United States can hold its own in an increasingly competitive world economy, increase productivity, avoid a manpower shortage, and in general, maintain its standard of living when so large a portion of our work force lacks these basic skills. And this problem is becoming more serious with each passing year, as our economy continues to shift from an industrial base to a greater reliance on service industries as a source of jobs. Once, strong backs and willing hands were enough to earn a living and to keep the wheels of the economy going around, but today's service industries require increasingly higher levels of basic literacy as a precondition for employment, advancement and economic growth.

Looking to the future, it is likely that in the year 2000 or thereabouts, the supply of labor and the types of jobs available will adjust to be in balance with each other. The United States has the choice between developing a high-wage, high-productivity economy based on a highly skilled work force or a low-wage, low-productivity economy based on a work force with limited skills. In other words, solving the literacy problem will mean the difference between economic advance or decline.

But we need not look even that far into the future. Today problems of literacy are closely associated with problems of poverty. Those of our fellow citizens who lack basic skills are almost always the poor, and they are generally the working poor.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent a district in middle Tennessee and east Tennessee. The people who live in my district are proud, hard-working Americans. But poverty is a very serious problem in our area, and I am convinced that a great part of that problem is ultimately traceable to the fact that far too many people are struggling with the problem of limited basic skills. It is very difficult to attract high-wage industry into areas such as ours because we often cannot offer a large enough work force with high-level skills. And it is hard to maintain and expand the industry we have.

But a similar story in a different form could be told about almost every congressional district in the United States, including some of the most affluent areas, which are currently suffering from labor shortages—not a shortage of workers, but a shortage of trainable workers with adequate basic skills.

Mr. Speaker, there are a great many things that must be done to forestall the literacy crisis that is looming over this Nation's future. A comprehensive agenda for national action has recently been outlined by an independent, nonpartisan research institution, the Southport Institute, in its excellent report on the problem, "Jump Start," authored by Mr. Forrest P. Chisman.

Other study groups, such as the Hudson Institute in its "Workforce 2000" report, the Sunbelt Institute, and an ad hoc coalition of literacy groups called the "Working Group for Adult Literacy," have advanced overlapping agendas.

But precisely because there is so much to be done we must begin somewhere. And in a time of limited resources, we must look to the highest priority initiatives that must be taken in this, as in all other matters vital to the public interest. President Bush has not only promised to be the "education President," he has promised to work to wipe out illiteracy in 8 years. And First Lady Barbara Bush has long been a national leader in promoting literacy.

It is for these reasons that I propose the creation of a National Center for Adult Literacy, and I urge rapid consideration of this measure.

Leaders of the literacy field and independent experts alike agree that this is one of the highest priorities to combat the problems of literacy in this country. To quote the "Jump Start" report:

> A national center of excellence and expertise is desperately needed. Without the services it could provide, any other efforts to upgrade basic skills are bound to fall far short of their potential. In fact we will not even have any good way of knowing how effective they are.

It is easy to see why a national center has such great importance. We know a great deal about how to upgrade the skills of adults. Model programs and practices are spread across the United States. And we are learning more each day. For example, in recent years, it has become apparent that computer-assisted instruction, if properly used, can greatly increase the motivation of learners and learning gains. But, tragically, we have no good easy way to translate what we know into practice.

There are today hundreds of thousands of paid professionals and volunteers providing literacy training services in the United States. These are hard working, highly dedicated people. But for the most part, the professionals are schoolteachers working part time, in the evenings or on weekends, and the volunteers are people who can devote at best a few hours a week to their talks. In neither case are the instructors specially trained in the techniques of teaching basic skills to adults.

In addition, most programs are fairly small and not very closely linked to each other. Adult literacy instructors want to use the best available techniques to help their students. They know that well-designed, well-managed programs operating at the state of the art can serve more students in a shorter space of time and such programs can greatly increase the skill gains of students. In short, by using the best available practices, we can increase the productivity of our existing national investment in literacy services many times over—we can get more bang for the buck.

But, tragically, there is no one institution to which teachers, program administrators and others can turn to learn what the best current practices are—no reliable source of information and advice. The reason for this, I believe, is that literacy has been so seriously neglected as a national priority for so long that we have not bothered to develop institutions that will provide advice and assistance to the people who are working in this field.

This is not, after all, a very difficult function to perform. It involves only surveying and validating best practices in a systematic way and disseminating the information to literacy providers who are eager to have it. But creating an institution that would perform this function would revolutionize the field and bring new hope to teachers and learners alike.

Simply disseminating existing best practices is not enough, however. There are some surprisingly large holes in our knowledge about adult literacy instruction—some basic tools of the trade that are missing. And there is a remarkably broad consensus about what these are. Among them are more adequate ways of measuring the level of basic skills of learners. Today many programs still rely on grade level reading tests initially designed for children. These tests do not even capture the reading abilities of adults, let alone the other basic skills problems they may have. And although more sophisticated tests have been developed, they too do not give the guidance that both teachers and learners need about exactly what each learner needs to accomplish or when he or she has accomplished it. To exaggerate slightly, running literacy programs today is like navigating without a compass—teachers must set their course by the drift of the wind and occasional sightings of landfalls.

We also do not know enough about how to use the powerful new tools of computer assisted instruction most effectively, how to teach higher order skills such as communication and problem solving and a great many other fundamental issues in this field.

Investment in research on those issues, if translated to practitioners in the field will undoubtedly increase the effectiveness and cost efficiency of the Nation's investment in literacy services many times over. And none of the research that needs to be conducted poses great intellectual difficulties. It is all well within the reach of scholars today.

Yet the United States invests at most a few million dollars per year in research on literacy. There are at most a dozen first-rate scholars, many of them working only part time, scattered across the country. There is no excuse for our failure to mobilize a more substantial research effort. A national center of excellence with an ongoing, structured program of research responsive to the needs of the field is desperately needed, and it is clearly the most direct and straightforward response to a problem that urgently needs a direct and straightforward solution.

But disseminating current best practices and investing in research to upgrade those practices still leaves one other high priority problem unsolved. It is a very serious problem for Members of Congress, for members of the executive branch and for policymakers at the State and local level, as well as leaders of industry and labor who are concerned about the literacy problem.

Mr. Speaker, literacy services are delivered by at least a dozen Federal programs, by scores of State and local programs and by hundreds of private sector and volunteer efforts. We make a substantial national investment in literacy and we should make an even more substantial investment. But we presently have no good way of knowing which of these programs are effective and which are not, how they overlap and intersect, what their strengths and deficiencies are and how to make them better. Clearly there is a need for greater coordination, but what should we be coordinating with? What and how should we go about it? In short, we do not really know what we are getting for our national investment in literacy and how we can accomplish more with the resources we have or with greater resources.

As policymakers responsible to the public, we have a responsibility to track developments in the field better and to see to it that the information is available that will help us to improve our efforts. Again, this is not very difficult to achieve. Systematic data gathering from public programs and the private sector, analysis of outcomes and comparisons of programs, the maintenance of nationwide data bases and other similar functions are all that we require. But there is currently no institution that can perform these functions for us and for other policymakers.

Mr. Speaker, the National Center for Adult Literacy Act would address these very top priority issues in the literacy field in a direct, immediate, and forceful way. It would create a new institution, a Center for Adult Literacy, that would have as its three missions disseminating information about best practices to the literacy providers, conducting applied research to upgrade the state of the art, and providing policymakers with assessment information to guide the improvement of public and private programs. It would be a national center of excellence to which everyone within the literacy field could turn for expert, impartial advice. In many ways, it would perform the same type of role, within the literacy field, that the National Institutes of Health or the National Institute of Standards and Technology perform in other fields: concentrating expertise on basic national needs and disseminating the results.

The National Center Act establishes this new institution as a nongovernmental, nonprofit corporation, governed by a board of directors representing both Government departments and representatives of State and local government, business, labor, literacy providers and the scholarly community.

The reasons for adopting this structure are simple. The Center should be nongovernmental primarily because many Federal departments have responsibility for literacy programs, and there is no one department where it should logically be housed. The Center might be an independent executive agency, but in my view it is too small to be weighed down with the many overhead functions that freestanding executive agencies must carry. And in my estimation, we already have too many arms of the Federal bureaucracy.

This suggests that an extra governmental organization is the best model. But in constructing such an organization, I believe that it is important to insure that its agenda reflects the priorities of all sectors of the literacy field, because it will have failed in its mission if it does not serve both all Federal agencies and the many other agencies at the State and local level and in the private sector that provide literacy services. Therefore, I believe that the governance structure in the National Center Act, while somewhat innovative, is a logical and appropriate way to construct this new institution.

The National Center Act proposes a Federal appropriation to the Center of $15 million in fiscal year 1990, and $30 million for each of the 4 years thereafter. After 5 years, I believe that Congress should reassess the effectiveness of this new institution and make whatever modifications are necessary. I also believe that, given the magnitude of the literacy problem and the multiplier effect that the Center will have on public and private programs, it is a bargain at this price. This is money we cannot afford not to spend. Education may seem expensive, but it is never as costly as ignorance.

Mr. Speaker, those are the elements of the National Center for Adult Literacy Act. I believe that it is one of the single most important steps that we can take to meet the problems of limited basic skills that are holding our Nation back. It is a simple and relatively inexpensive measure, and I very much hope that this Congress in this session can act quickly to make it a reality.

ABOLISH THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BATES). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced, with eight of my colleagues, a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to provide for the direct election of the President of the United States by the people. The electoral college is an anachronism, and it is time to recognize that the world has changed dramatically since the framers of the Constitution produced this compromise system. The voters of this country do not need to be second guessed in their choice of a President.

There are several reasons that this system does not make sense in 1988. The electoral college was a compromise between the delegates at the Constitutional Convention who favored direct election by the people and those who favored election by the Congress. Those who favored election by the Congress felt that the people were unqualified to make a wise and informed choice of a leader for a new and fragile democracy. Perhaps in 18th century America, where communication was poor and citizens did not have access to information to make a wise choice, there were valid arguments for election by the Congress. However, television and radio have revolutionized everyone's access to information. Americans can make an informed choice.

There are other problems that have always existed. Small States have greater relative influence because they are guaranteed at least three electors, regardless of population. Large States skew the popular vote by giving a candidate with a 1 percent victory 100 percent of their electors. The result is that a candidate who wins the popular vote could lose in the electoral college. If neither candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, then the House of Representatives decides the election and each State delegation gets just one vote. Again, this further distorts the vote of the people, and could create a domestic crisis of significant proportion.

I believe it is time to let the American people elect their President. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I intend to pursue this issue in the next Congress. I should note that my colleague, JACK BROOKS, of Texas, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, has introduced a similar resolution. It is my belief that a majority of my colleagues, as well as a majority of the American people, strongly support this change.

THE MEDICARE ADULT DAY CARE AMENDMENTS OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reintroduce legislation, the Medicare Adult Day Care amendments, first introduced in 1986. The bill is intended to help more of our Nation's senior citizens and chronically ill stay in their own communities rather than being unnecessarily incarcerated in nursing homes and other institutions away from their own homes and communities. This legislation would establish a Medicare day-care benefit for chronically disabled persons, in which qualified beneficiaries would be eligible to attend adult day health centers for up to 125 days per year with a $5 daily copayment. I am very pleased to be joined by 13 other cosponsers, including Representative ROYBAL, chairman of the Select Committee on Aging and Representative LELAND, a member of the Health and Environment Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, in reintroducing this measure. The measure which I introduced in the last Congress, H.R. 550, had a total of 85 cosponsors, and I was very pleased that Senator Melcher introduced a companion measure, S. 1839, that also attracted considerable support. I understand and am pleased that Senator BRADLEY plans to reintroduce that measure in this Congress.

The need which this legislation attempts to address is part of a persistent yet neglected national problem that will not just disappear over time: the lack of a comprehensive national long-term health care policy. By now, the parameters of this problem have become familiar to most policymakers. The aging of the population over the next few decades—due to both demographics and longer life expectancies—will impose increasingly greater strains on an already overburdened system. The present structure of health care delivery and financing does not make effective use of total health care dollars. Entire segments of the population receive second-rate services. The United States is the only major industrialized nation in the world without a national health care policy. I think it is especially important to point out that senior citizens today spend the same percentage of their personal incomes on health care as they did before the existence of Medicare.

Moreover, Medicare provides coverage mostly for acute care situations and still largely frowns upon preventive health care services. Those requiring long term custodial care must either be wealthy enough to pay the exorbitant costs of such care out of pocket, or destitute enough to meet Medicaid eligibility requirements. The middle-income segment of the population follows the all-too-familiar spend down path, whereby they must deplete their lifelong savings before becoming eligible for any public assistance. While the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 created some provision for the elderly to hold on to their resources if a spouse enters a nursing home, their savings are usually sufficient to cover only a short period of care; thereafter they become the responsibility of the State, under whose jurisdiction they remain indefinitely.

Those critics who abhor the thought of Medicare coverage for preventive care because of the expense should just play out the scenario: today's Medicare patient unable to afford the relatively inexpensive costs of preventive or custodial community care is tomorrow's broke nursing home patient financially dependent on Medicaid. The "spend-down" requirement deprives many people of savings they have worked very hard over their lives to earn and build up. We should not shy away from shifting Medicare's focus, and that of the Nation's health system, to encompass preventive care because in the long run we will realize better health as well as great savings.

I believe it is high time that we fully consider and incorporate alternative means of caring for our Nation's ill and elderly. We need to broaden our perspective on the health care issue. Over the past few years, we have enacted significant reforms in the Medicare Program which have resulted in more efficient delivery of currently covered services. These changes have been encouraging. Now, we should be exploring ways of redesigning our health care system to meet the "big picture" human and fiscal needs of years ahead.

An oft-discussed and much lauded approach is to maximize the amount of time the individual spends in a community setting, either with their families or on their own. Aside from the obvious human benefits of avoiding institutionalization, such a strategy makes good fiscal sense as well. Measures designed to maximize a senior's independence and self-sufficiency should not be viewed as unnecessary luxuries but as sound investments.

Given the proper array of support services, countless senior citizens would be able to remain in the community for an extended period of time, reducing their dependence on publicly financed institutional care. The time has come to start putting into place the various components of a comprehensive system of long-term care alternatives. Already communities across the Nation are responding to the need as families and specialists are working together to implement creative solutions to the problem of caring for the aged. Adult day care is a particularly encouraging alternative that has already attracted widespread attention and is growing in popularity.

Adult day care, as you know, is a community-based group program designed to meet the needs of functionally impaired adults through individually tailored plans of care. It is a structured, comprehensive program that provides a variety of health, social, and related support services in a group setting on a less than 24-hour care basis. A multidisciplinary group of professionals—including a physician, a registered nurse, a physical, occupational and/or speech therapist, and, if needed, a dietician—work together to deliver the optimal configuration of services to meet the individual's needs.

Adult day care offers a number of unique benefits. It is cost-effective as compared to both institutionalization and home health care. The centers provide respite for primary care givers, reduce the incidence of acute illness through ongoing monitoring of health symptoms and preventive health care, and have been successful in avoiding or delaying institutionalization. In addition, clients, many of whom live alone, receive the vital psychological benefits of mental and social stimulation not available to them when confined to the home.

A 1982 evaluation of adult day care centers in California found that 87 percent of seniors who participated in the programs maintained or improved their level of functioning. This statistic is especially significant given the fact that 63 percent of the participants were eligible for institutionalization according to Medicaid field office criteria. Clearly, it is possible to avoid both the costs and the trauma of institutionalization provided that the proper community-based services are available to those in need.

Adult day care centers are a cost-effective means of delivering those services. Because the care is provided in a group meeting, day care centers can capitalize on the efficiency of providing care to more than one individual without having to act as a residential facility as well. Participants' needs are evaluated, a comprehensive care package is developed, and the necessary services are provided in a focused, efficient, and humane manner. The extensive benefits and advantages of adult day care were presented and highlighted at a hearing held last April by the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

Adult day care has grown quickly at the grassroots level over the last decade from approximately 300 programs in 1977 to over 1,600 today. Despite the success of these programs, funding is difficult to come by. Some States have taken advantage Medicaid's Section 2176 Waiver Program to provide coverage for certain low-income participants, but the Medicare-eligible population must pay out-of-pocket for these services. The result is that only the very poor or the rich can take advantage of this cost-effective alternative form of health care.

Clearly, the need and opportunity exists for some kind of adult day care coverage through the Medicare Program. Accordingly, in 1986 I first introduced the Medicare Adult Day Care amendments. This legislation, as I said, would allow adult Medicare part B beneficiaries considered "chronically impaired" to participate in adult day care programs through their supplementary Medicare insurance plans. In order to be covered for this new benefit, it must be certified that participants would otherwise require a level of care furnished in a hospital, skilled nursing facility, or intermediate care facility if the adult day care services were not provided. In addition, a maximum of 125 days per calendar year would be covered, and utilization would be subject to a $5-per-day copayment. The limit on days was raised from 100 per year, the figure in the bill's first two versions, to 125 to allow greater utilization of the benefit.

As you know, the Catastrophic Coverage Act mandates that the Secretary of Health and Human Services conduct a study on adult day care services. Specifically, the measure first requires that the Secretary conduct a survey of adult day care services currently being provided throughout the United States. Based on the survey results, it then requires HHS to report to Congress with recommendations for appropriate standards for the coverage of adult day care services under Medicare. My bill has been revised to direct that the Secretary take the findings and recommendations of this study into account when devising standards for a Medicare day care benefit.

Adult day care is a humane, cost-effective alternative form of health care of the sort that we as policymakers should be encouraging, and are beginning to actively do this. I was pleased and heartened that comprehensive long-term care measures introduced in the 100th Congress by Representatives STARK and WAXMAN and Senator KENNEDY all included adult day care equally with home care, another valuable form of community-based care, as alternatives to nursing home care. In this Congress, while no major long-term care bills have yet been introduced, I understand that several will be shortly, and that a number of these are again likely to include adult day care as an alternative. I am therefore hopeful that Congress will act soon to resolve the long-term care dilemma now facing increasing numbers of our senior citizens, and that this action will include strong provisions, such as those in the above bills, allowing for extensive utilization of adult day care and home care.

Mr. Speaker, we owe the American people the wisest and most efficient allocation of their hard-earned tax dollars, and we need to spend carefully in order to reduce and eliminate our still-large budget deficit. We owe elderly Americans the respect to allow them to live out their later years in the least restrictive, most dignified environment available. Adult day care, a compassionate, cost-effective form of care, can and should be an important component of our overall long-term care system, and the Federal Government should play a role in enabling the elderly to make full use of this and other community-based forms of care. I therefore hope that my colleagues will be able to fully support the Medicare Adult Day Care Amendments of 1989.

H.R. —

A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage of adult day care under the medicare program

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES IN ACT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Adult Day Care Amendments of 1989".

(b) REFERENCES IN ACT.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed as an amendment to, or repeal of, a provision, the reference shall be deemed to be made to the Social Security Act.

SEC. 2. COVERAGE OF ADULT DAY CARE SERVICES.

(a) UNDER PART B. Section 1832 (42 U.S.C. 1395k) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2)—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (F),

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (G) and by inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) adult day care for up to 125 days during any calendar year.";

(2) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(3) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) for purposes of subsection (a)(2)(H), adult day care shall be taken into account only if payment under this part is or would be, except for the limitation described in subsection (a)(2)(H) and except for the failure to comply with the request and certification requirements of section 1835(a), made with respect to such care.".

(b) DEFINITIONS RELATING TO COVERAGE.—Section 1861 (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"Adult Day Care; Adult Day Care Program

"(mm)(1) The term 'adult day care' means the following items and services provided to a chronically-impaired adult by an adult day care program under a written plan (for providing such care to such individual) established and periodically reviewed by the program's multidisciplinary team described in paragraph (2)(B)—

"(A) nursing care provided by or under the supervision of a registered professional nurse,

"(B) physical or occupational therapy or speech-language pathology,

"(C) medical social services,

"(D) personal care services under the supervision of a registered professional nurse,

"(E) planned therapeutic, social, physical, and educational activities,

"(F) transportation services from the adult's home to and from the program, and

"(G) nutritional services, including at least one meal daily and nutritional counseling and education.

"(2) The term 'adult day care program' means a public agency or private organization (or a subdivision thereof) which—

"(A)(i) is primarily engaged in providing services described in paragraph (1) to chronically-impaired adults in a group setting outside their homes on a less than 24-hour basis, and

"(ii) provides for such care and services directly or under arrangements made by the agency or organization, except that—

"(I) the agency or organization must routinely provide directly all of each of the services described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (D), and (E) of paragraph (1), and

"(II) in the case of other services described in paragraph (1) which are not provided directly by the agency or organization, the agency or organization must maintain professional management responsibility for all such services furnished to a chronically-impaired adult;

"(B) has a multidisciplinary group of personnel which—

"(i) includes at least—

"(I) one physician (as defined in subsection (r)(1)),

"(II) one registered professional nurse and one social worker employed by the agency or organization,

"(III) one consultant with skills respecting physical or occupational therapy or speech-language pathology, and

"(IV) as needed, a dietitian,

"(ii) conducts a written assessment of the health, social, and functional status of each chronically-impaired adult before the adult's admission to the program and periodically therafter,

"(iii) develops, in consultation with the chronically-impaired adult and the adult's family, a coordinated individualized treatment plan,

"(iv) provides (or supervises the provision of) the case and services described in paragraph (1), and

"(v) establishes the policies governing the provision of such care and services;

"(C) maintains health records on all chronically-impaired adults provided such care and services;

"(D) utilizes volunteers in its provision of care and services;

"(E) in the case of an agency or organization in any State in which State or applicable local law provides for the licensing of agencies or organizations of this nature, is licensed pursuant to such law;

"(F) has procedures for obtaining appropriate aid in medical emergencies; and

"(G) meets such other requirements as the Secretary may find necessary in the interest of the health and safety of the individuals who are provided care and services by such agency or organization.

"(3) The term 'chronically-impaired adult' means an individual—

"(A) who is 18 years of age or older, and

"(B) who has a physical, emotional, mental, or neurological impairment that, but for the provision of adult day care, makes the individual likely to require the level of care provided in a hospital or in a skilled or intermediate care facility.

"(4)(A) An entity is certified as a provider of services other than as an adult day care program shall be considered, for purposes of certification as an adult day care program, to have met any requirements under paragraph (2) which are also the same requirements for certification as such other type of provider. The Secretary shall coordinate surveys for determining certification under this title so as to provide, to the extent feasible, for simultaneous surveys of an entity which seeks to be certified as an adult day care program and as a provider of services of another type.

"(B) Any entity which is certified as an adult day care program and as a provider of services of another type shall have separate provider agreements under section 1866 and shall file separate costs reports (if applicable) with respect to costs incurred in providing adult day care and in providing other services and items under this title.".

SEC. 3. CERTIFICATION OF NEED.

(a) AS A CONDITION OF PAYMENT.—Section 1835(a)(2) (42 U.S.C. 1395n(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (G),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (H) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (H) the following new subparagraph:

"(I) in the case of adult day care, (i) such care is or was required because the individual needs or needed chronic care services involving skilled or custodial care, (ii) but for the provision of such services the individual is or was likely to require the level of care furnished in a hospital or in a skilled or intermediate care facility, (iii) a plan for such care has been established and is periodically reviewed by a multidisciplinary team (described in section 1861(mm)(2)(B)), and (iv) the care is or was furnished while the individual is or was under the care of a physician.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO EXCLUSIONARY PROVISIONS.—Section 1862(a) (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "; and" at the end of subparagraph (F) and,

(B) by striking out the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (G) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) in the case of adult day care, which are furnished to other than a chronically-impaired adult or which are not reasonable and necessary for the management of chronic illness;"; and

(2) in paragraph (9), by inserting "and, in the case of adult day care, as is otherwise permitted under paragraph (1)(F)" after "paragraph (1)(C)".

SEC. 4. PAYMENT AND COINSURANCE FOR ADULT DAY CARE.

(a) PAYMENT AMOUNTS.—Section 1833(a) (42 U.S.C. 1395l(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by striking "and (G)" and inserting "(G), and (H)",

(2) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (4),

(3) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting "; and", and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) in the case of services described in subparagraph (H) of section 1832(a)(2) (relating to adult day care), for each day of adult day care such a per diem amount as is based on the costs which are reasonable and related to the cost of furnishing such services or which are based on such other tests of reasonableness as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations, including those authorized under section 1861(v)(1)(A), less the coinsurance amount established under subsection (m).".

(b) DEDUCTIBLE DOES NOT APPLY.—Section 1833(b)(2) (42 U.S.C. 1395l(b)(2)) is amended by inserting ", with respect to adult day care," after "home health services".

(c) COINSURANCE AMOUNT.—Section 1833 (42 U.S.C. 1395l) is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(l) With respect to expenses incurred for each day of adult day care, the coinsurance amount is equal to $5.".

(d) LIMITING CHARGES PERMITTED BY ADULT DAY CARE PROGRAMS.—Section 1866(a)(2)(A) (42 U.S.C. 1395cc(a)(2)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by inserting "or (l)" after "1833(b)", and

(2) in the third sentence, by inserting ", with respect to adult day care" after "1861(s)(10)(A)".

SEC. 5. CERTIFICATION OF ADULT DAY CARE PROGRAMS.

(a) CONSULTATION WITH STATE AGENCIES.—Section 1863 (42 U.S.C. 1395z) is amended by striking out "and (jj)(3))" and inserting in lieu thereof "(jj)(3), and (mm)(2)".

(b) USE OF STATE AGENCIES.—Section 1864(a) (42 U.S.C. 1395aa(a)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by inserting ", an adult day care program," after "hospice program", and

(2) in the second sentence, by inserting "adult day care program," after "hospice program".

SEC. 6. MISCELLANEOUS CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) ADULT DAY CARE PROGRAM AS A PROVIDER OF SERVICES.—Section 1861(u) (42 U.S.C. 1395x(u)) is amended by inserting "adult day care program," after "hospice program,".

(b) TRANSFER ARRANGEMENTS.—Section 1861(w)(1) (42 U.S.C. 1395x(w)(1)) is amended by striking out "or hospice program" and inserting in lieu thereof "hospice program, or adult day care program".

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE AND REGULATIONS.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall apply to adult day care provided on or after the first day of the seventh month that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, shall issue such regulations as may be necessary—

(1) to define the services included in adult day care (as defined in section 1861(mm) of the Social Security Act),

(2) to establish the standards for qualification of an adult day care program under such section, and

(3) to establish the per diem rates of payment for adult day care under section 1833(a)(6) of such Act.

(c) ADOPTION OF CERTAIN STANDARDS.—In issuing such regulations with respect to the standards for qualification of an adult day care program, the Secretary shall take into account the recommendations reported by the Secretary to the Congress under section 1208(b) of the medicare catastrophic coverage act of 1988.

THE SPEAKER'S UNCOMMON COURAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the last several weeks here on Capitol Hill and around the Nation have seen some of the most shameless demagoguery that I have ever encountered in my entire political career. That observation includes the decade I spent in the Texas Legislature and even more years in Texas politics, where political rhetoric and naked partisan posturing have been refined to the highest possible degree of the art form.

But the recent uproar over former President Reagan's proposal to increase the pay of high-level bureaucrats, Federal judges and Members of Congress has had more than the usual dose of political hot air that surrounds every issue. The level of sheer dishonesty on the part of many Members, particularly those on the other side of the aisle, has dwarfed anything I witnessed in the Texas Legislature or anywhere else. Time and time again we saw the spectacle by which Members denounced the pay raise in public yet pleaded for it in private, expecting all the while that the Speaker of the House would act as a lightning rod for them, Republican and Democrat alike.

Well, he did, and he did it for a period of time far longer than anyone had the right to expect. The daily attacks mounted, both on the amount of the raise and the procedures decided upon to consider it, but the Speaker stood his ground—stood ground for the entire membership of the House—and defended the raise and the procedures that an overwhelming majority of the House supported.

In the end, however, those who wanted to have their cake and eat it too became too cute by half. The same Members who so desperately begged for the raise in private thought they could get away with flailing it in public without ever having to face the consequences. The attacks of these Members on the issue as well as the House as an institution fed on the already-frenzied press and public, and they ended up abandoning the Speaker on the same limb on which they urged him to climb—and climb out on their behalf, I might add.

I feel that I am in a certain position to offer these observations, Mr. Speaker, because my own personal opinion on the pay raise is well known. I happened to favor a vote on the raise, but I made that view known in an honorable way. I spoke to the Speaker in private and wrote him a personal letter, but I continue to this day to defend him personally for his courage in accepting the political heat for Members who needed cover on the issue. Even the Speaker's allies in the House have been mute, and many of them stood by to watch the daily flogging of his reputation and character without lifting a single finger of help or a single word of protest.

I am not alone in this belief that the Speaker has not been well served by those he tried to help at their own request. The rightwing newspaper, the Washington Times, one of the Speaker's severest critics, pointed out in its February 8, 1988, editorial titled "Scapegoat Wright" that the Republican leadership backed him on the pay raise in 1987 and they backed him this year, too. Even the Speaker's most outspoken antagonist among the membership of the House backed the pay raise and the original plan to adopt it, a fact that was noted by the editorial as well.

The point is that Jim Wright, unlike many Members of Congress now criticizing him, had the courage to take the heat.

And that is my point exactly. The Speaker of the House exhibited not only courage, but an uncommon courage in the face of mounting odds and rising public ridicule. He has always been known to be a man of his word, and his loyalty is unquestioned. The original plan to adopt the pay raise was decided upon not only by the Speaker, but by the Republican leadership of the House as well, and that's a fact conveniently obscured in this whole debate.

Why was this plan adopted? The answer is simple. The Speaker was following the will of the House. A majority of Members of both parties wanted the pay raise without a vote, and told him so. Even after the Speaker's questionnaire had been sent out and the results examined, a clear majority of Members of both parties had told him—off the record—that they still wanted the pay raise and the original procedure.

Mr. Speaker, the events of the last few days have shown us the differences between courage and cowardice, between standing firm for what and whom you believe in, between honorable men and disgraceful conduct. The Members of this House ought to be grateful that they have a leader of such uncommon courage and such a high degree of personal loyalty to them and the institution.

I believe we have learned an important lesson here, beyond the simple ones about the substance of the issue. Members have learned that they cannot pour gasoline on a burning fire and then expect the fire to put itself out. I think we all have learned who is ready and willing to stand and fight and who is not. And we certainly learned the Republican definition of "bipartisan," which indeed included a dual approach: Urge the pay raise in private, adopt a strategy with the backing of the Republican leadership, and then order Lee Atwater to do a national fundraising mailing to decry the Democratic pay raise.

But most importantly, we have learned that the Members of this institution have a true friend and defender in the Speaker of the House. He led where he was asked to lead, and beyond; he believed that all the Members were dealing honestly with him, and acted accordingly; and he stood his ground on everyone's behalf. He put his political life, his political fortune, and his political honor on the line, and he deserves far, far better than he has received.

A TRIBUTE TO SECRETARY OF STATE GEORGE P. SHULTZ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the Vienna Review Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe has come to a close, more than 2 years after it began in November 1986. Welcome as that news is to those of us who have been involved in the long painstaking negotiations on humanitarian, security, and economic issues, it is not the conclusion of the meeting, per se, that is noteworthy, but, rather, the terms on which it was concluded.

In the most far-reaching effort since the launching of the CSCE process in Helsinki in 1975, the 35 signatory states, including the East bloc nations, have committed themselves to a concluding document that contains comprehensive and stringent provisions on human rights. Indeed, 2 years ago many westerners thought it unimaginable that the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe would ever accept such strong human rights guarantees.

Although deeds, not words, are the ultimate test of success, these new guarantees provide more precise standards by which to measure the human rights performance of the signatory states.

Many people contributed to the successful outcome of the Vienna review meeting both in our country and from other signatory states. As Chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I had the honor to accompany one of those individuals to Vienna as he made his last official trip abroad as our Secretary of State. I speak now in praise of George Shultz.

George Shultz was one of those most responsible for the improvement in United States-Soviet relations, of which the recent constructive attitude of the Soviets toward the Vienna review meeting is but one important manifestation. Secretary Shultz has led the State Department and the Nation through a difficult period in American history. When he assumed the position in July 1982, United States-Soviet relations had sunk to their lowest ebb, posing a threat to the stability of international system that was starkly illustrated by the Soviet walkout from the strategic arms talks in Geneva in November 1983.

Starting in that tense, strained environment, George Shultz directed American foreign policy to demonstrate to the Soviet Union and the rest of the world that while the United States was firm in its resolve to support democracy wherever and whenever it faced a threat, our country was also prepared to engage in dialog on divisive issues with any nation or group that was willing to meet in good faith. The approach taken by Secretary Shultz combined resoluteness, vision, and realism.

As in any vital, properly functioning democracy, there have been significant differences along the way between various elements of the Government, including the administration and Congress, and Democrats and Republicans. Nevertheless, there has usually been consensus on the Nation's larger goals as well as agreement that the policymaking process is stronger and hence more durable when it is conducted in a bipartisan spirit.

George Shultz has worked closely with Congress in most instances to ensure that we were kept informed of the administration's thinking on foreign affairs issues. He sought our expression of views on many of the policy issues on his desk. Unfortunately the Reagan administration's relations with Congress during the past 8 years have not always been marked by the same constructive tone which Secretary Shultz personally demonstrated during his stewardship of the State Department.

Of course, George Shultz has had plenty of experience in dealing with the legislative branch of the Federal Government. His has been a long and distinguished career in public service, beginning with his work as a senior staff economist on the President's Council of Economic Advisors during the Eisenhower administration. Mr. Shultz held several important positions during the Presidency of Richard Nixon, including Secretary of Labor, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Chairman of the Council on Economic Policy, and Secretary of the Treasury. Before assuming his appointment at the State Department, Mr. Shultz was Chairman of President Reagan's Economic Policy Advisory Board. In this varied career, George Shultz has made an enormous contribution to the effective governing of our often unwieldly Nation.

If it is the test of time that shows the true value of an idea or policy, then history will speak highly of the legacy that George Shultz is leaving to our country. In addition to helping to build a firmer foundation for the United States-Soviet relationship, he is also bequeathing the Nation a conceptual framework with which to approach United States-Soviet affairs; that is, the four-point agenda of; arms control, regional issues, bilateral issues, and human rights, all of which the United States has vigorously pursued with the Soviets throughout Mr. Shultz' tenure at the State Department.

United States-Soviet cooperation in all four of these areas is crucial to the smooth functioning of the international system, but in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I would like to underscore the work George Shultz has done in the field of human rights.

It is easy to lose sight of human beings in mind numbing, laborious negotiations concerning, for example, resolution of emigration cases or the release of prisoners of conscience, often faceless, nameless people on whose behalf one works with incomplete, sometimes contradictory information. And it is tempting to view these thousands of individual humanitarian cases as abstract matters, detached from real life, flesh and blood people.

But to lose sight of the individuals, families, and groups at stake in the struggle for human rights is to lose one's moral compass—for it is the passionate belief in the right of each person to try to fulfill his or her dreams and goals that animates the cause of human rights. George Shultz, in his countless hours of talks with government officials and ordinary people, his thousands of miles of travel, his months upon months of endless work, has never forgotten that an individual is at the heart of all of his humanitarian endeavors. Nor has he ever swerved from his faith that universal respect for human rights can be achieved or, more important, that it must be achieved if we are to endure on this planet.

I have had the opportunity to see George Shultz at work on behalf of dissidents, refuseniks, divided families, and the unjustly imprisoned. I know of his outreach efforts at home and abroad to heighten awareness of human rights concerns, and I have witnessed the amazing results of the labor of this one man.

I would also like to acknowledge George Shultz, the man. Pravda, a publication not known for its fond goodbyes to American leaders, carried an eloquent and touching portrait of George Shultz on January 16. That respectful farewell from our country's main adversary is a meaningful and perhaps surprising tribute to this distinguished public servant.

Let me add that the phrase "Renaissance Man" is seldom used these days. In fact, many think it is neigh unto impossible in modern society, given the explosion of information and technology and the maddening, countless demands on our time, for anyone to approach the old ideal of excellence that expresses itself in a person's intellectual achievements, physical prowess, and civic contributions. In George Shultz, though, we have an individual who combines all of those traits and has given the Nation the benefit of all of them.

To conclude, I know that I speak for everyone in this Chamber when I offer George Shultz our thanks for his years of outstanding public service and wish him all the best in the future.

As I contemplate the international challenges facing our Nation in the years to come, I am optimistic because I believe that in George Shultz' successor, James Baker, we have an individual who possesses both ideals and pragmatism and who knows that a bipartisan basis for policymaking is the surest foundation for a strong, thriving America.

President Bush said in his inaugural address, "A new breeze was -blowing, the old bipartisanship must be made new again." I agree with President Bush. I believe George Shultz reflected that attitude and I look forward, Mr. Speaker, as I know you do, to the creation of that bipartisanship for a successful foreign policy, a stronger America and a more secure world.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to and in accordance with clause 2(a) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I submit for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a copy of the rules of the Committee on Appropriations for the 101st Congress as approved by the committee on February 9, 1989:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, COMMITTEE RULES

(Adopted for the 101st Congress on February 9, 1989)

Resolved, That the rules and practices of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, in the One Hundredth Congress, except as otherwise provided hereinafter, shall be and are hereby adopted as the rules and practices of the Committee on Appropriations in the One Hundred First Congress.

The foregoing resolution adopts the following rules:

SEC. 1. POWER TO SIT AND ACT

For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under Rules X and XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee or any of its subcommittees is authorized:

(a) To sit and act at such times and places within the United States whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, and to hold such hearings; and

(b) To require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, reports, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. The Chairman, or any Member designated by the Chairman, may administer oaths to any witness.

(c) A subpoena may be authorized and issued by the Committee or its subcommittees under subsection 1(b) in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of the Members of the Committee voting, a majority being present. The power to authorize and issue subpoenas under subsection 1(b) may be delegated to the Chairman pursuant to such rules and under such limitations as the Committee may prescribe. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chairman or by any Member designated by the Committee.

(d) Compliance with any subpoena issued by the Committee or its subcommittees may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

SEC. 2. SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) The Majority Caucus of the Committee shall establish the number of subcommittees and shall determine the jurisdiction of each subcommittee.

(b) Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the Committee all matters referred to it.

(c) All legislation and other matters referred to the committee shall be referred to the subcommittee of appropriate jurisdiction within two weeks unless, by majority vote of the Majority Members of the full Committee, consideration is to be by the full Committee.

(d) The Majority Caucus of the Committee shall determine an appropriate ratio of Majority to Minority Members for each subcommittee. The Chairman is authorized to negotiate that ratio with the Minority; Provided, however, That party representation in each subcommittee, including ex-officio members, shall be no less favorable to the Majority than the ratio for the full Committee.

(e) The Chairman is authorized to sit as a member of any subcommittee and to participate in its work.

SEC. 3. COMMITTEE STAFF

(a) The Chairman is authorized to appoint the staff of the Committee, and make adjustments in the job titles and compensation thereof subject to the maximum rates and conditions established in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. In addition, he is authorized, in his discretion, to arrange for their specialized training. The Chairman is also authorized to employ additional personnel as necessary.

(b) The chairman of each subcommittee may select and designate a staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the subcommittee chairman. Such staff member shall be compensated at a rate not to exceed 75 per centum of the maximum established in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives; Provided, That no Member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to these provisions.

(c) The ranking minority member of each subcommittee may select and designate a staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the ranking minority member. Such staff member shall be compensated at a rate not to exceed 75 per centum of the maximum established in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives; Provided, That no Member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to these provisions.

(d) The Chairman, and the Ranking Minority Member with the approval of the Chairman, may each select and designate a staff member at an annual gross salary of not to exceed 75 per centum of the maximum established in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives and may each select and designate one additional staff member.

(e) Each Member not mentioned in subsections (a), (b), (c), or (d) of this section may select and designate a staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of that Member. Such staff member shall be compensated at a rate, determined by the Member, not to exceed 75 per centum of the maximum established in Clause 69(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives; Provided, That no Member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), or (e); Provided further, That Members designating a staff member under this subsection must specifically certify by letter to the Chairman that the employee is needed and will be utilized for Committee work.

(f) In addition to any staff members appointed pursuant to any other subsection of this section, each Member may select and designate one additional staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of that Member. Such staff member shall be compensated at a rate, determined by the Member, not to exceed 75 per centum of the maximum established in Clause 6(c) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives; Provided, That no Member shall appoint more than one person pursuant to this subsection; Provided further, That Members designating an additional staff member under this subsection must specifically certify by letter to the Chairman that the employee is needed and will be utilized for Committee work.

SEC. 4. COMMITTEE MEETINGS

(a) Regular Meeting Day—The regular meeting day of the Committee shall be the first Wednesday of each month while the House is in session, unless the Committee has met within the past 30 days or the Chairman considers a specific meeting unnecessary in the light of the requirements of the Committee business schedule.

(b) Additional and Special Meetings—

(1) The Chairman may call and convene, as he considers necessary, additional meetings of the Committee for the consideration of any bill or resolution pending before the Committee or for the conduct of other Committee business. The Committee shall meet for such purpose pursuant to that call of the Chairman.

(2) If at least three Committee Members desire that a special meeting of the Committee be called by the Chairman, those Members may file in the Committee Offices a written request to the Chairman for that special meeting. Such request shall specify the measure or matter to be considered. Upon the filing of the request, the Committee Clerk shall notify the Chairman.

(3) If within three calendar days after the filing of the request, the Chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held within seven calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the Committee Members may file in the Committee Offices their written notice that a special meeting will be held, specifying the date and hour of such meeting, and the measure or matter to be considered. The Committee shall meet on that date and hour.

(4) Immediately upon the filing of the notice, the Committee Clerk shall notify all Committee Members that such special meeting will be held and inform them of its date and hour and the measure or matter to be considered. Only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at the special meeting.

(c) Ranking Majority Member to Preside in the Absence of Chairman—If the Chairman is not present at any meeting of the Committee, the Ranking Majority Member on the Committee who is present shall preside.

(d) Business Meetings—

(1) Each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the Committee and its subcommittees shall be open to the public except when the Committee or its subcommittees, in open session and with a majority present, determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed.

(2) No person other than Committee Members and such congressional staff and departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed.

(3) The provisions of this subsection do not apply to open hearings of the Committee or its subcommittees which are provided for in Section 5(b)(1) of these Rules or to any meeting of the Committee relating solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(e) Committee Records—

(1) The Committee shall keep a complete record of all Committee action, including a record of the votes on any question on which a roll call is demanded. The result of each roll call vote shall be available for inspection by the public during regular business hours in the Committee Offices. The information made available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, or other proposition, and the name of each Member voting for and each Member voting against, and the names of those Members present but not voting.

(2) All hearings, records, data, charts, and files of the Committee shall be kept separate and distinct from the congressional office records of the Chairman of the Committee. Such records shall be the property of the House, and all Members of the House shall have access thereto.

(3) The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available in accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House, except that the Committee authorizes use of any record to which Clause 3(b)(4) of the Rules of the House would otherwise apply after such record has been in existence for 20 years. The Chairman shall notify the Ranking Minority Member of any decision, pursuant to Clause 3(b)(3) or Clause 4(b) of the Rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the Committee for a determination upon the written request of any Member of the Committee.

SEC. 5: COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS

(a) Overall Budget Hearings—Overall budget hearings by the Committee, including the hearing required by Section 242(c) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 and Clause 4(a)(1) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall be conducted in open session except when the Committee in open session and with a majority present, determines by roll call vote that the testimony to be taken at that hearing on that day may be related to a matter of national security; except that the Committee may by the same procedure close one subsequent day of hearing. A transcript of all such hearings shall be printed and a copy furnished to each Member, Delegate, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

(b) Other Hearings—

(1) All other hearings conducted by the Committee or its subcommittees shall be open to the public except when the Committee or subcommittee in open session and with a majority present determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or Rule of the House of Representatives. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, a majority of those present at a hearing conducted by the Committee or any of its subcommittees, there being in attendance the number required under Section 5(c) of these Rules to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, (1) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate Clause 2(k)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives or (2) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in Clause 2(k)(5) of such Rule. No Member of the House of Representatives may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the Committee or its subcommittees unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize the Committee or any of its subcommittees, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this subsection for closing hearings to the public; Provided, however, That the Committee or its subcommittees may by the same procedure vote to close five subsequent days of hearings.

(2) Subcommittee chairmen shall set meeting dates after consultation with the Chairman and other subcommittee chairmen with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of Committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings.

(3) Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any of its subcommittees as the case may be, insofar as is practicable, shall file in advance of such appearance, a written statement of the proposed testimony and shall limit the oral presentation at such appearance to a brief summary, except that this provision shall not apply to any witness appearing before the Committee in the overall budget hearings.

(c) Quorum for Taking Testimony—The number of Members of the Committee which shall constitute a quorum for taking testimony and receiving evidence in any hearing of the Committee shall be two.

(d) Calling and Interrogation of Witnesses—

(1) The Minority members of the Committee or its subcommittees shall be entitled, upon request to the Chairman or subcommittee chairman, by a majority of them before completion of any hearing, to call witnesses selected by the Minority to testify with respect to the matter under consideration during at least one day of hearings thereon.

(2) The Committee and its subcommittees shall observe the five-minute rule during the interrogation of witnesses until such time as each Member of the Committee or subcommittee who so desires has had an opportunity to question the witness.

(e) Broadcasting and Photographing of Committee Meetings and Hearings—

(1) The Chairman is authorized to determine the extent and nature of broadcasting and photographic coverage for the overall budget hearing and full Committee meetings and hearings, subject to the guidelines for such coverage set forth in Section 116(b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 and Clause 3(f) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(2) Unless approved by the Chairman and concurred in by a majority of the subcommittee hearings or meetings shall be recorded by electronic device or broadcast by radio or television.

(3) Unless approved by the subcommittee chairman and concurred in by a majority of the subcommittee, no subcommittee hearing or meeting or subcommittee room shall be photographed.

(4) Broadcasting and photographic coverage of subcommittee hearings and meetings authorized under the provisions of (2) and (3) above shall be subject to the guidelines for such coverage set forth in Clause 3(f) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(f) Subcommittee Meetings—No subcommittee shall sit while the House is reading an appropriation measure for amendment under the five-minute rule or while the Committee is in session.

(g) Public Notice of Committee Hearings—The Chairman is authorized and directed to make public announcements of the date, place, and subject matter of Committee and subcommittee hearings at least one week before the commencement of such hearings. If the Committee or any of its subcommittees, as the case may be, determines that there is good cause to begin a hearing sooner, the Chairman is authorized and directed to make the announcement at the earliest possible date.

SEC. 6: PROCEDURES FOR REPORTING BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

(a) Prompt Reporting Requirement—

(1) It shall be the duty of the Chairman, except as provided in subsection (3) herein, to report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any bill or resolution approved by the Committee and to take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring the matter to a vote.

(2) In any event, a report on a bill or resolution which the Committee has approved shall be filed within seven calendar days (exclusive of days in which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the Committee Clerk a written request, signed by a majority of Committee Members, for the reporting of such bill or resoluton. Upon the filing of any such request, the Committee Clerk shall notify the Chairman immediately of the filing of the request. This subsection does not apply to the reporting of a regular appropriation bill prior to compliance with subsection (3) herein or to the reporting of a resolution of inquiry addressed to the head of an executive department.

(3) Before reporting the first regular appropriation bill for each fiscal year, the Committee shall, to the extent practicable and in accordance with Section 307 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, complete subcommittee markup and full Committee action of all regular appropriation bills for that year and submit to the House a report comparing the Committee's recommendations with the appropriate levels of budget outlays and new budget authority as set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that year.

(b) Presence of Committee Majority—No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the Committee unless a majority of the Committee was actually present.

(c) Roll Call Votes—With respect to each roll call vote on a motion to report any bill or resolution, the total number of votes cast for, and the total number of votes cast against, the reporting of such a bill or resolution shall be included in the Committee report.

(d) Compliance With Congressional Budget Act—A Committee report on a bill or resolution which has been approved by the Committee shall include the statement required by Section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, separately set out and clearly identified, if the bill or resolution provides new budget authority.

(e) Inflationary Impact Statement—Each Committee report on a bill or resolution reported by the Committee shall contain a detailed analytical statement as to whether the enactment of such bill or resolution into law may have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy.

(f) Changes in Existing Law—Each Committee report on a general appropriation bill shall contain a concise statement describing fully the effect of any provision of the bill which directly or indirectly changes the application of existing law.

(g) Rescissions and Transfers—Each bill or resolution reported by the Committee shall include separate headings for rescissions and transfers of unexpended balances with all proposed rescissions and transfers listed therein. The report of the Committee accompanying such a bill or resolution shall include a separate section with respect to such rescissions or transfers.

(h) Supplemental or Minority Views—

(1) If, at the time the Committee approves any measure or matter, any Committee Member gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, the Member shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views in writing and signed by the Member, with the Clerk of the Committee. All such views so filed shall be included in and shall be a part of the report filed by the Committee with respect to that measure or matter.

(2) The Committee report on that measure or matter shall be printed in a single volume which—

(i) shall include all supplemental, minority, or additional views which have been submitted by the time of the filing of the report, and

(ii) shall have on its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views are included as part of the report.

(3) Subsection (h)(1) of this section, above, does not preclude—

(i) the immediate filing or printing of a Committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by such subsection; or

(ii) the filing by the Committee of a supplemental report on a measure or matter which may be required for correction of any technical error in a previous report made by the Committee on that measure or matter.

(4) If, at the time a subcommittee approves any measure or matter for recommendation to the full Committee, any Member of that subcommittee who gives notice of intention to offer supplemental, minority, or additional views shall be entitled, insofar as is practicable and in accordance with the printing requirements as determined by the subcommittee, to include such views in the Committee Print with respect to that measure or matter.

(i) Availability of Reports—A copy of each bill, resolution, or report shall be made available to each Member of the Committee at least three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in advance of the date on which the Committee is to consider each bill, resolution, or report; Provided, That this subsection may be waived by agreement between the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the Full Committee.

SEC. 7: VOTING

(a) No vote by any Member of the Committee or any of its subcommittees with respect to any measure or matter may be cast by proxy.

(b) The vote on any question before the Committee shall be taken by the yeas and nays on the demand of one-fifth of the Members present.

SEC. 8: STUDIES AND EXAMINATIONS

The following procedure shall be applicable with respect to the conduct of studies and examinations of the organization and operation of Executive Agencies under authority contained in Section 202(b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and in Clause 2(b)(3) of Rule X, of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(a) The Chairman is authorized to appoint such staff and, in his discretion, arrange for the procurement of temporary services of consultants, as from time to time may be required.

(b) Studies and examinations will be initiated upon the written request of a subcommittee which shall be reasonably specific and definite in character, and shall be initiated only by a majority vote of the subcommittee, with the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority member thereof participating as part of such majority vote. When so initiated such request shall be filed with the Clerk of the Committee for submission to the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member and their approval shall be required to make the same effective. Notwithstanding any action taken on such request by the chairman and ranking minority member of the subcommittee, a request may be approved by a majority of the Committee.

(c) Any request approved as provided under subsection (b) shall be immediately turned over to the staff appointed for action.

(d) Any information obtained by such staff shall be reported to the chairman of the subcommittee requesting such study and examination and to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member, shall be made available to the members of the subcommittee concerned, and shall not be released for publication until the subcommittee so determines.

(e) Any hearings or investigations which may be desired, aside from the regular hearings on appropriation items, when approved by the Committee, shall be conducted by the subcommittee having jurisdiction over the matter.

SEC. 9: OFFICIAL TRAVEL

(a) The chairman of a subcommittee shall approve requests for travel by subcommittee members and staff for official business within the jurisdiction of that subcommittee. The ranking minority member of a subcommittee shall concur in such travel requests by minority members of that subcommittee and the Ranking Minority Member shall concur in such travel requests for Minority Members of the Committee. Requests in writing covering the purpose, itinerary, and dates of proposed travel shall be submitted for final approval of the Chairman. Specific approval shall be required for each and every trip.

(b) The Chairman ia authorized during the recess of the Congress to approve travel authorizations for Committee Members and staff, including travel outside the United States.

(c) As soon as practicable, the Chairman shall direct the head of each Government agency concerned not to honor requests of subcommittees, individual Members, or staff for travel, the direct or indirect expenses of which are to be defrayed from an executive appropriation, except upon request from the Chairman.

(d) In accordance with Clause 2(n) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives and Section 502(b) of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, as amended, local currencies owned by the United States shall be available to Committee Members and staff engaged in carrying out their official duties outside the United States, its territories, or possessions. No Committee Member or staff member shall receive or expend local currencies for subsistence in any country at a rate in excess of the maximum per diem rate set forth in applicable Federal law.

(e) Travel Reports—

(1) Members or staff shall make a report to the Chairman on their travel, covering the purpose, results, itinerary, expenses, and other pertinent comments.

(2) With respect to travel outside the United States or its territories or possessions, the report shall include: (1) an itemized list showing the dates each country was visited, the amount of per diem furnished, the cost of transportation furnished, and any funds expended for any other official purpose; and (2) a summary in these categories of the total foreign currencies and/or appropriated funds expended. All such individual reports on foreign travel shall be filed with the Chairman no later than sixty days following completion of the travel for use in complying with reporting requirements in applicable Federal law, and shall be open for public inspection.

(3) Each Member or employee performing such travel shall be solely responsible for supporting the amounts reported by the Member or employee.

(4) No report or statement as to any trip shall be publicized making any recommendations in behalf of the Committee without the authorization of a majority of the Committee.

(f) Members and staff of the Committee performing authorized travel on official business pertaining to the jurisdiction of the Committee shall be governed by applicable laws or regulations of the House and of the Committee on House Administration pertaining to such travel, and as promulgated from time to time by the Chairman.

SEC. 10: ELIGIBILITY OF COMMITTEE MEMBER SERVING AS BUDGET COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN FOR APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMANSHIP

If the Chairman of the Budget Committee of the House of Representatives is chairman of a subcommittee on the Appropriations Committee when he becomes Budget Committee Chairman, or would be eligible to become chairman of an Appropriations subcommittee under the Rules of the Majority Caucus of the House of Representatives during his tenure as Budget Committee Chairman, the Appropriations Committee may nominate such Member to serve as chairman of such subcommittee, subject to the approval of the Majority Caucus. But, if so elected and confirmed, the Member shall take a leave of absence while Chairman of the Budget Committee, and the responsibilities of the subcommittee chairmanship shall devolve onto a temporary chairman as determined by the Appropriations Committee and the Majority Caucus of the House.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. FORD of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 2(a) of House Rule XI, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the Rules of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for the 101st Congress, adopted at the committee's organizational meeting on February 8, 1989:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

(Adopted February 8, 1989)

RULE 1. RULES OF THE HOUSE

The Rules of the House are the rules of the committee and the subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day and a motion to dispense with the first reading (in full) of a bill or resolution, if printed copies are available, are nondebatable motions of high privilege.

RULE 2. CHAIRMAN

(a) The chairman of the committee or of a subcommittee, as appropriate, shall preside at meetings or hearings or, in his absence, the next ranking majority member present shall preside.

(b) In the temporary absence of the chairman of the committee or of a subcommittee, as appropriate, the next ranking majority member of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, and so on, as often as the case shall happen, shall act as chairman.

RULE 3. COMMITTEE MEETINGS

(a) A regular meeting of the committee shall be held on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month. The usual time of a regular meeting shall be 9:45 a.m. A regular meeting may be canceled by the chairman of the committee after consultation with the ranking majority member and the ranking minority member.

(b) Additional meetings of the committee may be called by the chairman as he considers necessary.

(c) A special meeting of the committee shall be held in accordance with the provisions of House Rule XI, Clause 2(c)(2).

(d) Regular, additional, and special meetings of the committee for the transaction of business shall be open to the public, except when the committee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public in accordance with House Rule XI, Clause 2(g)(1).

RULE 4. RECORD OF ACTION

(a) A complete record of all committee or subcommittee action shall be kept which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded.

(b) There shall be made available for inspection by the public, at reasonable times in the offices of the committee, a record of the votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded, a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition on which a record vote is demanded, and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those members present but not voting.

(c) A committee or subcommittee report on a bill or resolution of a public character ordered reported by a record vote shall include the number of votes cast for, and the number of votes cast against, the motion to report.

(d) The records of the committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available in accordance with rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House, except that the committee authorizes the use of any record to which clause 3(b)(4) of House Rule XXXVI would otherwise apply after such record has been in existence for 20 years. The chairman shall notify the ranking minority member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of House Rule XXXVI, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the committee for a determination on the written request of any member of the committee.

RULE 5. COMMITTEE QUORUM

(a) Except as provided under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this rule, or under House Rule XI, Clause 2(g)(2), one-third of the total membership of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of transacting committee business.

(b) A majority of the total membership of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of—

(1) reporting a measure or recommendation in accordance with rule 13(a);

(2) voting to close a meeting under rule 3(d);

(3) authorizing the issuance of a subpena under rule 12(c); and

(4) recalling a bill, resolution, or other matter under rule 9(c).

(c) Not less than two members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony and receiving evidence.

(d) The presence of a quorum shall be determined and announced by the chairman before the committee shall proceed to the transaction of business and shall be recorded in the records of committee action.

RULE 6. ROLLCALL VOTE

A rollcall vote on any question may be determined by any member of the committee or for a subcommittee, as appropriate.

RULE 7. PROXIES

A member may vote on any matter before the committee or a subcommittee by proxy. A proxy shall (1) be in writing, signed by the member authorizing the proxy, and show the date and time of day that the proxy is signed; (2) assert that the member is absent on official business or is otherwise unable to be present at the meeting; (3) designate the member who is to execute the proxy authorization; and (4) be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto. A member may authorize a general proxy for motions to recess, adjourn, or other procedural matters. A proxy may not be used unless a quorum is present, cannot be used to make a quorum, and shall be presented to the chairman at the time the proxy is voted.

RULE 8. ADDRESSING COMMITTEE OR SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) Recognition by the chairman shall first be obtained by any member addressing the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, proposing a motion, or interrogating a witness.

(b) The 5-minute rule shall apply in the markup of a bill. The 5-minute rule shall apply in the interrogation of witnesses until such time as each member who so desires has had an opportunity to question the witness.

(c) The regular order shall be observed in all proceedings, and all questions and statements in the interrogation of witnesses shall be germane to the legislation or other matters then being considered.

RULE 9. REFERENCE OF LEGISLATION

(a) Each bill, resolution, or other matter referred to the committee, subject to the provisions of this rule, shall be re-referred to the subcommittee having jurisdiction over its principal subject within 2 weeks from the date of its referral to the committee unless the chairman of the committee orders that it be held for the committee's direct consideration. If the chairman so orders, he shall inform the members of the committee of his decision and it shall not become final until 1 week after he has so informed them and then only if a majority of the members of the committee have not, in the meantime, advised him in writing of their disagreement therewith.

(b) A bill, resolution, or other matter referred by the chairman of the committee to a subcommittee may be recalled by him for the committee's direct consideration or for referral to another subcommittee. If recalled, the chairman shall inform the members of the committee of his decision and it shall not become final until 1 week after he has so informed them and then only if a majority of the members of the committee have not, in the meantime, advised him in writing of their disagreement with his decision.

(c) A bill, resolution, or other matter referred to a subcommittee may be recalled by a majority vote of the committee, a majority being present, for its direct consideration or for reference to another subcommittee.

(d) A bill, resolution, or other matter referred to the committee may be referred simultaneously by the chairman of the committee to two or more subcommittees for concurrent consideration, for consideration in sequence, or for consideration of particular parts, or the matter may be referred by the chairman to a special ad hoc subcommittee or task force established under rule 21.

RULE 10. STATEMENTS; DEPOSITIONS

Statements, depositions, letters, and such other pertinent matter in appropriate form as may be timely submitted may be accepted for inclusion in printed hearings, records, or documents, or in the permanent files of the committee, by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, without objection or upon motion duly adopted.

RULE 11. HEARINGS; WITNESSES

(a) Public announcement of the date, place, and subject matter of each hearing to be conducted by the committee, or by a subcommittee, shall be made at least 1 week before the commencement of a hearing, unless the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, determines that there is good cause to begin a hearing at an earlier date in which event such public announcement shall be made at the earliest possible date.

(b) Hearings shall be open to the public except when the committee, or subcommittee, as appropriate, votes to close a hearing in accordance with House Rule XI, Clause 2(g)(2).

(c) Except as otherwise provided in these rules, the scheduling of witnesses and the time allowed for the presentation of testimony and interrogation shall be the sole discretion of the chairman, unless otherwise ordered by a majority vote of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, a quorum being present.

(d) When any hearing is conducted upon any measure or matter, the minority party members of the committee, or subcommittee, as appropriate, upon request to the chairman by a majority of the minority party members before completion of the hearings, shall be entitled to call witnesses to testify on at least 1 day of such hearings.

(e) Each witness who is to appear before the committee, or subcommittee, as appropriate, and who has had appropriate and timely notice of such appearance shall file with the committee, or subcommittee, as appropriate, at least 48 hours in advance of his appearance, at least 100 copies of the statement of his proposed testimony and limit his oral presentation at his appearance to a brief summary of his argument. The requirement of this rule may be waived, in whole or in part, by the chairman, without objection, or pursuant to a motion duly adopted.

(f) A witness may obtain a transcript of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate.

RULE 12. POWER TO SIT AND ACT; SUBPENA POWER; OATHS

(a) The committee and each subcommittee is authorized—

(1) to sit and act at such times and places, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, and to hold hearings; and

(2) subject to paragraph (c), to require by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as it deems necessary.

(b) The chairman of the committee or of a subcommittee, as appropriate, or any member designated by the chairman, may administer oaths to witnesses.

(c) A subpena may be authorized and issued by the committee or by a subcommittee in the conduct of its functions and duties under House Rules X and XI or under the committee rules when authorized by a majority vote of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, a majority being present, or when authorized by the chairman of the committee.

(d) Authorized subpenas shall be signed by the chairman of the committee or, in his absence, by a member designated by the chairman.

RULE 13. FILING REPORTS; SUPPLEMENTAL, MINORITY, OR ADDITIONAL VIEWS

(a) No measure or recommendation, including any report or submission required to be made to the House or to the Committee on the Budget by the committee under paragraphs (g), (h), and (i) of Clause 4 of Rule X of the Rules of the House, shall be reported unless a majority of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, was actually present.

(b) It shall be the duty of the chairman of the committee to report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any measure approved by the committee and to take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring the matter to a vote.

(c) It shall be the duty of the chairman of a subcommittee to promptly request consideration in the committee of any measure approved by the subcommittee, and it shall be the duty of the chairman of the committee to schedule such measure for consideration by the committee as promptly as possible.

(d) In the event the report of the committee on a measure which has been approved by the committee has not been filed as prescribed by paragraph (b) of this rule, such report shall be filed within 7 calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the general counsel of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the committee, for reporting of that measure.

(e) If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the committee, any member of the committee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than 3 calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views with the general counsel of the committee. Such views shall be in writing and signed by the member.

(f) All committee, subcommittee, or staff reports printed pursuant to legislative or oversight investigations and not approved by a majority of the members of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate, shall contain the following disclaimer on the cover of such report: (This report has not been officially approved by the (subcommittee/committee) and, therefore, may not necessarily reflect the views of all of its members.)

RULE 14. LEGISLATIVE OVERSIGHT

The committee, together with its subcommittees, shall review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, and execution of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee.

RULE 15. INVESTIGATIVE STAFF

Except as provided in Rule XI, clause 5(d) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the investigative staff of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service shall be appointed as follows:

(1) The subcommittee staff shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the subcommittee chairman within the budget approved for the subcommittee by the committee;

(2) The staff assigned to the minority shall be appointed and their remuneration determined in such manner as the minority party members of the committee shall determine within the budget approved for such purposes by the committee; and

(3) The staff of the committee not assigned to a standing subcommittee or to the minority under the above provisions shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the chairman within the budget approved for such purposes by the committee.

RULE 16. SPECIAL FUNDS, BUDGET, EXPENSES, AND ACCOUNTS

(a) The chairman of each standing subcommittee shall propose and present to the chairman of the committee, for each session of the Congress, a subcommittee budget of the estimated amount of special funds necessary to carry out the anticipated activities and programs of the subcommittee for that particular session of the Congress.

(b) The chairman of the committee shall review each proposed subcommittee budget and, after consultation with the ranking minority member, shall propose and present to the committee, for each session of the Congress, a committee budget of the estimated total amount of special funds to be requested under a primary expense resolution required under House Rule XI, Clause 5, for use by the committee, both the majority and the minority, for such session of the Congress for all anticipated activities and programs of the committee and of the standing subcommittees.

(c) The staff director shall establish and maintain records and accounts, consistent with sound accounting practices, of committee and subcommittee special funds and of expenses incurred and paid as obligations of such funds. He shall prepare and submit to each member of the committee, not later than 10 days after the end of each quarter of the calendar year, an itemized report of the amounts of such funds expended and on hand at the end of the quarter. Such quarterly reports shall be made a part of the permanent official records of the committee.

(d) Vouchers for payment of obligations of special funds shall be prepared by the staff director for signature by the chairman of the committee, except as otherwise authorized by the House, and shall be supported by receipts or other documentation consistent with the requirements of the Committee on House Administration. Signed vouchers shall be returned to the staff director for entry in the committee accounts and final processing.

RULE 17. BROADCASTING OF HEARINGS

A hearing conducted by the committee, upon approval by a majority vote of the committee, a quorum being present, or a hearing conducted by a subcommittee, upon approval by a majority vote of the subcommittee, a quorum being present, may be covered in whole, or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, in accordance with House Rule XI, Clause 3, subject to the following:

(1) live coverage is to be broadcast without commercial sponsorship;

(2) no subpenaed witness may be photographed, televised, or broadcast against his will;

(3) television cameras shall operate from fixed positions which shall not obstruct committee or subcommittee proceedings or other media;

(4) equipment must be installed prior to the hearing;

(5) lighting shall be at the lowest adequate level;

(6) still photographers shall not come between the witnesses and committee members or obstruct the other media during the hearing; and

(7) broadcast and photography personnel shall be orderly and unobtrustive and shall be currently accredited to the Radio, Television Correspondents', or the Press Photographers' Galleries, as appropriate.

RULE 18. AVAILABILITY OF SUBCOMMITTEE REPORTS

A summary and explanation of each measure or matter reported by a subcommittee shall be furnished to each member of the committee in advance of the committee meeting at which such measure or matter is to be considered.

RULE 19. TRAVEL

(a) All members of the committee shall have adequate notice prior to the date or dates fixed for investigations or hearings at locations other than Washington, D.C.

(b) Travel of members and staff of the committee or of a subcommittee to hearings, meetings, conferences, and investigations must be authorized by the chairman of the committee prior to any public notice thereof or the actual travel. Before such authorization is given, there shall be submitted to the chairman of the committee a statement in writing which includes the following:

(1) the purpose of the travel;

(2) the dates during which the travel is to be made and the date or dates of the event for which the travel is being made;

(3) the location of the event for which the travel is to be made; and

(4) the names of members and staff seeking authorization.

(c) A report on the travel (except travel in connection with hearings) of each member or staff member shall be submitted to the chairman of the committee as soon as possible after the trip is completed.

(d) Not later than 60 days after the completion of foreign travel, each member or staff member shall submit to the chairman of the committee an itemized report showing the dates each country was visited, the amount of per diem furnished, the cost of transportation furnished, any funds expended for any other official purpose, and shall summarize in these categories the total foreign currencies and/or appropriated funds expended. Such reports shall be made available for inspection by the public, as required by House Rule XI, Clause 2(n).

(e) To facilitate the oversight and other legislative and investigative activities of the committee, the chairman of the committee may, at the request of a subcommittee chairman, make a temporary assignment of any member of the committee to such subcommittee for the purpose of enabling such member to participate in any public hearing, investigation, or study by such subcommittee to be held outside of Washington, D.C.

RULE 20. CLASSIFIED MATERIAL

(a) All classified material received by the committee or by a subcommittee shall be deemed to have been received in executive session and shall be given appropriate safekeeping.

(b) The chairman of the committee shall establish such procedures as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of any such classified material. Such procedures shall, however, insure access to this information at the committee offices by any member of the committee or any other Member of the House of Representatives who has requested the opportunity to review such material.

RULE 21. STANDING AND SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEES

There shall be seven standing subcommittees of the committee. The Subcommittee on Investigations shall have investigative jurisdiction over all matters within the jurisdiction of the committee, and the other six subcommittees shall have legislative and investigative jurisdiction as provided under paragraphs (2) through (7) of rule 22. In addition to the standing subcommittees, the chairman of the committee may establish such special ad hoc subcommittees, and task forces and assign to them such jurisdiction as the chairman deems necessary.

RULE 22. JURISDICTION OF SUBCOMMITTEES

The titles and jurisdiction of the standing subcommittees shall be as follows:

(1) Subcommittee on Investigations.—The investigation, review and study, on a continuing basis, of the application, administration, and execution of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of the committee.

(2) Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits.—Compensation, including pay rates and pay systems; the merit pay system; dual compensation; classification of positions; leave; allowances; retirement; insurance; health benefits; and other benefits of Federal officers and employees.

(3) Subcommittee on Human Resources.—Federal civilian personnel requirements and ceilings, including the establishment of supergrade and executive level positions; effect of Government reorganizations on Federal personnel; employee utilization; reductions in force; contracting out; rights of privacy; code of ethics, including financial disclosure and conflicts of interest; alternative work schedules; White House personnel authorization; and intergovernmental personnel programs.

(4) Subcommittee on the Civil Service.—Federal civil service matters, generally, except those matters, specifically within the jurisdiction of other subcommittees; Federal labor management relations (excluding the Postal Service); the Senior Executive Service; productivity of Federal employees; and employee political activities.

(5) Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services.—The United States Postal Service and the Postal Rate Commission, generally, including operation and administration thereof; postal finances and expenditures (except those relating to matters within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization); public service aspects, requirements, and reimbursements; and the United States mails (except those matters specifically within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization).

(6) Subcommittee on Postal Personnel and Modernization.—Postal officers and employees, generally, including their status and appointment; postal management and other personnel requirements and practices; employee utilization; postal labor management relations; postal facilities and mechanization, including modernization and research and development; mailability of matter; mail transportation; and military mail.

(7) Subcommittee on Census and Population.—The Bureau of the Census, generally; population and demography; statistics collection; reporting and data processing activities of the Government, generally; and holidays and celebrations.

RULE 23. MEMBERSHIP OF SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), each subcommittee shall have five members, divided between the majority and minority members in the ratio of three to two.

(b) The Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services shall have seven members, divided between the majority and minority members in the ratio of four to three.

(c) The chairman and ranking minority member of the committee shall be ex officio voting members of each subcommittee on which they do not serve.

(d) Each member of the committee may sit with any subcommittee during its hearings, but no member who is not a member of a subcommittee shall vote on any matter before that subcommittee.

RULE 24. POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUBCOMMITTEES

Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, conduct investigations, receive evidence, and report to the committee on all matters referred to it. Subcommittee chairmen shall set meeting and hearing dates after consultation with the chairman of the committee and other subcommittee chairmen with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of committee and subcommittee meetings or hearings whenever possible. A subcommittee may exercise none of the powers or authorities hereinbefore provided with respect to any investigation or other activity which is not within the jurisdiction of the subcommittee or which requires the expenditure of funds in excess of the subcommittee's budget as approved by the committee, except upon authorization by a majority vote of the committee, a quorum being present.

RULE 25. REQUIRED MEETING

Each standing subcommittee, as referred to in rule 22, shall meet for the transaction of subcommittee business from time to time while Congress is in session, at a time and on a day determined by the subcommittee with due regard to the time and dates of the regular meetings of the committee and other subcommittees. All meetings of each subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public in accordance with House Rule XI, Clause 2(g)(1).

RULE 26. SUBCOMMITTEE QUORUM

(a) Except as provided under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this rule, or under House Rule XI, Clause 2(g)(2), one-third of the total membership of a subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of transacting subcommittee business.

(b) A majority of the total membership of a subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of—

(1) reporting a measure or recommendation to the committee;

(2) voting to close a meeting under rule 25; and

(3) authorizing the issuance of a subpena under rule 12(c).

(c) Not less than two members of a subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony and receiving evidence.

RULE 27. AMENDMENTS

Any amendment offered to any pending legislation before the committee must be made available in written form when requested by any member of the committee. If such amendment is not available in written form when requested, the chairman shall allow an appropriate period of time for the provision thereof.

RULE 28. OTHER ACTIONS; STAFF SUPERVISION

The chairman of the committee may establish such other procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the committee, including the general supervision of the statutory and investigative staffs of the committee.

RULE 29. RECORDING OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

(a) Tape recordings (including video recordings) of any full committee or subcommittee hearing or meeting (or any portion thereof) may be permitted only when approved by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee or subcommittee, as appropriate. Individuals seeking permission to record committee or subcommittee proceedings shall be advised that the transcript of the proceedings as produced by the committee or subcommittee reporter constitutes the sole "official" transcript of such proceedings.

(b) Paragraph (a) does not apply to television or radio broadcasts of committee or subcommittee hearings referred to in rule 17.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House rule XI, clause 2(a), I submit for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a copy of the rules of the Committee on House Administration, as approved by the committee on February 8, 1989:

RULES FOR THE COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION

RULE NO. 1. GENERAL PROVISIONS

(a) The Rules of the House are the rules of the committee and subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in committees and subcommittes. Each subcommittee of the committee is a part of the committee and is subject to the authority and direction of the committee and to its rules so far as applicable.

(b) The committee is authorized at any time to conduct such investigations and studies as it may consider necessary or appropriate in the exercise of its responsibilities under Rule X of House Rules and (subject to the adoption of expense resolutions as required by Rule XI, clause 5 of House Rules) to inccur expenses (including travel expenses) in connection therewith.

(c) The committee is authorized to have printed and bound testimony and other data presented at hearings held by the committee. All costs of stenographic services and transcripts in connection with any meeting or hearing of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

(d) The committee shall submit to the House, not later than January 2 of each odd-numbered year, a report on the activities of the committee under Rule X and XI of House Rules during the Congress ending at noon on January 3 of such year.

(e) The committee's rules shall be published in the Congressional Record not later than 30 days after the Congress convenes in each odd-numbered year.

RULE NO. 2. REGULAR AND SPECIAL MEETINGS

(a) The regular meeting date of the Committee on House Administration shall be the first Wednesday of every month when the House is in session in accordance with Clause 2(b) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House. Additional meetings may be called by the chairman as he may deem necessary or at the request of a majority of the members of the committee in accordance with Clause 2(c) of Rule XI of the House of Representatives. The determination of the business to be considered at each meeting shall be made by the chairman subject to Clause 2(c) of Rule XI of the House of Representatrives. A regularly scheduled meeting need not be held if there is no business to be considered.

(b) If the chairman of the committee or subcommittee is not present at any meeting of the committee or subcommittee the ranking member of the majority party on the committee or subcommittee who is present shall preside at the meeting.

(c) The committee may not sit, without special leave, while the House is reading a measure for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

RULE NO. 3. OPEN MEETINGS

As required by Clause 2(g), Rule XI, each meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, of the committee or its subcommittees, shall be open to the public except when the committee or subcommittee, in open session and with a quorum present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public: Provided, however, That no person other than members of the committee, and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize, shall be present in any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This provision does not apply to any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

RULE NO. 4. RECORDS AND ROLLCALLS

(a) The result of each rollcall vote in any meeting of the committee shall be made available for inspection by the public at reasonable times at the committee offices, including a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition; the name of each member voting for and against, and whether by proxy or in person, and the members present but not voting.

(b) All Committee hearings, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept separate and distinct from the congressional office records of the member serving as chairman of the committee; and such records shall be the property of the House and all members of the House shall have access thereto.

(c) In order to facilitate committee compliance with Paragraph (e)(1) of Clause 2, Rule XI, each subcommittee shall keep a complete record of all subcommittee actions which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall vote is demanded. The result of each such rollcall vote shall be promptly made available to the full committee for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the committee. Information so available for public inspection shall include a description of the amendment, motion, order or other proposition and the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or other proposition, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those members present but not voting.

(d) All subcommittee hearings, records, data, charts, and files, shall be kept distinct from the congressional office records of the member serving as chairman of the subcommittee. Such records shall be coordinated with the records of the full committee, shall be the property of the House, and all members of the House shall have access thereto.

RULE NO. 5. PROXIES

A vote by any member in the committee or in any subcommittee may be cast by proxy, but such proxy must be in writing and in the hands of the chief clerk of the committee or the clerk of the subcommittee, as the case may be, during each rollcall in which such member's proxy is to be voted. Each proxy shall designate the member who is to execute the proxy authorization and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto; except that a member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning his vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum. The member does not have to appear in person to present the proxy.

RULE NO. 6. POWER TO SIT AND ACT; SUBPOENA POWER

(a) For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under House Rules X and XI the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized (subject to subparagraph (b)(1) of this paragraph)—

(1) to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, and to hold such hearings, and

(2) to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. The chairman of the committee, or any member designated by the chairman, may administer oaths of any witness.

(b)(1) A subpoena may be authorized and issued by a committee or subcommittee under subparagraph (a)(2) in the conduct of any investigation or series of investigations or activities, only when authorized by a majority of the members voting, a majority being present. The power to authorize and issue subpoenas under subparagraph (a)(2) may be delegated to the chairman of the committee pursuant to such rules and under such limitations as the committee may prescribe. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the chairman of the committee or by any member designated by the committee.

(2) Compliance with any subpoena issued by the committee or subcommittee under subparagraph (a)(2) may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

RULE NO. 7. QUORUMS

No measure or recommendation shall be reported to the House unless a majority of the committee is actually present. For the purposes of taking any action other than reporting any measure, issuance of a subpoena, closing meetings, promulgating Committee orders, or changing the Rules of the Committee, the quorum shall be one-third of the members of the Committee. For purposes of taking testimony and receiving evidence, two Members shall constitute a quorum.

RULE NO. 8. AMENDMENTS

Any amendment offered to any pending legislation before the committee must be made available in written form when requested by any member of the committee. If such amendment is not available in written form when requested, the chair will allow an appropriate period of time for the provision thereof.

RULE NO. 9. HEARING PROCEDURES

(a) The chairman, in the case of hearings to be conducted by the committee, and the appropriate subcommittee chairman, in the case of hearings to be conducted by a subcommittee, shall make public announcement of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be conducted on any measure or matter at least 1 week before the commencement of that hearing unless the committee determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date. In the latter event the chairman or the subcommittee chairman whichever the case may be shall make such public announcement at the earliest possible date. The clerk of the committee shall promptly notify the Daily Digest Clerk of the Congressional Record as soon as possible after such public announcement is made.

(b) Unless excused by the chairman, each witness who is to appear before the committee or a subcommittee shall file with the clerk of the committee, at least 48 hours in advance of his appearance, a written statement of his proposed testimony and shall limit his oral presentation to a summary of his statement.

(c) When any hearing is conducted by the committee or any subcommittee upon any measure or matter, the minority party members on the committee shall be entitled, upon request to the chairman by a majority of those minority members before the completion of such hearing, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to that measure or matter during at least one day of hearings thereon.

(d) All other members of the committee may have the privilege of sitting with any subcommittee during its hearing or deliberations and may participate in such hearings or deliberations, but no member who is not a member of the subcommittee shall vote on any matter before such subcommittee.

(e) Committee members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the chairman for that purpose, and only for a 5-minute period until all members present have had an opportunity to question a witness. The 5-minute period for questioning a witness by any one member can be extended only with the unanimous consent of all members present. The questioning of a witness in both full and subcommittee hearings shall be initiated by the chairman, followed by the ranking minority party member and all other members alternating between the majority and minority. In recognizing members to question witnesses in this fashion, the chairman shall take into consideration the ratio of the majority to minority members present and shall establish the order of recognition for questioning in such a manner as not to disadvantage the members of the majority. The chairman may accomplish this by recognizing two majority members for each minority member recognized.

(f) The following additional rules shall apply to hearings:

(1) The chairman at a hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation.

(2) A copy of the committee rules and this clause shall be made available to each witness.

(3) Witnesses at hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

(4) The chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

(5) If the committee determines that evidence or testimony at a hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, it shall—

(A) afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness;

(B) receive such evidence or testimony in executive session; and

(C) receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

(6) Except as provided in subparagraph (5), the chairman shall receive and the committee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses.

(7) No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the committee.

(8) In the discretion of the committee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The committee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

(9) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee.

RULE NO. 10. PROCEDURES FOR REPORTING BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

(a)(1) It shall be the duty of the chairman of the committee to report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any measure approved by the committee and to take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring the matter to a vote.

(2) In any event, the report of the committee on a measure which has been approved by the committee shall be filed within 7 calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the clerk of the committee a written request, signed by a majority of the members of the committee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of any such request, the clerk of the committee shall transmit immediately to the chairman of the committee notice of the filing of that request.

(b)(1) No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the committee unless a majority of the committee was actually present.

(2) With respect to each rollcall vote on a motion to report any bill or resolution of a public character, the total number of votes cast for, and the total number of votes cast against, the reporting of such bill or resolution shall be included in the committee report.

(c) The report of the committee on a measure which has been approved by the committee shall include—

(1) the oversight findings and recommendations required pursuant to clause 2(b)(1) of Rule X of the House separately set out and clearly identified;

(2) the statement required by section 308(a)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, separately set out and clearly identified, if the measure provides new budget authority or new or increased tax expenditures;

(3) the estimate and comparison prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of such Act, separatley set out and clearly identified, whenever the Director (if timely submitted prior to the filing of the report) has submitted such estimate and comparison to the committee; and

(4) a summary of the oversight findings and recommendations made by the Committee on Government Operations under clause 4(c)(2) of Rule X of the House separately set out and clearly identified whenever such findings and recommendations have been submitted to the legislative committee in a timely fashion to allow an opportunity to consider such findings and recommendations during the committee's deliberations on the measure.

(d) Each report of the committee on each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by the committee shall contain a detailed analytical statement as to whether the enactment of such bill or joint resolution into law may have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy.

(e) If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the committee, any member of the committee gives notice of intention of file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than 3 calendar days, commencing on the day on which the measure or matter(s) was approved, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays, in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that member, with the clerk of the committee. All such views so filed by one or more members of the committee shall be included within, and shall be a part of, the report filed by the committee with respect to that measure or matter. The report of the committee upon that measure or matter shall be printed in a single volume which—

(1) shall include all supplemental, minority, or additional views which have been submitted by the time of the filing of the report, and

(2) shall bear upon its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views (and any material submitted under subdivisions (3) and (4) of subparagraph (c)) are included as part of the report. This subparagraph does not preclude—

(A) the immediate filing or printing of a committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by this subparagraph; or

(B) the filing by any such committee of any supplemental report upon any measure or matter which may be required for the correction of any technical error in a previous report made by that committee upon that measure or matter.

(f) If hearings have been held on any such measure or matter so reported, the committee shall make every reasonable effort to have such hearings printed and available for distribution to the members of the House prior to the consideration of such measure or matter in the House.

RULE NO. 11. SUBCOMMITTEE OVERSIGHT

The standing subcommittees of the committee shall conduct oversight of matters within their jurisdiction in accordance with Rule X, clauses 2 and 3 of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE NO. 12. REVIEW OF CONTINUING PROGRAMS; BUDGET ACT PROVISIONS

(a) The committee shall, in its consideration of all bills and joint resolutions of a public character within its jurisdiction, insure that appropriation for continuing programs and activities of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia government will be made annually to the maximum extent feasible and consistent with the nature, requirement, and objectives of the programs and activities involved. For the purposes of this paragraph a Government agency includes the organizational units of government listed in clause 7(c) of Rule XIII of House Rules.

(b) The committee shall review, from time to time, each continuing program within its jurisdictions for which appropriations are not made annually in order to ascertain whether such program could be modified so that appropriations therefor would be made annually.

(c) The committee shall, on or before March 15 of each year, submit to the Committee on the Budget (1) its views and estimates with respect to all matters to be set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for the ensuing fiscal year which are within its jurisdiction or functions, and (2) an estimate of the total amounts of new budget authority, and budget outlays resulting therefrom, to be provided or authorized in all bills and resolutions within its jurisdiction which it intends to be effective during that fiscal year.

(d) As soon as practicable after a concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year is agreed to, the committee (after consulting with the appropriate committee or committees of the Senate) shall subdivide any allocation made to it, the joint explanatory statement accompany the conference report on such resolution, and promptly report such subdivisions to the House, in the manner provided by section 302 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(e) Whenever the committee is directed in a concurrent resolution on the budget to determine and recommend changes in laws, bills, or resolutions under the reconciliation process it shall promptly make such determination and recommendations, and report a reconciliation bill or resolution (or both) to the House or submit such recommendations to the Committee on the Budget, in accordance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

RULE NO. 13. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

The rule for the broadcasting of committee hearings shall be the same as Rule XI, clause 3 of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE NO. 14. COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE STAFF

Except as provided in Rule XI, clause 5(d) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the staff of the Committee on House Administration shall be appointed as follows:

A. The subcommittee staff shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the subcommittee chairman within the budget approved for the subcommittee by the full committee;

B. The staff assigned to the minority shall be appointed and their remuneration determined in such manner as the minority party members of the committee shall determine within the budget approved for such purposes by the committee;

C. The employees of the committee not assigned to a standing subcommittee or to the minority under the above provisions shall be appointed, and may be removed, and their remuneration determined by the chairman within the budget approved for such purposes by the committee.

RULE NO. 15. TRAVEL OF MEMBERS AND STAFF

(a) Consistent with the primary expense resolution and such additional expense resolutions as may have been approved, the provisions of this rule shall govern travel of committee members and staff. Travel for any member or any staff member shall be paid only upon the prior authorization of the chairman. Travel may be authorized by the chairman for any member and any staff member in connection with the attendance of hearings conducted by the committee or any subcommittee thereof and meetings, conferences, and investigations which involve activities or subject matter under the general jurisdiction of the committee. Before such authorization is given there shall be submitted to the chairman in writing the following:

(1) The purpose of the travel;

(2) The dates during which the travel will occur;

(3) The locations to be visited and the length of time to be spent in each;

(4) The names of members and staff seeking authorization.

(b)(1) In the case of travel outside the United States of members and staff of the committee or of a subcommittee for the purpose of conducting hearings, investigations, studies, or attending meetings and conferences involving activities or subject matter under the legislative assignment of the committee or pertinent subcommittee, prior authorization must be obtained from the chairman. Before such authorization is given, there shall be submitted to the chairman, in writing, a request for such authorization. Each request, which shall be filed in a manner that allows for a reasonable period of time for review before such travel is scheduled to begin, shall include the following:

(A) the purpose of the travel;

(B) the dates during which the travel will occur;

(C) the names of the countries to be visited and the length of time to be spent in each;

(D) an agenda of anticipated activities for each country for which travel is authorized together with a description of the purpose to be served and the areas of committee jurisdiction involved; and

(E) the names of members and staff for whom authorization is sought.

(2) Requests for travel outside the United States shall be initiated by the Chairman and shall be limited to members and permanent employees of the committee.

(3) At the conclusion of any hearing, investigation, study, meeting or conference for which travel outside the United States has been authorized pursuant to this rule, each subcommittee (or members and staff attending meetings or conferences) shall submit a written report to the chairman covering the activities and other pertinent observations or information gained as a result of such travel.

(c) Members and staff of the committee performing authorized travel on official business shall be governed by applicable laws, resolutions, or regulations of the House and of the Committee on House Administration pertaining to such travel.

RULE NO. 16. NUMBER AND JURISDICTION OF SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) There shall be six Standing Subcommittees. The ratio (majority/minority) and jurisdiction of the subcommittees shall be:

Subcommittee on Accounts. (7/4)—Internal budget matters; expenditures from the contingent fund; changes in amounts of allowances; and consultant contracts for committees.

Subcommittee on Procurement and Printing. (3/2)—Matters pertaining to procurement contracts for goods. Matters pertaining to printing, depository libraries, material printed in Congressional Record, and executive papers.

Subcommittee on Office Systems. (3/2)—Matters pertaining to furniture, electrical and mechanical office equipment and other accoutrements for use in the office of members, officers or committees and matters pertaining to the development of management systems for such offices.

Subcommittee on Personnel and Police. (3/2)—Matters pertaining to House employees and Police, parking, restaurant, barber and beauty shop, and other House facilities and services.

Subcommittee on Elections. (7/4)—Matters pertaining to the election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress; corrupt practices; credentials and qualifications and Federal elections generally, including the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and the Federal Election Commission.

Subcommittee on Libraries and Memorials. (3/2)—Matters pertaining to the Library of Congress; statuary and pictures; acceptance or purchase of works of art for the Capitol; purchase of books and manuscripts; erection of monuments to the memory of individuals; matters relating to the Smithsonian Institution and the incorporation of similar institutions.

(b) The Chairman of the Committee may appoint such ad hoc subcommittees as he deems appropriate.

(c) The Chairman of the Committee and the ranking minority member shall serve as ex officio members without vote of all subcommittees of the committee unless either member is appointed as a voting member of any subcommittee.

RULE NO. 17. POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUBCOMMITTEES

Each subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the full committee on all matters referred to it. Subcommittee chairmen shall set meetings dates after consultation with the chairman of the full committee and other subcommittee chairmen, with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of committee or subcommittee meetings or hearings wherever possible. It shall be the practice of the committee that meetings of subcommittees not be scheduled to occur simultaneously with meetings of the full committee. In order to ensure orderly and fair assignment of hearing and meeting rooms, hearings and meetings should be arranged in advance with the chairman through the staff director of the committee.

RULE NO. 18. REFERRAL OF LEGISLATION TO SUBCOMMITTEES

All legislation and other matters referred to the committee shall be referred by the chairman to the subcommittee of appropriate jurisdiction within 2 weeks, unless by majority vote of the members of the full committee, consideration is to be otherwise effected. The chairman may refer the matter simultaneously to two or more subcommittees, consistent with House Rule X, for concurrent consideration or for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations), or divide the matter into two or more parts and refer each such part to a different subcommittee, or refer the matter pursuant to House Rule X to an ad hoc subcommittee appointed by the chairman for the specific purpose of considering that matter and reporting to the full committee thereon, or such other provisions as may be considered appropriate. The chairman may designate a subcommittee chairman or other member to take responsibility as "floor manager" of a bill during its consideration in the House.

RULE NO. 19. OTHER PROCEDURES AND REGULATIONS

The chairman of the full committee may establish such other procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the committee.

RULE NO. 20. DESIGNATION OF CLERK OF THE COMMITTEE

For the purposes of these rules and the Rules of the House of Representatives, the staff director of the committee shall act as the clerk of the committee.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, the following rules for the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs are herewith submitted pursuant to rule XI, clause 2, paragraph 2(a):

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

A. RULES OF GENERAL APPLICATION

Rule 1. Rules of the House.—The Rules of the House of Representatives are the rules of its Committees and Subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in Committees and Subcommittees. Written rules adopted by the Committees, not inconsistent with the Rules of the House, shall be binding on each Subcommittee. Each Subcommittee of a Committee is a part of that Committee and is subject to the authority and direction of that Committee, Rule XI of the Rules of the House, which pertains entirely to Committee procedure, is incorporated and made a part of the Rules of the Committee which are supplementary to the Rules of the House.

Rule 2. Time, Place of Meetings.—(a) While Congress is in session, regular business meetings of the Committee shall be held in the regularly assigned committee room, Longworth House Office Building, beginning at 9:45 a.m. on each Wednesday, except that whenever any regularly scheduled party caucus or conference conflicts with such meeting of the Committee, then the Committee shall meet at a later time or on Thursday or on such other day as may be mutually agreed upon by the Chair and the Ranking Minority Member. Such meeting shall be called to order and presided over by the Chair, or in the absence of the Chair, by the ranking majority member of the Committee present.

(b) Special meetings shall be held at the call of the Chair or upon written request of Members of the Committee as provided in Rule XI, Clause 2, of the Rules of the House. When a regularly called party caucus or party conference is scheduled to be in session after 10 a.m. on any day, and the Chair is so advised not later than 12 noon on the preceding day, the regularly scheduled Committee meeting for that day shall be rescheduled at a later time or as provided in paragraph (a) of this rule.

(c) Each meeting of the Committee or any of its Subcommittees for the transaction of business, including the mark-up of legislation, shall be open to the public except when the Committee or Subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives: Provided however, That no person other than Members of the Committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or mark-up session which has been closed to the public. This paragraph does not apply to any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

Rule 3. Agenda for Meetings.—The agenda for Committee meetings setting out all items of business to be considered, shall be available and delivered to the office of each Member at least 48 hours in advance of the meeting. Provided, That this requirement may be waived by a majority vote, a quorum being present.

Rule 4. Adjournment of Meetings.—A motion to adjourn shall not be approved unless the Chair, in his discretion, recognizes a Member for the purpose of making such motion and the motion is approved by a majority of the Members present and voting.

Rule 5. Committee Procedure.—(a) The date, time, place and subject matter of all public hearings of the Committee or any of its Subcommittees shall be announced at least 1 week in advance of the commencement of such hearings. If the Committee, or any of its Subcommittees, determines that there is good cause to expedite the hearing, it shall make the announcement at the earliest possible date. Any such announcement shall be promptly published in the Daily Digest.

(b) Each hearing conducted by the Committee or Subcommittee thereof shall be open to the public except when the Committee or Subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the Committee or Subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close one subsequent day of hearing. Provided further, That two or more Members at a meeting held for the purpose of taking testimony may determine, by a majority vote.

(i) to close such hearing for the purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger national security or tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person in violation of rule XI, 2(k)(5) of the Rules of the House; or

(ii) to close the hearing as provided in rule XI 2(k)(5) of the House.

(c) No Member may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the Committee, or its Subcommittees unless the House, by majority vote, authorizes the Committee or its Subcommittees, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close such meetings to Members by the same procedures designated in this rule for closing meetings to the public.

(d) Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or one of its Subcommittees shall file with the Committee, at least 24 hours in advance of his appearance, a written statement of his proposed testimony and shall limit his oral presentation at his appearance to a brief summary of his argument, unless this requirement is waived by the Committee.

(e) The right to interrogate witnesses before the Committee or any of its Subcommittees shall alternate between the Majority Members and the Minority Members. In recognizing Members to question witnesses, the Chair may take into consideration the ratio of Majority and Minority party Members present and may recognize two Majority party Members for each Minority party Member recognized. Each Member shall be limited to 5 minutes in the interrogation of witnesses until such time as each Member of the Committee who so desires has had an opportunity to question the witness.

(f) No bill, recommendation, or other matter reported by a Subcommittee shall be considered by the Committee until 2 calendar days have elapsed from the time of the action of the Subcommittee and such action has been reported by the Committee Clerk to all Members of the Committee and, in the case of a bill, a copy has been delivered to the office of all Members so requesting the same, together with a section-by-section explanation and, if a change in present law is involved, a section-by-section comparison with the present law: Provided, That this requirement may be waived by a two-thirds vote of a quorum of the Committee Members.

Rule 6. Quorum.—No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the Committee unless a majority of the Members of the Committee are present, but for the purpose of transacting any other Committee business one-third of the Members shall constitute a quorum. Testimony and evidence may be received at any meeting at which there are present two or more Members of the Committee. A quorum, once established, shall be deemed present unless a Member objects to the transaction of business due to the lack of a quorum. When a call of the roll is required to ascertain the presence of a quorum, the offices of all Members shall be so notified and the Members shall have not less than 10 minutes to prove their attendance. The Chair shall have the discretion to waive this requirement when a quorum is actually present or whenever a quorum is secured and may direct the Clerk to note the names of all Members present within the 10 minute period.

Rule 7. Proxies.—A vote by any Member in the Committee or in any Subcommittee may be cast by proxy, but such proxy must be in writing. Each proxy shall designate the Member who is to execute the proxy authorization, shall assert that the Member is absent on official business or otherwise unable to attend, and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto; except that a Member may authorize a general proxy for motions to recess, adjourn or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the Member assigning his vote and shall contain the date and time of day that the proxy is signed. Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

Rule 8. Subpenas and Oaths.—(a) A subpena may be issued by a Committee or Subcommittee in the conduct of any investigation or series of investigations or activities when authorized by a majority of the Members of the Committee or Subcommittee and approved by the Chair of the Full Committee and signed by his or her designee.

(b) The Chair of the Committee, the Chair of any of its Subcommittees, or any Member designated by either, may administer oaths to any witness.

Rule 9. Journal, Rollcalls.—(a) The proceedings of the Committee shall be recorded in a journal which shall, among other things include a record of the votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded. A copy of the journal shall be furnished the Ranking Minority Member through the Minority Counsel. A record vote may be demanded by one-fifth of the Members present or, in the apparent absence of a quorum, by any one Member. No demand for a rollcall shall be made or entertained except for the purpose of securing a record vote or in the apparent absence of a quorum.

(b) At the beginning of any meeting of the Committee, the Chair may announce to the Committee, in its discretion, that further proceedings will be postponed on any motions on which a recorded vote is ordered or on which the vote is objected to under Rule 6 until immediately preceding the conclusion of the meeting. In such instances, the Committee shall proceed with the consideration of the next regularly scheduled measures or matters until all such business is disposed of or until such time as the Chair announces that the question will be put on the matter deferred. The question on any motion so postponed shall be put by the Chair and shall be disposed of by the Committee, without further debate, as expeditiously as possible. If the Committee adjourns before the question is put and determined on such motion, then the first order of business at the next meeting shall be the disposition of such motion.

(c) The result of each rollcall vote in any meeting of the Committee shall be made available in the Committee office for inspection by the public. Such records shall constitute the official attendance records of the Committee.

Rule 10. Filing of Committee Reports.—(a) All members of the Committee shall be given an opportunity to review each proposed Committee report for at least 2 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) prior to filing.

(b) If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by this Committee, any Member of the Committee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that Member shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) after the copy of the Committee report in substantially final form is completed, excluding formal or technical changes, in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that Member or Members, with the Clerk of the Committee. In the event that substantial or significant changes are made in the Committee report, such Member shall have not more than one calendar day to review such changes and alter his or her views in responding thereto. All such views so filed by one or more Members of the Committee shall be included within, and shall be a part of, the report filed by the Committee with respect to that measure or matter.

(c) The time requirements of paragraphs (a) and (b) of this rule shall run concurrently and shall not operate to delay the filing of Committee reports.

Rule 11. Record of Committee Proceedings.—(a) Evidence, testimony, and information relevant to any measure or matter before the Committee will be received for inclusion in the record of proceedings as determined appropriate. A formal transcript need not be made in all instances and the Chair may exercise discretion as to content of the record. A complete record of all Committee action, which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall vote is demanded, shall be kept and retained in the permanent files of the Committee. All printing of proceedings or of other matter shall be subject to general principles promulgated by the Chair as well as by approval in each instance not only by the Chair of the appropriate Subcommittee but also by the Chair of the Committee.

(b) All transcripts of public meetings and hearings shall be available for review in the offices of the Committee. Unrevised and unedited hearing transcripts shall not be reproduced in any form without the written consent of the Chair or of the Member involved. Transcripts of other public meetings of the Committee and its Subcommittees shall not be reproduced in any form without the written consent of the Chair of the Committee or, as appropriate, of the Chair of the Subcommittee involved, in his or her discretion. Records and transcripts of public meetings of the Committee, conducted during any prior Congress, may be made available for review in the offices of the committee, but such records and transcripts shall not be reproduced except as permitted by the House of Representatives.

(c) No records or transcripts of Committee meetings held in executive session shall be released unless the Committee directs otherwise. All classified documents, transcripts, or other materials shall be maintained in an appropriately secured location and shall not be released for review by any unauthorized person. Authorized persons must review such classified materials at an appropriate location in the Committee offices, but such material shall not be removed from the Committee offices for any reason without the written permission of the Chair and, as appropriate, of the Chair of the Subcommittee involved.

Rule 12. Broadcasting of Committee Hearings.—(a) It is the purpose of this clause to provide a means, in conformity with acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, and decorum, by which Committee hearings, or Committee meetings, which are open to the public may be covered, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage—

(1) for the education, enlightenment, and information of the general public, on the basis of accurate and impartial news coverage, regarding the operations, procedures, and practices of the House as a legislative and representative body and regarding the measures, public issues, and other matters before the House and its Committees, the consideration thereof, and the action taken thereon; and

(2) for the development of the perspective and understanding of the general public with respect to the role and function of the House under the constitution of the United States as an organ of the Federal Government.

(b) In addition, it is the intent of this clause that radio and television tapes and television film of any coverage under this clause shall not be used, or made available for use, as partisan political campaign material to promote or oppose the candidacy of any person for elective public office.

(c) It is, further, the intent of this clause that the general conduct of each meeting (whether of a hearing or otherwise) covered, under authority of this clause, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, and the personal behavior of the Committee members and staff, other Government officials and personnel, witnesses, television, radio and press media personnel, and the general public at the hearing or other meeting shall be in strict conformity with and observance of the acceptable standards of dignity, propriety, courtesy, and decorum traditionally observed by the House in its operations and shall not be such as to—

(1) distort the objects and purposes of the hearing or other meeting or the activities of Committee members in connection with that hearing or meeting or in connection with the general work of the Committee or of the House; or

(2) cast discredit or dishonor on the House, the Committee, or any Member or bring the House, the Committee, or any Member into disrepute.

(d) The coverage of Committee hearings and meetings by television broadcast, radio broadcast, or still photography is a privilege made available by the House and shall be permitted and conducted only in strict conformity with the purposes, provisions, and requirements of this clause. No recording of Committee or Subcommittee proceedings shall be permitted except as authorized pursuant to these rules:

(1) Accredited press must obtain advance clearance for coverage of Committee meetings from the appropriate gallery.

(2) Unaccredited press will be permitted to cover meetings only—

(a) After presentation of bona fide press credentials to the Director of Public Affairs of the Committee, and

(b) Approval of such coverage by the Committee, or Subcommittee, at the request of the Chair.

(3) All other media seeking to record all or any part of any Committee or Subcommittee meeting by means of audio or video recording must—

(a) Agree, in writing, to comply with all House and Committee rules pertaining to recording and taping of Committee and Subcommittee meetings and hearings, and

(b) Obtain advance clearance of the Chair of the Committee or Subcommittee through the Director of Public Affairs of the Committee.

(4) when space limitations prohibit accommodation of all accredited press, unaccredited press and other media seeking to record part or all of any Committee or Subcommittee meeting or hearing, space will be allotted first to accredited press, then, if space permits, to the unaccredited press and other media.

(e) Whenever any hearing or meeting conducted by any Committee of the House is open to the public, that Committee may permit, by majority vote of the Committee, that hearing or meeting to be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, but only under such written rules as the Committee may adopt in accordance with the purposes, provisions, and requirements of this clause.

(f) The following rules shall apply to the Committee and its Subcommittees:

(1) If the television or radio coverage of the hearing or meeting is to be presented to the public as live coverage, that coverage shall be conducted and presented without commercial sponsorship.

(2) No witness served with a subpena by the Committee shall be required against his or her will to be photographed at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any such witness who does not wish to be subjected to radio, television, or still photography coverage, all lenses shall be covered and all microphones used for coverage turned off.

(3) Not more than four television cameras, operating from fixed positions, shall be permitted in a hearing or meeting room. The allocation among the television media of the positions of the number of television cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(4) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any Member of the Committee or the visibility of that witness and that Member to each other.

(5) Television cameras shall not be placed on the Committee rostrum or in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

(6) Equipment necessary for coverage by the television and radio media shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the Committee is in session.

(7) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing or meeting room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level in the hearing or meeting room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(8) Not more than five press photographers shall be permitted to cover a hearing or meeting by still photography. In the selection of these photographers, preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures. If request is made by more than five of the media for coverage of the hearing or meeting by still photography, that coverage shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers.

(9) Photographers shall not position themselves, at any time during the course of the hearing or meeting, on the Committee rostrum or between the witness stand and the Members of the Committee.

(10) Photographers shall not place themselves in positions which obstruct unnecessarily the coverage of the hearing by the other media.

(11) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media shall be then currently accredited to the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(12) Personnel providing coverage by still photography shall be then currently accredited to the Press Photographers' Gallery.

(13) Personnel providing coverage by the television and radio media and by still photography shall conduct themselves and their coverage activities in an orderly and unobtrusive manner.

Rule 13. Committee Staffs.—(a) Pursuant to Rule XI, Clause 6, of the Rules of the House, the permanent staff of the Committee shall consist of not more than 30 staff members who shall be selected on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of their respective positions as follows:

Three shall be chosen by the Committee from nominations approved by a majority of the Members of the Minority party of the Committee;

one shall be chosen by the Committee from nominations submitted by the Chair of each of the standing Subcommittees of the Committee;

one shall be chosen by the Committee from nominations submitted by the ranking Minority party Member of each standing Subcommittee of the Committee; and the balance of any unfilled positions shall be chosen by the Committee from nominations approved by a majority of the Members of the Majority party Members of the Committee;

The staff members selected by the Majority party shall be assigned such legislative, oversight, and administrative duties and responsibilities as the Chair of the Committee may prescribe and shall assist Committee Members in connection with matters related to Committee business. Each staff member nominated by a Subcommittee Chair shall be under the general supervison and direction of that Subcommittee Chair. The staff members selected by the Minority party shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Minority party Members of the Committee who may delegate such authority as they determine appropriate.

(b) A Subcommittee Chair shall be entitled to select and designate additional staff members, subject to the approval of a majority of the Majority party Members of the Committee, to assist the Subcommittee in carrying out its legislative, investigative and oversight responsibilities. The Minority shall be accorded fair and equitable consideration with respect to the appointment of additional staff, but Minority staffing shall continue to be approximately one-third Minority representation on the Committee. Such staff members shall be assigned such duties pertaining to Subcommittee business as the Subcommittee Chair or the Minority, respectively, deem advisable and shall be compensated at a salary commensurate with the responsibilities prescribed by such Subcommittee Chair or by the Minority.

(c) Notwithstanding paragraphs (a) and (b) of this rule, the Committee may employ such additional nonpartisan staff as it deems necessary to conduct the administrative and clerical functions of the Committee. Such staff shall be in addition to any staff designated exclusively for the Majority or Minority party and shall be appointed only with the approval of a majority of the Members of the Minority party and with the approval of a majority of the Members of the Minority party. The Chair of the Committee shall establish and assign the duties and responsibilities of such members of the staff and they shall be compensated at a salary commensurate with the responsibilities prescribed.

(d) In the event that staff is not otherwise available pursuant to paragraphs (a) and (b) of this rule, from the funds provided for the appointment of Committee staff pursuant to any primary and additional expense resolution;

(1) The Chair of each standing Subcommittee is authorized to appoint at least one staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the Subcommittee Chair.

(2) The ranking Minority party Member of each standing Subcommittee is authorized to appoint one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of the ranking Minority party Member.

(3) The staff members appointed pursuant to the provisions of subparagraphs (a) and (b) shall be compensated at a rate determined by the Subcommittee Chair pursuant to Rule XI, Clause 5(d), of the House of Representatives.

(4) The staff positions made available to the Subcommittee Chair and ranking Minority party Members pursuant to subparagraphs (1) and (2) of this paragraph shall be made available from the staff positions provided under Rule XI, Clause 6, unless such staff positions are made available pursuant to a primary or additional expense resolution.

(e) All staff selected pursuant to this rule shall be approved by the Committee and shall not be assigned any duties other than those pertaining to the business of the Committee and its Subcommittees. The staff of a subcommittee shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Chair of that Subcommittee. The staff assigned to the Minority shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Minority party Members of the Committee who may delegate such authority as they determine appropriate. The staff of the Committee not assigned to a Subcommittee or to the Minority shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Chair of the Committee, who shall establish and assign the duties and responsibilities of such staff members and delegate authority as determined appropriate.

B. SUBCOMMITTEES: JURISDICTION, COMPOSITION, AND POWERS

Rule 14. Subcommittee Rules.—The Rules of the Committee, where applicable, shall be the Rules of its Subcommittees.

Rule 15. Reference of Legislation.—(a) Except for bills, resolutions, or matters involving Indians and Indian Tribes which shall be retained for consideration by the Committee unless referred by the Chair to an appropriate standing, select, or special Subcommittee, every bill, resolution, or other matter referred to the Committee shall be referred to Subcommittee within 2 weeks from the date of its referral to the Committee unless the Chair, with the approval of a majority of the Majority Members of the Committee, orders that it be retained for consideration by the Committee or that it be referred to a select or special Subcommittee.

(b) A bill, resolution, or other matter referred by the Chair to a Subcommittee may be recalled therefrom by him or her with the approval of a majority of the Members of the Committee for the Committee's direct consideration or for referral to another Subcommittee. The Chair shall so inform the Members of this recommendation, in writing, and such recommendation shall be effective within 1 week if approved by a majority of the Members of the Committee.

(c) A bill, resolution, or other matter referred by the Committee to a Subcommittee may be recalled from such Subcommittee at any time by majority vote, a quorum being present, for its consideration by the Committee or for reference to another Subcommittee.

Rule 16. Subcommittees.—There shall be the following six standing Subcommittees of the Committee: Subcommittee on Energy and the Environment; Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources; Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources; Subcommittee on National Parks and Public Lands; Subcommittee on Insular and International Affairs; and Subcommittee on General Oversight and Investigations. Additional standing Subcommittees may be created by resolution of the Committee.

Rule 17. Jurisdiction of Subcommittees.—(a) The jurisdiction, including legislative, investigative, and oversight responsibilities, of the six standing Subcommittees shall, subject to alteration as other Subcommittees are created, be as follows:

Subcommittee on Energy and the Environment

(a) Recommendations with respect to laws and programs under the jurisdiction of the Committee made by the Council on Environmental Quality in its annual Environmental Quality Report to the Congress.

(b) Selected matters and proposals, as referred by the Chairman, involving the environmental impacts of any laws or programs under the jurisdiction of the Committee.

(c) Regulation of the domestic nuclear energy industry, including regulation of research and development of reactors and nuclear regulatory research and special oversight functions with respect to nonmilitary nuclear energy and research and development including the disposal of nuclear waste.

(d) Conservation of the uranium supply in the United States.

(e) Legislation concerning the transportation of natural gas from or within Alaska or concerning the disposition of oil transported by the trans-Alaska oil pipeline.

Subcommittee on Water, Power, and Offshore Energy Resources

(a) All measures or matters pertaining to irrigation and reclamation projects and other water resources development programs, including policies and procedures relating thereto.

(b) Compacts relating to the use and apportionment of interstate waters.

(c) Water rights, including Federal reserved water rights on public lands, and water related programs of the Geological Survey.

(d) Saline water research and development program and water resources research program.

(e) Water resources planning conducted pursuant to the Water Resources Planning Act.

(f) Programs involving major interbasin movement of water or power.

(g) Measures and matters relating to public lands in Alaska, except those within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittees on Energy and the Environment and National Parks and Public Lands.

(h) Measures and matters relating to petroleum conservation on the public and other Federal lands.

(i) Forestry and forest management issues in Alaska.

Subcommittee on Mining and Natural Resources

(a) Mining interests generally, including deep seabed mining and matters involving the Law of the Sea Treaty.

(b) Mineral resources of the public lands, except matters involving the Outer Continental Shelf.

(c) Mineral land laws, and claims and entries thereunder.

(d) Geological survey, except water related programs.

(e) Mining schools and experimental stations.

(f) Proposed long-range domestic minerals programs, including availability of domestic minerals to fulfill all domestic requirements.

(g) All measures and matters affecting geothermal resources.

(h) Special oversight functions related to regulatory activities under the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, the collection of fees, operation and use of funds under the Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund and cooperative programs with State and Federal agencies authorized by Title IV of said Act, and measures and matters related to remining activities and to authorizations for the Abandoned Mine Reclamation programs under Title IV of said Act.

Subcommittee on National Parks and Public Lands

(a) Measures and matters related to the National Park System and all of its units.

(b) National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; National Trails System; national recreation areas; and other national units established for protection, conservation, preservation, or recreational development administered by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, and such military parks, battlefields, national cemeteries, and parks as the Secretary of the Interior may administer within the District of Columbia.

(c) National outdoor recreation plans, programs, and administration, including the Land and Water Conservation Fund and the Pennsylvania Avenue Development Corporation.

(d) Preservation of prehistoric ruins and objects of interest on the public domain and other historic preservation programs and activities, including programs for international cooperation in the field of historic preservation.

(e) Except for public lands in Alaska, public lands, generally, including measures or matters related to entry, easements, withdrawals, and grazing.

(f) Forfeiture of land grants and alien ownership, including alien ownership of mineral lands.

(g) Forest reserves, including management thereof, created from the public domain, except in Alaska.

(h) Except for Alaska, National Wilderness Preservation System, generally, and all matters relating to wilderness in the national park system.

Subcommittee on Insular and International Affairs

(a) Except for matters within the jurisdiction of other Subcommittees, all measures or matters involving the insular areas of the United States.

(b) All measures or matters involving the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Freely Associated States and Antarctica.

(c) Cooperative efforts to encourage, enhance and improve international programs for the protection of the environment and the conservation of natural resources within the jurisdiction of the Committee.

Subcommittee on General Oversight and Investigations

(a) General and continuing oversight and investigative authority over activities, policies and programs within the jurisdiction of the Committee as may be referrred to the Subcommittee by the Chair of the Full Committee, after consultation with the Chair of the principal standing legislative Subcommittee involved.

(b) Such remedial legislation resulting from the findings or recommendations of the Subcommittee as may be referred to the Subcommittee by the Chair of the Full Committee, after consultation with the Chair of the principal legislative Subcommittee involved.

(b)(1) In order to enable the Committee to carry out its responsibilities under Rule X, Clause 2, of the Rules of the House, each Subcommittee shall review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of that Subcommittee, and the organization and operation of the Federal agencies and entities having responsibilities in or for the administration and execution thereof, in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the Congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated. In addition, each such Subcommittee shall review and study any conditions or circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability of enacting new or additional legislation within the jurisdiction of that Subcommittee (whether or not any bill or resolution has been introduced with respect thereto), and shall on a continuing basis undertake future research and forecasting on matters within the jurisdiction of that Subcommittee.

(2) Pursuant to Rule X, Clause 2, of the Rules of the House, the Chair of the Committee and the Chair of the Subcommittee having jurisdiction over the matters involved or their respective designees, shall meet with representatives of the Committee on Government Operations to discuss and to assist in coordinating oversight plans of their respective Committees.

Rule 18. Party Ratios.—The Chair shall negotiate with the Minority with respect to the size of each Subcommittee, with due regard for the preference of Members for Subcommittee assignments, except that party representation on each Subcommittee shall be no less favorable to the Majority party than the ratio for the Committee.

The Chair, if approved by a majority of the Members of the Majority party, and the Ranking Minority Member, if approved by a majority of the Members of the Minority party, may serve as Members of each Subcommittee.

The size and party representation for each Subcommittee during the 100th Congress shall be as follows:

Subcommittees [1]	Total Members	Majority party [2]	Minority party [2]
Energy and the Environment	16	10	6
Water and Power Resources	22	14	8
Mining and Natural Resources	8	5	3
National Parks and Public Lands	29	18	11
Insular and International Affairs	6	4	2
General Oversight and Investigations	8	5	3

[1] The Chair and Ranking Minority Member of the Full Committee serve as ex officio Members of all Subcommittees, but are voting Members only on the Subcommittees to which they are assigned pursuant to Rule 18.

[2] The Delegates from the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and Guam and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico do not count for purposes of the ratio between the majority and minority parties.

Rule 19. Special or Select Subcommittee.—The Chair is authorized, after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee, to appoint such special or select Subcommittees as he deems advisable for carrying out the responsibilities and functions of the Committee. Party representation on each such Subcommittee shall be in the same proportion as that on the Committee.

Rule 20. Powers and Duties of Subcommittees.—Each Subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the Committee on all matters referred to it. The Chair of each Subcommittee shall set dates for hearings and meetings of their respective Subcommittees after consultation with the Chair of the Full Committee and of other Subcommittees with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of Committee and Subcommittee meetings or hearings wherever possible.

Rule 21. Travel.—(a) Subcommittee hearings outside of Washington, D.C., and travel by Members and staff shall be subject to approval by the Chair of the Committee pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on House Administration. Each Subcommittee Chair may, for the purposes of field trips or hearings outside of the District of Columbia, assign any Members of the Committee to that Subcommittee.

(b) Staff members assigned to any Subcommittee may travel in connection with their respective duties only with the approval of the appropriate Subcommittee Chair and with the approval of the Chair of the Committee. Prior to submitting such travel requests to the appropriate Subcommittee Chair, all Minority staff travel shall be subject to such approval as the Minority Members of the Committee deem appropriate. All such travel shall be subject to the regulations promulgated by the Committee on House Administration.

Rule 22. Subcommittee Chair.—The Majority shall have the right, in order of Full Committee seniority, to bid for Standing Subcommittee Chairs. Any such bid shall be subject to approval by a majority of the Majority Members of the Committee. The Minority shall select a counterpart to the Subcommittee Chair for each of the Subcommittees. The Chair of select and special Subcommittees shall be appointed by the Chair of the Committee, subject to approval by a majority of the Majority Members of the Committee except that no Subcommittee Chair shall be Chair of another legislative Subcommittee of the House.

Rule 23. Duties of Chair Upon Favorable Action by Committee.—Whenever the Committee authorizes the favorable reporting of a bill or resolution from the Committee, the Chair shall report the same or designate some Member of the Committee to report the same to the House and shall use or cause to be used all parliamentary methods to secure passage thereof, without such additional authority being set forth particularly in the motion to report each individual bill or resolution. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the authority contained herein extends in appropriate cases to moving in accordance with Rule XXIV, Clause 5, of the said rules that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union to consider the bill or resolution; and to moving in accordance with Rule XXIV, Clause 2, of said rules for the disposition of a Senate bill or resolution that is substantially the same as the House bill or resolution as reported.

Rule 24. Committee Budget and Expenses.—(a) Each Subcommittee Chair and the ranking Minority Members of the Committee shall submit to the Chair a budget for each session of the Congress covering the funding required for staff, travel, and miscellaneous expenses. The Chair shall prepare a consolidated budget for each session of Congress which shall include amounts required for all activities and programs of the Committee and the Subcommittees, except those Committee expenses to be paid from appropriations provided for by statute.

(b) Upon approval by the Committee of each such budget, the Chair, acting pursuant to Rule XI, Clause 5, of the Rules of the House, shall prepare and introduce in the House a supporting expense resolution, and take all action necessary to bring about its approval by the Committee on House Administration and by the House.

(c) The Chair shall report to the Committee any amendments to each expense resolution and any changes in the budget necessitated thereby.

(d) Authorization for the payment of additional or unforeseen Committee and the Subcommittee's expenses may be procured by one or more additional expense resolutions processed in the same manner as set out herein.

(e) Committee members shall be advised of the availability of each monthly report, prepared by the Chair for the Committee on House Administration, which shows expenditures made during the reporting period and cumulative for the year, anticipated expenditures for the projected Committee program, and detailed information on travel.

Rule 25. Recommendation of Conferees.—Whenever in the legislative process it becomes necessary to appoint conferees, Majority Members shall be recommended to the Speaker as conferees as determined by the Majority, and Minority Members shall be recommended to the Speaker as conferees as determined by the Minority. Recommended party representation shall be in the same proportion as that in the Committee.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, I have the high honor, and I count it a distinct privilege, to present to you the President of the United States.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 101-1)

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, distinguished Members of the House and Senate, honored guests, fellow citizens:

Less than 3 weeks ago, I joined you on the west front of this very building and, looking over the monuments to our proud past, offered you my hand in filling the next page of American history with a story of extended prosperity and continued peace. Tonight, I am back, to offer you my plans as well. The hand remains extended, the sleeves are rolled up, America is waiting, and now we must produce.

Together, we can build a better America.

It is comforting to return to this historic Chamber. Here, 22 years ago, I first raised my hand to be sworn into public life. So tonight, I feel as if I am returning home to friends. And I intend, in the months and years to come, to give you what friends deserve: Frankness, respect, and my best judgment about ways to improve America's future.

In return, I ask for an honest commitment to our common mission of progress. If we seize the opportunities on the road before us, there will be praise enough for all.

The people did not send us here to bicker. It is time to govern.

Many Presidents have come to this Chamber in times of great crisis, war, depression, loss of national spirit.

Eight years ago, I sat in that very chair as President Reagan spoke of punishing inflation and devastatingly high interest rates, people out of work, American confidence on the wane.

Our challenge is different.

We are fortunate. A much changed landscape lies before us tonight.

So I do not propose to reverse direction. We are headed the right way.

But we cannot rest. We are a people whose energy and drive have fueled our rise to greatness. We are a forward-looking nation; generous, yes, but ambitious as well, not for ourselves, but for the world.

Complacency is not in our character, not before, not now, not ever.

So tonight, we must take a strong America and make it even better.

We must address some very real problems. We must establish some very clear priorities. And we must make a very substantial cut in the Federal budget deficit.

Some people find that agenda impossible.

But I am presenting to you tonight a realistic plan for tackling it. My plan has four broad features: Attention to urgent priorities, investment in the future, an attack on the deficit, and no new taxes.

This budget represents my best judgment of how we can address our priorities. There are many areas in which we would all like to spend more than I propose, I understand that, but we cannot until we get our fiscal house in order

Next year alone, thanks to economic growth, without any change in the law, the Federal Government will take in over $80 billion more than it does this year. That is right—over $80 billion in new revenues, with no increase in taxes. Our job is to allocate those new resources wisely.

We can afford to increase spending by a modest amount, but enough to invest in key priorities and still cut the deficit by almost 40 percent in 1 year.

That will allow us to meet the targets set forth in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

But to do that, we must recognize that growth above inflation in Federal programs is not preordained, that not all spending initiatives were designed to be immortal.

I make this pledge tonight: My team and I are ready to work with the Congress, to form a special leadership group, to negotiate in good faith, to work day and night, if that is what it takes, to meet the budget targets, and to produce a budget on time.

We cannot settle for business as usual.

Government by continuing resolution, or Government by crisis, will not do.

I ask the Congress tonight to approve several measures which will make budgeting more sensible. We could save time and improve efficiency by enacting 2-year budgets.

Forty-three Governors have the line-item veto. Presidents should have it, too.

At the very least, when a President proposes to rescind Federal spending, the Congress should be required to vote on that proposal instead of killing it by inaction.

And I ask the Congress to honor the public's wishes by passing a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. Such an amendment, once phased in, will discipline both the Congress and the executive branch.

Several principles describe the kind of America I hope to build with your help in the years ahead.

We will not have the luxury of taking the easy, spendthrift approach to solving problems, because higher spending and higher taxes put economic growth at risk.

Economic growth provides jobs and hope. Economic growth enables us to pay for social programs. Economic growth enhances the security of the Nation. And low tax rates create economic growth.

I believe in giving Americans greater freedom and greater choice. I will work for choice for American families, whether in the housing in which they live, the schools to which they send their children, or the child care they select for their young.

I believe that we have an obligation to those in need, but that Government should not be the provider of first resort for things that the private sector can produce better.

I believe in a society that is free from discrimination and bigotry of any kind. I will work to knock down the barriers left by past discrimination and to build a more tolerant society that will stop such barriers from ever being built again.

I believe that family and faith represent the moral compass of the Nation, and I will work to make them strong, for as Benjamin Franklin said: "If a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, [can] a [great nation] rise without His aid?"

And I believe in giving people the power to make their own lives better through growth and opportunity. Together, let us put power in the hands of people.

Three weeks ago, we celebrated the bicentennial inaugural, the 200th anniversary of the first Presidency.

And if you look back, one thing is so striking about the way the Founding Fathers looked at America. They did not talk about themselves. They talked about posterity. They talked about the future.

We too, must think in terms bigger than ourselves.

We must take actions today that will ensure a better tomorrow. We must extend American leadership in technology, increase long-term investment, improve our educational system, and boost productivity. These are the keys to building a better future.

Here are some of my recommendations:

I propose almost $2.2 billion for the National Science Foundation to promote basic research and keep us on track to double its budget by 1993;

I propose to make permanent the tax credit for research and development;

I have asked Vice President QUAYLE to chair a new task force on competitiveness;

I request funding for NASA and a strong space program, an increase of almost $2.4 billion over the current fiscal year. We must have a manned-space station; a vigorous, safe space shuttle program; and more commercial development in space. The space program should always go "full throttle up." That is not just our ambition; it is our destiny;

I propose that we cut the maximum tax rate on capital gains to increase long-term investment. History is clear. This will increase revenues, help savings, and create new jobs.

We will not be competitive if we leave whole sectors of America behind. This is the year we should finally enact urban enterprise zones and bring hope to the inner cities.

But the most important competitiveness program of all is one which improves education in America.

When some of our students actually have trouble locating America on a map of the world, it is time for us to map a new approach to education.

We must reward excellence and cut through bureaucracy. We must help those schools that need help most. We must give choice to parents, students, teachers, and principals. And we must hold all concerned accountable. In education, we cannot tolerate mediocrity.

I want to cut the dropout rate and make America a more literate nation. Because what it really comes down to is this: the longer our graduation lines are today, the shorter our unemployment lines will be tomorrow.

So, tonight I am proposing the following initiatives:

The beginning of a $500 million program to reward America's best schools—"merit schools";

The creation of special Presidential awards for the best teachers in every State, because excellence should be rewarded;

The establishment of a new program of national science scholars, one each year for every Member of the House and Senate, to give this generation of students a special incentive to excel in science and mathematics;

The expanded use of magnet schools which give families and students greater choice;

And a new program to encourage "alternative certification" which will let talented people from all fields teach in our classroom.

I have said I would like to be "the Education President." Tonight, I ask you to join me by becoming "the Education Congress."

Just last week, as I settled into this new office, I received a letter from a mother in Pennsylvania, who had been struck by my message in the inaugural address. "Not 12 hours before," she wrote, "my husband and I received word that [our] son was addicted to cocaine. [He] had the world at his feet. Bright, gifted, personable, he could have done anything with his life. [Now] he has chosen cocaine."

"Please," she wrote, "find a way to curb the supply of cocaine. Get tough with the pushers. [Our son] needs your help."

My friends, that voice crying out for help could be the voice of your own neighbor, your own friend, your own son. Over 23 million Americans used illegal drugs last year—at a staggering cost to our Nation's well-being.

Let this be recorded as the time when America rose up and said "no" to drugs. The scourge of drugs must be stopped.

I am asking tonight for an increase of almost $1 billion in budget outlays to escalate the war against drugs. The war must be waged on all fronts.

Our new "drug czar" Bill Bennett and I will be shoulder to shoulder in the executive branch leading the charge.

Some money will be used to expand treatment to the poor and to young mothers. This will offer the helping hand to the many innocent victims of drugs, like the thousands of babies born addicted, or with AIDS, because of the mother's addiction.

Some will be used to cut the waiting time for treatment.

Some money will be devoted to those urban schools where the emergency is now the worst. And much of it will be used to protect our borders, with help from the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, the Departments of State and Justice and, yes, the U.S. Military.

I mean to get tough on the drug criminals. Let me be clear: This President will back up those who put their lives on the line every single day—our local police officers.

My budget asks for beefed-up prosecution, for a new attack on organized crime, and for enforcement of tough sentence; and for the worst kingpins that means the death penalty.

I also want to make sure that when a drug dealer is convicted, there is a cell waiting for him. He should not go free becasue prisons are too full.

Let the word go out: If you are caught and convicted, you will do time.

But for all we do in law enforcement, in interdiction and treatment, we will never win this war on drugs unless we stop demand for drugs.

So some of this increase will be used to educate the young about the dangers of drugs. We must involve the parents. We must involve the teachers. We must involve the communities. And, my friends, we must involve ourselves, each and every one of us in this Chamber.

One problem related to drug use demands our urgent attention and our continuing compassion. That is the terrible tragedy of AIDS.

I am asking for $1.6 billion for education to prevent the disease and for research to find a cure.

If we are to protect our future, we need a new attitude about the environment.

We must protect the air we breathe.

I will send to you shortly legislation for a new, more effective Clean Air Act. It will include a plan to reduce, by date certain, the emissions which cause acid rain, because the time for study alone has passed, and the time for action is now.

We must make use of clean coal. My budget contains full funding, on schedule, for the clean coal technology agreement that we made with Canada. We have made that agreement with Canada, and we intend to honor that agreement.

We must not neglect our parks. So I am asking to fund new acquisitions under the land and water conservation fund.

We must protect our oceans. I support new penalties against those who would dump medical waste and other trash into our oceans. The age of the needle on the beach must end.

In some cases, the gulfs and oceans off our shores hold the promise of oil and gas reserves which can make our Nation more secure and less dependent on foreign oil. When those with the most promise can be tapped safely, as with much of the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge, we should proceed. But we must use caution and we must respect the environment.

So tonight I am calling for the indefinite postponement of three lease sales which have raised troubling questions: Two off the Coast of California and one which could threaten the Everglades in Florida.

Action on these three lease sales will await the conclusions of a special task force set up to measure the potential for environmental damage.

I am directing the Attorney General and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to use every tool at their disposal to speed and toughen the enforcement of our laws against toxic waste dumpers. I want faster cleanups and tougher enforcement of penalties against polluters.

In addition to caring for our future, we must care for those around us. A decent society shows compassion for the young, the elderly, the vulnerable, and the poor.

Our first obligation is to the most vulnerable—infants, poor mothers, children living in poverty—and my proposed budget recognizes this. I ask for full funding of Medicaid, an increase of over $3 billion, and an expansion of the program to include coverage of pregnant women who are near the poverty line.

I believe we should help working families cope with the burden of child care.

Our help should be aimed at those who need it most—low-income families with young children. I support a new child-care tax credit that will aim our efforts at exactly those families, without discriminating against mothers who choose to stay at home.

Now, I know there are competing proposals. But remember this: The overwhelming majority of all preschool child care is now provided by relatives and neighbors, churches, and community groups. Families who choose these options should remain eligible for help. Parents should have choice.

And for those children who are unwanted or abused, or whose parents are deceased, we should encourage adoption. I propose to reenact the tax deduction for adoption expenses and to double it to $3,000. Let us make it easier for these kids to have parents who love them.

We have a moral contract with our senior citizens. In this budget, Social Security is fully funded, including a Federal cost-of-living adjustment. We must honor our contract.

We must care about those in "the shadows of life," and I, like many Americans, am deeply troubled by the plight of the homeless. The causes of homelessness are many, the history is long, but the moral imperative to act is clear.

Thanks to the deep well of generosity in this great land, many organizations already contribute. But we in Government cannot stand on the sidelines. In my budget, I ask for greater support for emergency food and shelter, for health services and measures to prevent substance abuse, and for clinics for the mentally ill, and I propose a new initiative involving the full range of Government agencies. We must confront this national shame.

There is another issue I have decided to mention here tonight. I have long believed that the people of Puerto Rico should have the right to determine their own political future. Personally, I strongly favor statehood. But I urge the Congress to take the necessary steps to allow the people to decide in a referedum.

Certain problems, the result of decades of unwise practices, threaten the health and security of our people. Left unattended, they will only get worse, but we can act now to put them behind us.

Earlier this week, I announced my support for a plan to restore the financial and moral integrity of our savings system. I ask Congress to enact our reform proposals within 45 days. We must not let this situation fester. We owe it to the savers in this country to solve this problem.

Certainly, the savings of Americans must remain secure. Let me be clear, insured depositors will continue to be fully protected. But any plan to refinance the system must be accompanied by major reform. Our proposals will prevent such a crisis from recurring. The best answer is to make sure that a mess like this will never happen again.

The majority of thrifts in communities across this Nation have been honest; they have played a major role in helping families achieve the American dream of home ownership. But make no mistake: Those who are corrupt, those who break the law, must be kicked out of the business; and they should go to jail.

We face a massive task in cleaning up the waste left from decades of environmental neglect at America's nuclear weapons plants.

Clearly, we must modernize these plants and operate them safely. That is not at issue. Our national security depends on it.

But beyond that, we must clean up the old mess that has been left behind. And I propose in this budget to more than double our current effort to do so. This will allow us to identify the exact nature of the various problems so we can clean them up. And clean them up we will.

We have been fortunate during these past 8 years. America is a stronger nation today than it was in 1980.

Morale in our Armed Forces has been restored. Our resolve has been shown. Our readiness has been improved. And we are at peace.

There can no longer be any doubt that peace has been made more secure through strength. When America is stronger, the world is safer.

Most people do not realize that after the successful restoration of our strength the Pentagon budget has actually been reduced in real terms for each of the last 4 years. We cannot tolerate continued real reductions in defense.

In light of the compelling need to reduce the deficit, however, I support a 1-year freeze in the military budget, something I proposed last fall in my flexible freeze plan.

This freeze will apply for only 1 year. After that increases above inflation will be required. I will not sacrifice American preparedness; and I will not compromise American strength.

I should be clear on the conditions attached to my recommendation for the coming year:

The savings must be allocated to those priorities for investing in our future that I have spoken about tonight;

The defense freeze must be a part of a comprehensive budget agreement which meets the targets spelled out in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law without raising taxes and which incorporates reforms in the budget process.

I have directed the National Security Council to review our national security and defense policies and report back to me within 90 days to ensure that our capabilities and resources meet our commitments and strategies.

I am also charging the Department of Defense with the task of developing a plan to improve the defense procurement process and management of the Pentagon, one which will fully implement the Packard Commission report. Many of these changes can only be made with the participation of the Congress. So I ask for your help.

We need fewer regulations. We need less bureaucracy. We need multiyear procurement and 2-year budgeting. And, frankly—and don't take this wrong—we need less congressional micromanagement of our Nation's military policy. I detect a slight division on that question, but nevertheless, securing a more peaceful world is perhaps the most important priority I would like to address tonight.

We meet at a time of extraordinary hope. Never before in this century have our values of freedom, democracy, and economic opportunity been such a powerful political and intellectual force around the globe.

Never before has our leadership been so crucial, because while America has its eyes on the future, the world has its eyes on America.

It is a time of great change in the world, and especially in the Soviet Union. Prudence and common sense dictate that we try to understand the full meaning of the change going on there, review our policies, and then proceed with caution. But I have personally assured General Secretary Gorbachev that, at the conclusion of such a review, we will be ready to move forward. We will not miss any opportunity to work for peace.

The fundamental fact remains that the Soviets retain a very powerful military machine, in the service of objectives which are still too often in conflict with ours. So let us take the new openness seriously. But let us also be realistic. And let us always be strong.

There are some pressing issues we must address.

I will vigorously pursue the strategic defense initiative.

The spread, and even use of sophisticated weaponry, threatens global security as never before.

Chemical weapons must be banned from the face of the Earth, never to be used again. This will not be easy. Verification will be extraordinarily difficult. But civilization and human decency demand that we try.

And the spread of nuclear weapons must be stopped. I will work to strengthen the hand of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Our diplomacy must work every day against the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

And, around the globe, we must continue to be freedom's best friend.

We must stand firm for self-determination and democracy in Central America, including Nicaragua.

It is my strongly held conviction that when people are given the chance, they inevitably will choose a free press, freedom of worship, and certifiably free and fair elections.

We must strengthen the alliance of industrial democracies, as solid a force for peace as the world has ever known. This is an alliance forged by the power of our ideals, not the pettiness of our differences. So let us lift our sights to rise above fighting about beef hormones to building a better future, to move from protectionism to progress.

I have asked the Secretary of State to visit Europe next week and to consult with our allies on the wide range of challenges and opportunities we face together, including East-West relations. And I look forward to meeting with our NATO partners in the near future.

I, too, shall begin a trip shortly to the far reaches of the Pacific basin, where the winds of democracy are creating new hope, and the power of free markets is unleashing a new force.

When I served as our representative in China 14 or 15 years ago, few would have predicted the scope of the changes we have witnessed since then.

But in preparing for this trip, I was struck by something I came across from a Chinese writer, who was speaking of his country, decades ago, but his words speak to each of us in America tonight.

"Today," he said, "We are afraid of the simple words like goodness and mercy and kindness."

My friends, if we are to succeed as a nation, we must rediscover those words.

In just 3 days, we mark the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the man who saved our Union, and gave new meaning to the word opportunity. Lincoln once said:

> I hold that while man exists, it is his duty to improve not only his own condition, but to assist in ameliorating [that of] mankind.

It is this broader mission to which I call all Americans, because the definition of a successful life must include serving others.

To the young people of America, who sometimes feel left out, I ask you tonight to give us the benefit of your talent and energy through a new program called YES, for Youth Entering Service to America.

To those men and women in business, remember the ultimate end of your work: to make a better product, to create better lives. I ask you to plan for the longer term and avoid the temptation of quick and easy paper profits.

To the brave men and women who wear the uniform of the United States of America, thank you. Your calling is a high one: to be the defenders of freedom and the guarantors of liberty. And I want you to know that this Nation is grateful for your service.

To the farmers of America, we appreciate the bounty you provide. We will work with you to open foreign markets to American agricultural products.

To the parents of America, I ask you to get involved in your child's schooling. Check on their homework. Go to the school, meet the teachers, care about what is happening there. It is not only your child's future on the line, it is America's.

To kids in our cities, do not give up hope. Say "no" to drugs. Stay in school. And, yes, "keep hope alive."

To those 37 million Americans with some form of disability, you belong in the economic mainstream. We need your talents in America's work force. Disabled Americans must become full partners in America's opportunity society.

To the families of America watching tonight in your living rooms: Hold fast to your dreams, because ultimately America's future rests in your hands.

And to my friends in this Chamber, I ask your cooperation to keep America growing while cutting the deficit. That is only fair to those who now have no vote—the generations to come.

Let them look back and say that we had the foresight to understand that a time of peace and prosperity is not a time to rest, but a time to press forward, a time to invest in the future.

And let all Americans remember that no problem of human making is too great to be overcome by human ingenuity, human energy, and the untiring hope of the human spirit. I believe this. I would not have asked to be your President if I did not.

Tomorrow, the debate on the plan I have put forward begins. I ask the Congress to come forward with your own proposals. But let us not question each other's motives. Let us debate. Let us negotiate. But let us solve the problem.

Recalling anniversaries may not be my specialty in speeches, but tonight is one of some note. On February 9, 1941, just 48 years ago tonight, Sir Winston Churchill took to the airwaves during Britain's hour of peril.

He had received from President Roosevelt a hand-carried letter quoting Longfellow's famous poem:

> Sail on, O Ship of State!
> Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
> Humanity with all its fears,
> With all the hopes of future years,
> Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

Churchill responded on this night by radio broadcast to a nation at war, but he directed his words to Franklin Roosevelt. "We shall not fail or falter," he said. "We shall not weaken or tire. Give us the tools, and we will finish the job."

Tonight, almost a half century later, our peril may be less immediate, but the need for perserverance and clear-sighted fortitude is just as great.

Now, as then, there are those who say it cannot be done. There are voices who say that America's best days have passed. That we are bound by constraints, threatened by problems, surrounded by troubles which limit our ability to hope.

Well, tonight I remain full of hope. We Americans have only begun on our mission of goodness and greatness. And to those timid souls, I repeat the plea: Give us the tools; and we will do the job.

Thank you, God bless you, and God bless America.

At 9 o'clock and 56 minutes p.m., the President of the United States, accompanied by the committee of escort, retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Doorkeeper escorted the invited guests from the Chamber in the following order:

The members of the President's Cabinet.

The Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

The Ambassadors, Ministers, and chargé d'affaires of foreign governments.

JOINT SESSION DISSOLVED

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). The Chair declares the joint session of the two Houses now dissolved.

Accordingly, at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p.m., the joint session of the two Houses was dissolved.

The Members of the Senate retired to their Chamber.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT REFERRED TO THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE HOUSE ON THE STATE OF THE UNION

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BUILDING A BETTER AMERICA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 101-21)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby transmit a supplement to the Message I am delivering to the Joint Session of the Congress tonight. It is titled "Building a Better America," and it contains further description of the plans and proposals mentioned in the Message. I urge the Congress to give favorable consideration to these proposals and renew my invitation to the congressional leadership to work together to assure that America is united, strong, at peace, and fiscally sound.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1989.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1989

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 14, 101st Congress, the House stands adjourned until 12 noon, Tuesday, February 21, 1989.

Thereupon (at 10 o'clock and 7 minutes p.m.), pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 14, the House adjourned until Tuesday, February 21, 1989, at 12 noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

572. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a report of a violation of the Anti-Deficiency Act, which occurred in connection with funds available for grants in aid for airports for fiscal year 1986, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

573. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a copy of the annual inspection of the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home for fiscal year 1987, pursuant to 24 U.S.C. 59, 60; to the Committee on Armed Services.

574. A letter from the Director, Administration and Management, Office of the Secretary of Defense, transmitting a copy of the Navy's determination and findings indicating the necessity to exclude the clause concerning examination of records by the Comptroller General from a proposed contract with the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence for acquisition of a developmental forward looking infrared radar and support of three such units during trials, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2313(c); to the Committee on Armed Services.

575. A letter from the Assistant General Counsel, Department of Energy, transmitting a notice of meetings of the Industry Board to the International Energy Agency to be held in Paris, France on February 7, 1989; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

576. A letter from the Director of Legislative Affairs, Agency for International Development, transmitting the report of economic conditions prevailing in Portugal which may affect its ability to meet international debt obligations and stabilize its economy, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2346 note; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

577. A letter from the Director of Legislative Affairs, Agency for International Development, transmitting the report of economic conditions prevailing in Israel which may affect its ability to meet international debt obligations and stabilize its economy, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2346 note; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

578. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a report of those foreign military sales customers with approved cash flow financing in excess of $100 million as of October 1, 1988, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2765; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

579. A letter from the Comptroller General, transmitting a copy of his report for fiscal year 1988 on each instance a Federal agency did not fully implement recommendations made by the GAO in connection with a bid protest decided during the fiscal year, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 3554(e)(2); to the Committee on Government Operations.

580. A letter from the Chairman, Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, transmitting the Commission's 30th annual report of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 4275(e); to the Committee on Government Operations.

581. A letter from the Administrator, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, transmitting a report of actions taken to increase competition for contracts during fiscal year 1988, pursuant to U.S.C. 419; to the Committee on Government Operations.

582. A letter from the Acting Administrator, Veterans' Administration, transmitting a report of actions taken to increase competition for contracts during fiscal year 1988, pursuant to 41 U.S.C. 419; to the Committee on Government Operations.

583. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

584. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

585. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

586. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, transmitting a report regarding the economic policy and trade practices of each country with which the United States has an economic or trade relationship, pursuant to Public Law 100-418, section 2202 (102 Stat. 1327); jointly, to the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Ways and Means.

SENATE—Thursday, February 9, 1989

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 3, 1989)

The Senate met at 8:30 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN BREAUX, a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his: and he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding.—Daniel 2:20-21.

Eternal God, sovereign Lord of Heaven and Earth, what profound possibilities as the world in microcosm gathers this evening in the House Chamber. Make Thy presence felt as executive, legislative, and judicial branches join the diplomatic community, and the people participate through television.

Infuse this dramatic gathering with wisdom, truth, and justice. Sensitize us to our unity as humans, our frailty in the face of cosmic needs and the universal dependence of the global community upon Thee in this critical hour.

In the name of the Lord and for His glory. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, February 9, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN BREAUX, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BREAUX thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE FOLLOWING RECESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, I would like to briefly lay out the program following the recess period.

It appears now that there will be no legislation or nominations available for floor consideration on Tuesday, February 21. In view of this, it is my intention to ask consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday it be for a pro forma session only with no business conducted. We would then recess over to 12 noon on Wednesday for the reading of Washington's Address. Following the reading of the Address, the Senate would stand in recess for the two policy luncheons until 2:15 p.m. At that time, it is my hope that we could proceed to S. 20, the Whistleblower Protection Act. Should it be possible to schedule the bill for Wednesday, Senators should be on notice that a rollcall vote on final passage could occur later that afternoon.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, AND WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 21, the Senate meet in pro forma session only and that no business be conducted. I further ask unanimous consent that upon completion of the pro forma session the Senate stand in recess until 12 noon on Wednesday, February 22, and that the time of the two leaders be delayed to begin at 2:15 p.m. that day. I further ask unanimous consent that the reading of Washington's Farewell Address occur immediately following the prayer on Wednesday, February 22 and that upon its completion the Journal of Proceedings be approved to date and the Senate stand in recess until 2:15 p.m.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that three amendments numbered 3, 4, and 5, offered by Senator JOHNSTON, be printed as Senate amendments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATUS OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Senate has confirmed 11 of the President's nominees for key positions in the administration. When the Senate convenes on Tuesday, February 21, none of the remaining nominations will then be ready for floor consideration.

The White House has requested the Armed Services Committee to postpone the vote on the nomination of John G. Tower to be Secretary of Defense until the FBI has completed its investigation.

The hearings on the nomination of Louis W. Sullivan to be Secretary of Health and Human Resources have been delayed at the request of the White House. The Finance Committee hopes to schedule hearings on Dr. Sullivan's nomination during the week of February 21.

At the request of the White House and the nominee, the Judiciary Committee has announced that the hearings on the nomination of William J. Bennett to be Director of National Drug Control Policy will be held on March 1 and March 2.

No hearings have been scheduled on the nomination of James D. Watkins to be Secretary of Energy. The White House has requested this delay to permit the completion of necessary background materials.

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs has scheduled a hearing on Thursday, February 23, and a markup on Friday, February 24 on the nomination of Edward J. Derwinski to be the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. President, I now yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Republican leader is now recognized for 1 minute.

MEDICAID HOME AND COMMUNITY QUALITY SERVICE ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, yesterday my colleague, Senator CHAFEE, introduced the Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act of 1989, of which I am a cosponsor. I support this legislation because I endorse its goal of creating more opportunities for personal growth and independence for individuals with severe disabilities.

In recent years, the trend in care for people with severe disabilities in my own State of Kansas and across the Nation has shifted from institutions to home and community-based settings. These less restrictive environments have proven to be very effective in encouraging such individuals to realize their full potential and become integrated into community life. The Medicaid Home and Community Quality Services Act recognizes and promotes this trend.

While I support providing more noninstitutional options to individuals with severe disabilities, I also believe we must do what we can to ensure that quality care is given to people living in institutions. I expect that careful consideration will be given to this and other issues of concern to institutional residents and their families. What is important is that we give people options—including the option of an institution—and that we make sure that, whatever the setting, the services provided are appropriate and of high quality.

Mr. President, we all support providing greater opportunities to people with disabilities to become productive and independent members of our society. Increasing options for quality care will give such individuals more control over their own lives, and for this reason I believe that this legislation deserves consideration.

INF INSPECTORS HELP ARMENIAN CHILDREN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at 2 p.m. this afternoon First Lady Barbara Bush and Virginia's Senator JOHN WARNER were at Andrews Air Force Base to greet 37 young victims of the Armenian earthquake. These children desperately need modern medical attention, and they are going to get it in Charlottesville, VA, and five other American cities.

These Armenian children left their homeland aboard a U.S. Air Force C-141 aircraft which transported an American INF Treaty inspection team to the Soviet Union. Their arrival here is the result of the compassion, cooperation, and quick thinking of many Americans.

In the forefront was Virginia's Senator JOHN WARNER.

Project Hope President Dr. William Walsh recognized America's opportunity to help these children, if only he could get them here. He turned to JOHN WARNER for help. Senator WARNER appealed to Acting Secretary of Defense Taft and the Military Airlift Command went to work.

WARNER, Taft, and MAC searched for the quickest means available, and that turned out to be a MAC plane which was already in the Soviet Union to deliver an INF inspection team. So General LaJoie and his inspectors lent a hand too.

Meanwhile, Project Hope arranged free medical care at some of America's leading hospitals like the Kluge Children's Rehabilitation Center at the University of Virginia.

I know our young Armenian guests will also get a warm welcome in Charlottesville, Chicago, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Boston, and Syracuse.

For these 37 Armenian children this story will have a happy ending because of Project Hope, the Military Airlift Command, the onsite inspection agency, doctors, hospitals, and caring people in six cities—and, let us not forget those people like Dr. Walsh and Senator WARNER who helped put it all together.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the majority leader seek further recognition?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I believe the Chair will now announce morning business for 1 minute to allow for the introduction of bills.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to exceed 1 minute.
